NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29 —The statement of public debt for the month of December will show an increase of between two and three millions of dollars.

It has been published erroneously that the debt has been decreased about eight millions.

The internal revenue receipts have been about the average at this season, but the customs receipts have fallen off slightly.

The War Department expenses, owing to the Indian difficulties, have largely increased.

Announcment is made that the President will, at an early day after Congress assembles, veto the Southern States militia bill. There is no authority for any such statement, and the President has not received notice of the passage of such a bill.

The party given by the children of the President to night was a magnificent affair; about three hundred children were present, attired in gay and brilliant costumes; many of the parents of the invited children were present, beside notables who were friends of the President's family. Among the guests were several members of the cabinet—Randall, Welles, Schofield and Browning, ex-Attorney General Stanbery, Admiral Radford, a few Senators and Representatives, the wives and ladies of the several families of these, and a number of private citizens.

This was the first juvenile party ever given at the executive mansion, and such was the approbation with which the idea was received that it is believed that there will be a recurrence of such scenes from time to time hereafter.

The order of the President's reception on New Year day is as follows: At eleven o'clock A. M the President will receive the members of the cabinet and foreign ministers, the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, Senators and Representatives in Congress, the judges of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and of the Court of Claims; at half past eleven o'clock A. M. the officers of the army and navy and marine corps will be received; at eleven o'clock and forty-five minutes, the Associated Soldiers of the War of 1812, and members of the Oldest Inhabitants' Association of the District of Columbia will be received

The reception of citizens will commence at twelve M. and will terminate at two o'clock.—New Orleans Times.

Reports are rife in Washington of a breach between General Grant and a portion of the Radical members of Congress, growing out of the natural desire of the President elect to have the tenure-of-office act repealed, and the struggle against the repeal on the part of the friends of the Radical office holders, to protect whom against the President was the true intent and meaning of the act. It is stated that General Grant, with his own military month, has demanded the repeal of the act. Unlike his great military predecessor in the Presidency he has a multitude of friends to reward, and not a few enemies to punish, but the tenure act bars the way both to his beneficence and to his resentment. As the whole meaning of Radicalism may be summed up in the expressive formula "tenure-of-office," and as everybody in the party of any note either hopes to get an office or wants to keep an office, a difference on a point which involves the whole question of keeping and getting office would be sure to lead to an irreparable breach between the "ins," represented by the restiff Congressmen, and the "outs," under the "general commanding our armies." A sort of compromise between them is proposed, by which Congress is to pass the repealing bill, but too late for it to become a law in case President Johnson declines to act on it, a course of action on his part which is taken for granted. It is quite probable that when the Radical leaders chose Grant they did not give him credit for much perspicacity, but they must consider him little better than an idiot if they presume that he can be deluded by so transparent a pretense. New Orleans Crescent.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.—SENATOR MORTON'S BILL.

The Radical Senator from Indiana has introduced a bill to compel the government and individuals to resume specie payments within a fixed time, and has advocated its adoption in a speech of considerable length and some ability. The main features of his plan are these:

1. That the government shall begin straightway to hoard all the gold that it may receive, in order to create a specie fund, in anticipation of the resumption of specie payments.

2. That the government shall, on the 1st day of July, 1870, resume specie payments, and thereafter pay in coin all its notes that may be presented for redemption.

3. That the National Banks shall, on and after July 1, 1870, retain in their vaults all the coin which they may receive as interest on their government bonds, so as to create a specie reserve.

4. That the National Banks shall resume specie payments on the 1st day of January, 1872.

5. That the United States notes shall cease to be legal tender after January 1, 1872, but shall be still receivable in payment of dues to the government.

6 That the Secretary of the Treasury may issue bonds wherewith to purchase the specie, with which to enable the government to resume specie payments on the 1st of January, 1870.

The avowed object of Senator Morton, in introducing this bill, is to put an end to those fluctuations in the value of currency which are so disastrously affecting the business of the country. He does not exaggerate their effect when he says that

"The prices of provisions, goods and labor change from month to month. Every branch of legitimate business, which depends upon small but regular profits, is greatly impaired with such fluctuation in the value of the currency, in the cost of living, in the profits of business and the value of everything that enters into trade, together with the painful uncertainty that hangs over the whole financial policy of the country. Men hesitate to engage in new enterprises, or to make new investments in business. The prudent capitalist is standing still, awaiting the course of events and the establishment of some definite financial policy by which he can judge of the future. It is impossible to calculate the aggregate loss to the country even in one year by this state of things, or to estimate the suffering and destitution produced by this stagnation of business and the want of employment for labor."—New York News

PARIS, Dec. 29 —Details of the conference have been settled. The session commences Saturday night.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Decem. 29 —The Porte has issued a circular refusing to participate in the projected conference upon the Cretan question.

LONDON, Dec. 29 —The Russian government denies authorizing Grecian merchant vessels to bear the Russian flag for any purpose whatever.

PARIS, Dec. 29.—A collision is reported as having occurred between the Greeks and the Turks, on Turkish soil, in which the former were victorious.

MADRID, Dec. 29.—General Cabello has been ordered to take troops to the provinces of Seville and Grenada, to prevent trouble. The country, however, is entirely quiet. The government has contracted a loan with Erlanger.

PARIS, Dec. 29.—The tribunals have forbidden the new government organ to use the title of Moniteur.

FLORENCE, Dec. 29.—Garibaldi, in a letter published, formally declines the commission tendered by the Greek government in view of threatened war.

LIVERPOOL, Dec 29.—Afternoon.—Cotton market firm—uplands 10¾d.; Orleans 11d.

HAVRE, Decem. 29.—Afternoon.—Cotton market buoyant—tres ordinaire on the spot 1.24.

MONTGOMERY, Dec. 30.—Legislature adjourns sine die to-morrow. The next session is to commence in July next. The business of both houses has been confined for the past week to local matters. A sensation was attempted to-day over the killing of Page, a member from Washington county. Investigation proved that he was killed in Mississippi, and consequently the matter was dropped. Page left here for Washington county before Christmas, and was killed a day or two ago.

Cotton on the Arkansas river is being lost. The negroes are all in the militia. Watson's negro militia are at Marion, ten miles from here, re-enacting the scenes at Augusta. They have arrested all prominent citizens, and helped themselves to the contents of stores and shops. Fearing an attack, they were fortifying this afternoon.

MADRID, Dec. 30.—The government will dispatch ten thousand troops for Cuba during the month of January.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 29.—Great preparations are progressing in the arsenals on account of threatened war. Transports with supplies have been sent to Hobart Pasha's fleet.

LONDON, Dec. 30. — Parliament met to-day. The new ministers were sworn in, writs issued for elections to fill vacancies, and adjourned till February 16.

Roverdy Johnson has no doubt of the ratification by the Senate of the naturalization treaty.

GEORGIA.

Georgia is one of the States which has been reconstructed by Congress. Its constitution was adopted by a convention which was assembled by the military commander of that district. That convention was elected by the negroes and such of the white citizens of Georgia as were permitted to vote. The convention frequently advised with General Meade, and was enlightened by his experience and great political wisdom, as well as protected by his sword. The results of its, and his labors, was a constitution which established a State government. That constitution was approved by Thad. Stevens and other Radical leaders; and, through their influence, was adopted by the votes of the Georgia negroes and General Meade's manipulation of the returns. Under it an election, conducted by the United States soldiery, was held, and Congressmen, State officers and a State Legislature chosen. An express agent, by the name of Bullock, was elected Governor. He was not only a carpet bagger, but a dyed-in-the-wool Radical. The Legislature consisted of negroes and white men. A majority of the members were Radicals. They elected two very decent men to the Senate of the United States. The Congressmen presented themselves at Washington with their constitution. It was approved and confirmed by Congress, and Georgia was declared to be reconstructed and entitled to all the rights of a State. This was done on the 25th of June, 1868; and since that time people have believed that Georgia was as much a State of the Union as New York, and so she has been, and is.

But Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, has introduced a bill to repeal the act of June 25, and to expel Georgia from the Union. He assigns his reason, for the proposed legislation, namely: "That the Legislature of Georgia has violated the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and so made itself liable to expulsion from the Union."

This extraordinary doctrine seems to commend itself to the Radicals. But we cannot believe that it will be sanctioned by Congress, even by that constitution defying Congress which is now in session. It is simply monstrous. Congress might just as well exclude New York from the Union, upon a similar pretext, that the Legislature of this State had enacted some unconstitutional law. The Constitution provides the means for testing the constitutionality of a State law. It submits the question to the Supreme Court of the United States. It never has been pretended before that Congress could try such a question, or punish a State for a violation of the Constitution by expelling it from the Union.

It seems to us that this bill of Senator Edmunds means more than is apparent on its face. It may be intended to establish the right of Congress to regulate the legislation of the several States, to revise their laws, and to compel them to conform to the will of the central government in all things. The Radical leaders are manifestly resolved to do all they can to bring about such a state of things, and to convert the government into a centralized despotism, through which the moneyed classes may rule the country for their own benefit. We recognize the power of money, and know how corrupt some Congresses are; but we have an abiding faith in the good sense and power of the people, and believe that these men, who are seeking to use the government for their own selfish purposes, will yet be confounded.—New York News.

Close Communion.—Giving the Reasons.

A late number of the Tennessee Baptist contains an earnest editorial arguing against the interchange of Baptist ministers with the ministers of other denominations. "Pulpits," says the editor, "should be as close as the Lord's Supper. Who is so blind that he cannot see?" In response to this question the Examiner and Chronicle (Baptist organ) of this city, in a leading editorial, answers:

"We are that blind man. We cannot see it. We deny the right of the Pedobaptist to come to the Lord's table because we believe the Lord designed baptism to be a prerequisite to communion, and because we conscientiously believe that unconscious infants cannot, by any process, be baptized; and that any thing less, any thing other than the immersion of a believer in water, in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, is not Christian baptism. But we take this position in no glow of savage exultation. We believe our Pedobaptist brethren to be, in their individual relations to the Master, every whit as good as ourselves. Hence we delight to recognize them as Christians by interchange of pulpits, by cordial co operation in every good word and work—by everything, in fact, save that one thing which we believe our Lord to have inhibited. There, we trust, we are stiff enough even for the Baptists of Tennessee; but we see no occasion, no divine warrant, for the position which they are inclined to take respecting the exchange of pulpits."

Of course we are quite grateful to our brother editor of the Examiner and Chronicle for coming to the defense of even the partial fraternization shown by the Baptist Church toward other denominations. We are glad to be recognized in our "individual relation" as Christians, "by interchange of pulpits, and by cordial co-operation in every good word and work—by everything, in fact, save that one thing," of communion at the Lord's table. May the time come when that "one thing" (so unseemly and, as we think, so unworthy of the Baptist Church) shall no longer be a bar to the interchange of the largest courtesies and the utmost fraternization between the leading evangelical denominations.

It will be noted in the paragraph quoted above that the "immersion of a believer in water, in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost," is indicated as the only prerequisite to communion. We find, however, on the same editorial page of the Examiner and Chronicle, two articles from the pens of correspondents, which (without a single word of dissent from the editor) mention with special emphasis another and, as we suppose, the real reason for shutting the communion doors against other churches. The writer of one of these says:

"The present restriction of the privileges of the Lord's Supper as administered in Baptist Churches to members of those churches, is indefensible on the single ground that baptism on profession of faith is prerequisite to communion. What shall we say to immersed open communionists, members often of our congregations, in justification of their exclusion from this ordinance? If believers' baptism alone qualifies for participation of the Supper, we are bound by every consideration of honor and consistency to open our doors to all immersed believers. But this is not the custom of our churches; and it follows that, in an argument with an intelligent opponent, we are finally forced to the position which, if tenable, should have been taken at the outset, namely: 1. The Lord's Supper is a church ordinance designed exclusively for church members. 2 Baptist Churches are the only Gospel churches; therefore, 3. Only members of Baptist Churches are entitled to the privileges of the Supper."

The other writer alluded to closes his argument thus:

"It follows that the baptized have no right to the Lord's table unless they have been added to the church—that is, unless they have church membership. Their baptism cannot, of itself, give the right. The most that can be said of it is, that it confers an inchoate right which church membership alone can make perfect. It follows that baptized persons who are without church membership ought not to come to the Lord's table. There are more of such persons than we are apt to suppose. Some Baptist preachers have a loose way of baptizing those who desire baptism, but with no view to church membership. It follows that baptized persons who are in Pedobaptist organizations cannot through courtesy, to say nothing of right, be invited by Baptists to the Lord's Supper. They have not the church membership; they do not belong to a loyal constituency. No one who believes, as every Baptist does, that 'a church of Christ is a congregation of baptized believers,' etc., can consider a Pedobaptist organization a church in the New Testament sense of the word. Hence, the persons referred to, though they may have been baptized by Baptist ministers, are without the church membership, which is in all cases a prerequisite to the Lord's Supper."

In plain language, our Baptist friends specify and insist on these two prerequisites to admission to the communion table: First, that the believer be immersed by a Baptist minister; and, second, that he become a member of the Baptist Church. A few years ago a Methodist ministerial friend of ours was present at a Baptist communion season. The officiating deacons, in distributing the elements, passed by him without offering them to him, knowing that he was not a member of the Baptist Church. On the return of the deacons to the table the presiding minister inquired if any one had been passed, and requested any one thus omitted to rise up. Our friend arose. The following dialogue ensued: "But you have not been baptized?" "Excuse me, sir; I have been baptized." "Were you immersed?" "I was." "By a Baptist minister?" "I was." "But you are not a member of the Baptist Church." "Ah!" said our friend, and sat down.—New York Christian Advocate.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

It was our good fortune to worship on Thanksgiving day with our brethren at McKendree. The pastor, Dr. Young, delivered an eloquent and appropriate discourse—a few paragraphs of which, of peculiar historical interest, he has kindly furnished, at our request, for the readers of the Advocate It concerns the first colonists of our country:

Northern writers have furnished our school books and histories long enough. They have related the story of the Pilgrim Fathers with such great length and nice particularity that many of our children think that the Plymouth colony was not only first in point of importance, but first in point of time Such is not the fact. It is our duty to correct the error. Virtue is not a commodity; but if it were, we do not think the Puritans used it all up. There is some left.

The English made a permanent settlement at Jamestown, Virginia, in 1607. The Dutch settled on the spot where New York now stands in 1610; and a Dutch governor presided over this settlement in 1614. The Puritans landed on Plymouth Rock just as the year 1620 expired. So the Jamestown colony was on the soil of the New World thirteen years before the Plymouth.

"But the settlers in Virginia had no religion;" so the New England historians would have us to believe. Because the Pilgrim Fathers came over for "freedom to worship God," they seek to leave the impression that the Jamestown colonists came over to worship no God at all. The truth of history reverses this impression.

Even in the "Articles, Instructions and Orders" of the charter, granted by James I. for the settling of Virginia, provision was made for the due carrying out of that which is the highest end of every Christian colony. For it is expressly ordered that, "The said presidents, councils and ministers should provide that the true word and service of God be preached, planted and used according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of England, not only in the said colonies, but also as much as might be amongst the savages bordering upon them;" and "That all persons should kindly treat the savage and heathen people in those parts, and use all proper means to draw them to the true service and knowledge of God."

The Plymouth colony had no chaplain. Their pastor, the Rev. John Robinson, remained in Holland. The Jamestown colonists brought over their chaplain, the Rev. Robert Hunt. This pious clergyman, with the zeal and earnestness of apostolic times, accompanied the first expedition. And he had the joy of administering the Lord's Supper to the united company, on the 14th of May, 1607, the day after their first landing. Here, on a peninsula, upon the northern shore of James river, was sown the first good seed of those Englishmen, who were, in after years, to grow and multiply into the great and numerous American people. It was an omen for good, that almost the first act on reaching land was to offer unto God this appointed "sacrifice of prayer and thanksgiving." The first house completed by the Jamestown colony was "the church and temple of the rising settlement."

Hunt was succeeded by the Rev. Mr. Whitaker, a son of the celebrated master of St. John's College, Cambridge. As early as 1613 he was established "in a handsome church." With the name of Whitaker is joined the romantic story of the first Indian convert, Pocahontas. In the year 1613 she made a profession of faith in Christ, and was baptized by Mr. Whitaker. The font used on the occasion was hewn from the trunk of a tree.

It is related of Lord Delaware, one of the early governors of the Jamestown colony, that on the morning after his arrival he began his administration with religious exercises; after which he caused his commission to be read. He made it the first business of each day to assemble early in the morning in their "little church, which was kept trimmed with the wild flowers of the country," and there to invoke the presence and blessing of God; after which they repaired to their daily labors.

In the year 1620, the year when the Puritans of New England landed, this Virginia colony numbered one thousand eight hundred and sixty souls. These were divided into eleven parishes, and served by five ministers of the Gospel.

The quill-drivers of the North have taken great pleasure in stigmatizing the Jamestown colonists as "vagabond gentlemen," "rakes and libertines," etc. We read these epithets and smile—like the English nobleman does when he reads that his Norman ancestors of 1066 were "a fleet-load of thieves and pirates." For, from that little Jamestown colony descended the George Washingtons, and Patrick Henrys, and John Marshals, and Henry Clays and Robert E. Lees, and the long list of patriots, and statesmen, and jurists, and generals, and scholars and Christians, that have adorned our Southern society, and made it illustrious forever.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

A DANISH HYMN.

"The Hymns of Denmark," translated by Gilbert Tait, and just published by Strahan & Co., in London, contains the following, by Zetlitz:

THE ETERNITY OF GOD.

Lovely is earth, in gladness opulent,
And heaven's firmament is strong;
They as a garment shall wax old, be rent,
Shall perish, though their reign be long.
He who from nothing called them by his nod,
Remains the same, is the eternal God.

Ere time arose, and ere the regal sun
To world on world gave life and light—
Ere man sprang forth to see what God hath done,
And glorify his love and might—
Ere the rapt seraph grandly breathed God's praise,
He lived, the Lord of everlasting days.

If all things, in the whirl of fiercest ire,
Were wildly trampled, torn and crushed;
If the whole universe, in gulfs of fire,
To hideous ruin madly rushed;
If nature, sweetest, noblest, were to die,
God still would be his own eternity.

Rises the sun and shines benigh, goes down;
Day chaseth night, night chaseth day;
Earth pours her treasures, wears her gorgeous crown;
Then treasures, crown, alike decay.
What is immensity but change immense?
Yet varies not God's being, high, intense.

Yea, God, thou art immutable; and thou
Defiest death, and scornest time;
Never shall be my hope less bright than now,
For its foundation is sublime.
Father, thou hast been our Redeemer great,
And thou wilt be our God compassionate.

Then let all earthly gladness fade, depart,
And let all earthly hopes grow dim;
Let from my lips the cry of anguish dart,
And let my eyes in sorrow swim;
In joy, affliction's cry and tear shall end;
Thou, God, consolest—thou, immortal Friend!

LETTERS FROM TWO CHINESE BOYS.

Mr. Editor: Brother Lambuth, in China, requests that the following letters from Charles K. Marshall, or Sir Whoa, and John R. Lambuth, or Nebu, to him should be published. These were orphan boys, taken by Brother and Sister Lambuth into their family about twelve years ago. They were little ignorant heathens then. But these letters show that the efforts to educate and Christianize them have not been in vain. I think these letters a good argument in favor of his proposed orphan school. Let all the Sunday school children think of it, and then send us something for that school. If ten Chinese children, by our small contributions, may be rescued from heathenism, educated, Christianized and sent out to work among their countrymen as missionaries, we will have great cause for rejoicing in heaven. Then this work will roll on till the end of time! Heaven will be sweeter to us for having done good in the world. H. H. Montgomery.

Lebanon, Tenn., July 23, 1868.

Rev. J. W. Lambuth—My Dear Friend: I received your letter of May 25, and was glad to hear from you once more. I have written to you two or three times, but I suppose you did not get my letters. I thought you had forgotten me; but still you write me. You ask me if I have the same desire to return to China as a missionary among my own people. Yes, sir; I have thought so for years past. I am very anxious to be a missionary among my own people; but there is no chance for me to get any funds to go to China with. But I am going.—You may look out for me, if I have my health. About two weeks before I received your letter I went down to Nashville to see Bishop McTyeire on the subject—to see if the board would send me back to China as a missionary. But the bishop said: "The board is not able to do it now, but will in two or three years." I feel it to be my duty to do all the good I can for God and man, and to do all the good I can as a missionary; and why should I have any other feeling? I am indebted to God for all his kindness to me in days past. I am indebted to you for your kind care, and also to Mrs. Lambuth for her kindness, and for all her trouble with us in America. I know I was a trouble, and shall never be able to repay you. But there is One who can and will repay you, and you shall reap a great reward in heaven.

But I will try to come to China so soon as I have money enough. You may look out for me soon. The times in this country are hard, and there is but little money in the country. I feel that I am alone in the world, and I am determined to do better or worse. Of course I want to do better, and do all the good I can. I hope you will forgive me for such an expression. I feel it to be my duty to come to China as a missionary, to do all I can for the salvation of men. That is the right spirit for a Christian. I have been in this country about eight years, and lived in Christian families, and know what my duty is. I have prayed to God for help, and I hope you will help me. John says he is not going to China any more, but will remain in this country and make a living. You will not have time to write any more to me. Pray for me. Give my best love to all the family, and my kind regards to all my Chinese friends, and tell them I will be there soon. I remain, your's truly and sincerely,

Charles K. Marshall,
Or Sir Whoa.

Lebanon, Tenn., Aug. 5, 1868.

Rev. J. W. Lambuth—Dear Friend: Nothing affords me greater pleasure than to read your kind letter of May 25, filled, as it is, with sacred love for that holy cause. It has been quite a long time since I heard from you. I had about come to the conclusion that you had certainly forgotten that there was such a boy in existence named after your revered father. Do not think my heart is composed of steel, or any other obdurate substance, as to allow you to think I have forgotten you or Mrs. Lambuth. My noblest friends! how can I forget those who have been more to me than a father or mother?—especially Mrs. L. Who could have done more for me than you? The kindness you have shown me I cannot repay. But there is One who takes cognizance of the mystic hearts of many, and takes notice even if a sparrow falls to the ground. He will repay. I have concluded never to return to China, either as a missionary or otherwise. I have passed many hours in solitude, thinking of my own native land, in timorous condition, before the eyes of a furious and insulted God; but feel no inclination to go back. May God speed your noble efforts in that high and noble mission of evangelizing and ameliorating the condition of that benighted and superstitious race.

There is no word to express the nobleness and greatness of your philanthropic heart, for you have left all that is dear to you in this world and have gone to a land of heathenism, to be among strangers. May your name finally be enrolled upon the immortalized list of the saints of our Saviour.

Friend, I hope you do not think I am a devotee to the god of wealth. God forbid that I should be one of them!

Dr. Kelly and Mrs. Kelly—his mother—are my true friends.—They are very kind to me. May God bless them, and make their lives long and happy.

I think Charles has determined to start for China this autumn. He is quite well, and I hope he will do much good there.

I am quite well and busy. I devote all my spare time to reading and studying. I intend—though my future path may be rugged and mountainous—to make a man of myself, or die in the attempt. Life is momentous! But above all, I want to be a Christian!

I would like to write you a long, long letter, but time does not permit. Give my kind love to all the family, and to all Chinese friends. I hope you will excuse the roughness of this letter, for it was written in a hurry. It is late, and I must be up early in the morning. Write soon.

I remain, your's sincerely,

John R. Lambuth.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION, PRESENTED TO THE MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE, GREENVILLE, ALABAMA, DECEMBER 9-16, 1868.

NUMBER ONE.

At the recent session of the Montgomery Conference the following report on Education was presented by the Rev. George W. F. Price, president of Tuskegee Female College, chairman of the committee:

The eighteenth century produced in England two extraordinary men, moving in widely different spheres of life, actuated by sentiments and controlled by principles drawn from widely different sources, yet each destined to wield an influence at once potent, illustrious and permanent. The unreflecting reader of English history may smile at the bare mention of Edmund Burke and John Wesley in immediate juxtaposition. The thoughtful student, however, will discover much in the results of their lives to warrant a brief parallelism between these great men. Placed providentially, as he was, upon the theater of political events, at a period of extraordinary significance in the world's history, the fertile intellect of Burke grasped with singular clearness and profundity the principles of statesmanship in their broadest possible application. With prophetic insight he discovered the tendencies and anticipated the issues of the most complicated and delicate political movements. In his published sentiments and opinions are to be found the germs of those conservative maxims of public policy which have since given definite shape to the statesmanship of the British government. His writings furnish the common mine of inexhaustible political wealth, from which subsequent writers and thinkers have drawn, often without acknowledgment, often, perhaps, in entire unconsciousness of the real sources of their inspiration.

Contemporary with the illustrious Burke, but moving in a sphere so widely sundered from the scene of political agitation, lived and labored the celebrated founder of Methodism. Coming upon the stage of life at an era when true religion was almost extinct in the British realm, Wesley was led by the spirit of God to undertake the gigantic task of rescuing a nation from heathenism, and of spreading Scriptural holiness over all lands. His intellect literally teemed with plans of benevolence. His spirit was influenced by that restless zeal for God which we attribute to those seraphic natures that live nearest to the throbbing heart of infinite love. Wesley's religious movements awakened the dormant spirit of piety in Britain, quickened the Established Church, vitalized every form of dissenting worship, and revived in all their blessed efficiency the doctrines of the Gospel.

Great and beneficent, however, as were these results, Wesley's labors were not restricted to the channel of direct religious influence. Seizing the central idea of the regenerating power of Christianity, he recognized the momentous truth that religious training, in order to secure its highest results, should include the culture and elevation of man's intellectual nature, as well as the purification of his spiritual being. We find him acting upon this enlarged view with his accustomed energy and persistency. At an early stage of his labors he became enlisted in the founding of schools for the training of young men. In 1739, passing through Kingswood, he laid the corner stone of a charity school for the grateful colliers, and kneeling in their midst prayed that the gates of hell might not prevail against it. At the first Wesleyan Conference, in 1744, it was formally asked: "Can we have a seminary for laborers?" Wesley earnestly advocated popular education under the patronage of the church. His acute intellect eagerly embraced the plan of reaching the minds of the masses through the agency of brief and pungent tracts. In this aspect of the case, he may be said to have originated the idea of modern cheap literature. Amidst abundant and increasing labors he found time to compose treatises for the use of schools. Had science, in Wesley's day, been advanced to its present exalted range of discovery, it is safe to affirm that he would have mastered its principles, and would have simplified its facts to the level of popular apprehension. If Burke's mind was the prolific seed-bed of political principles, which have given shape and coloring to the statesmanship of Europe and America, it is no rash assertion that Wesley's vigorous intellect was the affluent treasury from which have been drawn, often without grateful recognition, lavish stores of religious wisdom, not only for the furtherance of personal piety, but for the organization of aggressive Christian communities, and for the promotion of popular enlightenment. And thus to these illustrious contemporaries, so unlike in character and position, in theater of action and scope of endeavor, in intellectual constitution and products of mental energy, continue through the medium of English civilization and of Protestant Christianity, to mold the destinies of the world.

Following the example of Wesley, to an incidental feature of her economy has Methodism given greater prominence than to the promotion of education. And this is wholly legitimate. Not to be a friend of education is not to be a Wesleyan.—He who has no zeal for learning has not the spirit of the founder, "some time fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford." Upon him who does not advocate liberal intellectual culture, the mantle of Wesley has not fallen. Wherever Methodism has gone in the spirit of its great apostle, education under the guardianship of religion has followed. The rude log meeting house in the wilderness has gradually given way to the neat academy, in its turn to be superseded by the well organized collegiate institution, vitalized by the breath of the church. Upon the shrine of sanctified learning have the costliest donations of noble-hearted Methodists been laid, with a willingness that finds its archetype alone in the joyful alacrity with which the people of Israel offered their treasures of gold and silver to be fashioned into divinely-ordained vessels of the sanctuary. From the scanty pittance of an itinerant service have Methodist preachers, a thousand times over, appropriated to the same great cause the slender contributions of pious souls with a thankfulness that filled their eyes with tears, and a hopefulness that filled their hearts with melody unto the Lord. To-day it is, we believe, the proud distinction of Methodism to have originated, built and equipped more institutions of learning, within a briefer period, than all other bodies of evangelical Christians combined. To the cause of education she has consecrated the intellects of her master-spirits. In the halls of her colleges have been heard the voices of her Fiskes and her Olins, her Bascoms and her Paines, her Pierces and her Wightmans, while from personal contact with these mighty champions of the truth, has gone forth, "panoplied in the armor of a pure intent," many a stripling David to smite the uncircumcised Philistine in the host of his blatant blasphemy.

Ours is, therefore, brethren beloved, no new theme. We speak as unto wise men, who have "an unction of the Holy One," instructed of the Lord. Suffer the word of exhortation.

We are in a crisis in affairs. Our country lies before us desolated, rived, peeled. From the general wreck our educational institutions have come forth sadly shattered. Goodly endowments, built upon the noble charities of devout souls, have melted away when within our very grasp. When now there is the loudest demand for education we have the slenderest means to meet it. Private fortunes have been swept away. Princely incomes have dwindled to sordid penury. Parents weep in secret over the sad necessity that consigns their children to helpless illiteracy. The crowds that once thronged our schools and colleges, no longer frequent those noble seminaries of learning and of piety. The godly men who have given their best years to the humble toil of the class-room languish, in common with the itinerant brethren, upon insufficient pay. Some of them, after struggles of no ordinary character, have reluctantly abandoned positions of honor in our leading institutions, having eaten up the little savings of more prosperous seasons, in the vain effort to sustain their cherished schools. What is the duty of the church in this day of tribulation? Shall she yield to the despairing sentiments which a worldly infidelity suggests? Shall she lie supinely prostrate in the shadow of this mighty sorrow, bemoaning her grievous case, as the Jews are said piteously to lament, amidst the dust of their ruined city, by the Wall of Wailing, in stricken Jerusalem? Such was not the spirit of the Master, who began his mighty work of human redemption alone and unattended amidst a gainsaying generation. Such was not the temper of Luther, who would go to Worms though every tile upon the house-tops were a devil. Such was not the spirit of the early Methodist preachers, upon whom a hooting rabble trampled; that, as they blasphemously declared, they might "stamp the Holy Ghost out of them." Nay, brethren, no sentiments of despondency must be permitted to paralyze our efforts in the cause of the higher Christian education. The greater the needs of the time, the more strenuous must be our exertions. Young men are found in every part of our work whose education was interrupted by the war, whose parents were ruined in fortune by its results, who yet have energy, industry and a noble ambition. Such men would with eagerness embrace any opening that promises the opportunities of liberal education. Seek out such cases, direct them to our college at Auburn, assist to put them in correspondence with its officers. Encourage them to undertake a college course, upon those principles of sobriety, economy and industry which the institution so happily fosters. You will thus diffuse the blessings of education, conducted under the sanction of the religious views which you labor to disseminate. You will thus fill the walks of professional life with cultivated men, who have grown up under the genial influences of sanctified learning, and who have been taught to love and to cherish the peculiar system which has conferred upon them this excellent training. Thus will you give the perpetuity of educated intellect and the stability of sound religious convictions to the organization which you believe so well adapted to a progressive evangelism. Thus will you provide the cheapest form of endowment for the institutions, founded in your prayers and supported by your alms deeds, which you have done.

Money for Brother Lambuth in China.

Mr. Editor: In June last I had $263 currency converted into a bill of exchange and sent to Bro. Lambuth; in July $70 15 was sent him. In his letter dated October 12, 1868, he acknowledges the receipt of both bills.

I now send $161, making $494.15 raised for his special benefit in the Mississippi Conference for the year 1868.

I have on hand a lot of jewelry to dispose of for the same cause.

As the Mississippi Conference directed that all moneys raised for foreign missions should be sent to me for Brother Lambuth, unless the donors directed otherwise, and that collections for missions should be taken in the early part of the year—am not positive as to the month—and in October also, I hope the brethren will remember Brother Lambuth in the early part of the year, as he needs our assistance. Send your amounts to me at Canton, Mississippi.

H. H. Montgomery,
Special Treasurer.

ST. LOUIS CORRESPONDENCE.

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 15, 1868.

Mr. Editor: The weekly visits of the Advocate are cheering to me in this far-off home. The day of its coming is looked for anxiously. It seems like the visit of an old, true and tried friend. I don't understand how any one can get along without such a paper. The Advocate published here is a most excellent paper. I hope to put it into every family belonging to my congregation. The official board of the church I serve have placed one hundred copies at my disposal, to be distributed in the congregation, which, in addition to those already taken, will meet the demand. If such a course was generally adopted, the circulation and usefulness of our church papers might be increased fourfold in a few weeks. The pastors would find themselves greatly helped, and the spiritual and financial interests of the church wonderfully improved.

We are looking for "refreshing times from the presence of the Lord" during this winter. Already the drops begin to fall.—Some are converted almost every week, and many are being added to the church. The pastors here are all diligently and faithfully at work.

May the great Head of the Church send his blessings upon you in your abundant labor, and greatly prosper the Advocate.

Your's truly,

Clinton.

A WORD IN SEASON.

Some of our friends may consider it impertinent to caution the readers of the Christian Advocate from improper indulgence during the Christmas holidays; but we can assure them we are performing no work of supererogation in so doing. It is saddening to reflect that many who profess and call themselves Christians, observe this great Christian festival as if it were the feast of Saturn, which the Roman pagans celebrated at this season of the year. Saturnalian licentiousness befitted the heathen system of "abominable idolatries"—but is it in keeping with the glorious Gospel of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ, whose advent we now commemorate? We see clearly enough why Christmas should not be a fast—a time to afflict our souls—why it should be a season of joy and gratitude, of gifts to children and special kindness to the poor; but why it should be made an occasion of sensual gratification, is past our comprehension. We warn our lady friends against the presentation of the "Christmas glass" to their visitors. Thousands have entered upon the inclined plane, which took them down to the chambers of death, by such means as this. We fear that even "eggnog" is frequently taken more for what is drunk than for what is eaten; and there is sometimes enough of the former to turn the heads of women and children—not to say of men—who take it without scruple. As to wine—not to speak of stronger beverages—we advise you to refrain from it, and the rather, as the compounds which usually go under its name, are no better—sometimes they are worse—than "Bourbon" itself. We are amazed at the folly of mothers, sisters, wives, and those who expect to sustain this most intimate relation to the other sex, in setting these temptations before them. Are they insane? Do they want their sons, and brothers, and husbands, to become sots? to go to the dogs and then to the devil? Look around you and see how many of your friends and neighbors are irrecoverably lost, conquered by this giant evil. They can remember when at a Christmas party—or a wedding party, or a wake—they took the ruby glass from the hands of beauty, wreathed with her smiles, little dreaming that they were taking to their bosom the adder that would sting them to death! Yet, so it was. They have received the fatal sting, and the most sanguine of their friends can scarcely entertain the hope that they will not follow on in the wake of the millions who have preceded them in the short and rapid race to the drunkard's grave and the drunkard's hell!—Nashville Christian Advocate.

WHAT RABBI JEHOSHA SAID.

Rabbi Jehosha used to say
That God made angels every day,
Perfect as Michael and the rest
First brooded in creation's nest,
Whose only office was to cry
"Hosanna!" once, and then to die;
Or, rather, with life's essence blent,
To be led home from banishment.

Rabbi Jehosha had the skill
To know that heaven is in God's will;
And doing that, though for a space
One heart beat long, may win a grace
As full of grandeur and of glow
As Princes of the Chariot know.

'Twere glorious, no doubt, to be
One of the strong-winged hierarchy,
To burn with seraphs, or to shine
With cherubs, deathlessly divine;
Yet I, perhaps, poor earthly clod,
Could I forget myself in God—
Could I but find my nature's clue,
Simply as birds and blossoms do,
And but for one rapt moment know
'Tis heaven must came, not we must go,
Should win my place as near the throne
As the pearl-angel of his zone,
And God would listen, 'mid the throng,
For my one breath of perfect song,
That, in its simple, human way,
Said all the host of heaven could say.

MISSIONARY NEWS.

THE Bible is translated into two hundred living languages.

A VOLUME has been published in Shanghai giving brief biographies of all the three hundred and thirty-eight Protestant missionaries who have labored in China since 1799. Of these sixty have died in the service—six by violence, six by accident, and eight while on voyages.

REV. E. FARRAZIN, a Baptist preacher in France, was, according to the Missionary Magazine, condemned last June to an imprisonment of eight days and in fine of one hundred francs, at the instigation of the Jesuits, for having been the instrument of a revival near Fontainebleau.

OF THE societies supported by the Evangelical Episcopalians, it is reported, the Church Missionary Society increased its receipts last year by nearly ten per cent., and the Educational Society twenty per cent. The former has increased its home and foreign missionaries from sixty to one hundred and ten; and the latter aids one hundred and sixty-four students, against one hundred aided last year.

THE superintendent of the Methodist mission in Sweden says that, at his late visit to Carlskrona, from one thousand to twelve hundred people attended the preaching.—More than fifty had been added to our church there within a short time. Within a short time scores of people have been converted in Gottenburg. Their influence is spreading every day, and ought to spread, for the Established Church is a very lifeless affair.

THERE is a real idol temple erected and formally established in the United States, at Portland, Oregon. The building is completed, and the Chinamen are actively engaged in furnishing it. The vestibule contains two large oil globes, inside of which lamps are burning, so as to show to advantage the heathenish figures painted on the outside. One of the transparencies represents ecclesiastical warriors or saints, some on foot and some on horseback.—Whatever they are, they go round and round, propelled in some manner by a current of heated air.

A CIRCULAR addressed from the rooms of the American Board to two hundred and twelve children of missionaries, of whom one hundred and ninety answered, revealed the following statistics: Of ninety-five males, eighty-one are members of the church, fifty-one have received a collegiate education, thirty-one are now in college, and thirteen are now in the Gospel ministry. Of eighty-nine females, seventy-eight have been educated and are professing Christians, and thirteen are the wives of missionaries. The answers to the circulars sent out show that the system pursued with children of missionaries has produced most happy results. No other class of children can exhibit such a moral and religious average.

THE testimony of Rev. J. B. Smythe, a British naval chaplain, to the success of the Methodist mission to the Fejee Islands, is remarkable as coming from an English Episcopalian. It reminds us of Rev. Franklin S. Rising's testimony to our own Sandwich Island mission. He says:

"Never was I so much impressed with the power of Divine truth as when I stood in the midst of the native congregation at Bau, of over seven hundred—the king seated in a dignified manner in an arm chair, with his large Bible before him; the queen (the finest specimen, as regards flesh and bones, of the "human form divine" that I ever saw) in a conspicuous place among the women—and heard the Gospel preached by a native minister, and the accents of their praise ascending up on high like the voice of many waters. The church is a large native building, capable of holding one thousand persons, and displays great ingenuity in its style of architecture. It is situated within a few yards of the ruins of an old heathen temple, where human sacrifices were wont to be offered to their gods."

ROMAN CATHOLICISM is putting forth every energy to gain control in China. It is known that the Chinese government has restored to the Jesuits vast amounts of property which were confiscated two hundred years ago. The whole empire has been divided into twenty-four Catholic missions, governed by nineteen bishops and five prefects apostolic, of Italian, French, Spanish and Belgian nationalities. Each bishop has under him not less than four European missionaries, and some of them have upward of twenty. Each mission is subdivided into districts, according to the number of European missionaries. The number of native Christians varies from two thousand up to ten thousand in each mission. Twenty-four colleges are maintained, in which natives are taught Latin, philosophy and theology. Numerous schools and orphanages are also established. The most important college is kept by Germans and Italians, near Shanghai, and has three hundred pupils, who are taught trades, painting, drawing, and Chinese literature; and some are sent to Pekin, to take the degrees. Several printing establishments are in operation, under the direction of missionaries, and works on mathematics and theology are published. Several parts of the Bible have been translated into Chinese and printed; but always with explanatory notes, and with a dictionary of Latin and Mandarin. The Sisters of Charity have eight establishments, situated at or near to various important centers. In Canton a cathedral is rapidly approaching completion, which for architectural finish and magnificent proportions will be unrivaled in the empire, and compare favorably with almost any similar structure in the West.—New York Independent.

THE EPOCH OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

That which will ever be regarded as characterizing the evangelism of the present half century is not ecclesiastical organization, though there are ecclesiastical organizations, new and old. It is not revivals, though there be many of them. It is not missions, though they abound. It is not lay preachers, for that is not new. We stand on the threshold of the Sunday school age; the age of wisdom; when Christians give themselves to the study of childhood, that they may sow while it is seed time, and not wait until harvest.

It is true that the Sunday school has existed for a hundred years, and has counted its pupils by the million in the past generation. Sunday school orators have for a quarter of a century expended the whole force of their hyperbolic rhetoric in describing the progress of the Sunday school cause. But, after all, the progress was chiefly one of extension. It was of that sort which could be represented almost entirely by columns of figures—the least important of all advancement. The Sunday school in its truest development is hardly ten years old, and is yet unknown in many parts of the United States. We have only just begun to have Sunday schools. The things Gail Hamilton sneers at do not deserve the name, and do deserve the sarcasm. No man can visit the more progressive schools and not feel that the dawning of the day of Sunday schools is yet upon us; and that, whatever the fathers have done to prepare the way, the true Sunday school has only begun to exist.

For even unto this day Christian men have oftener failed than succeeded in attempts to find the true doorway to the child's intellect and heart. Rather, they have not tried; but, passing by God's open doorways, coming through which they would have been welcomed, they have persisted in forcing other passages, like thieves and robbers. So that Christ's truth, so beautiful in parables and object lessons, as he gave it, has been changed to hardness and homeliness in the catechism and the wrongly-taught Scripture lesson. Teachers in secular schools have been wiser in their generation; and, finding the child's soul reaching out eagerly with the tentacles of curiosity, have supplied the want according to nature's own methods. But the Bread of Life has been turned to stone by those who were to have fed Christ's children. And weariness of the flesh has sunk deeper, and become weariness of the spirit. The repulsion from the mode of teaching has grown into an aversion from the truth itself. While we wish to give all due credit to the religious instruction of past generations, we have no doubt that many a man has come to reject Christianity by the mental association of its doctrines with the intolerable penance of learning a dull and incomprehensible lesson in the Bible or the catechism.

Now this is changed. In the best schools, the room is made beautiful by pictures, flowers and sometimes by fountains. The blackboard is used to stimulate the curiosity, to illustrate the truth, and to help the memory. The object lesson, in its various forms, is used by the teacher and superintendent to render the lesson delightful. Dullness is accounted a capital sin. Music and library, teaching and talking, must keep pace with the joyousness of the child's spirit. Christ and Christ's holy religion are made just the most beautiful and attractive thing in the world. So that we must insist that, great as has been the good accomplished by its work hitherto, in its best form it is an institution hardly ten years old.

We may say, in even a more fundamental sense, that the Sunday school is new. We now first begin to know what it is for. Not to teach doctrines merely or chiefly, not to commit Scripture by rote, not to learn biblical geography or archæology, but to develop a Christian character, is its true purpose, and all other things as means to this end.

The revolution now taking place is a radical one. The leading Sunday school men in the country—most of them, at least—are settling the work upon its true corner stone. The aim of the Sunday school is, first and foremost and supremely, to produce a Christian life. And so, to go back to the foundation of foundations, the first work is the bringing of the heart of the pupil to a trust in Christ. Not the sowing now for a germination in after life, which is only a poor excuse for present failure, but a germination now for a future harvest. The Sunday school people, in some sections at least, are becoming conscious of the fact that adult converts are born out of due time. There is no normal Christian life but that which begins with childhood.

The Independent reaches many places where all things in this work continue as they were. Very heartily shall we give whatever aid we can to the earnest men who are making the Sunday school the greatest of the great evangelizing movements of the period.—New York Independent.

ONLY.—Only one drop of water at a time that had found its way from the mighty ocean through the dike, and was slowly wearing a little channel. Only one drop! Yet if that little child in his morning ramble had not noticed it, who can tell what the terrible results might have been?

Only a stray sunbeam! Yet perchance it hath pierced some wretched abode, gladdened some stricken heart, or its golden light found its way through the leafy branches of some wood, kissed the moss covered bank where the tiny violets grew, and caused shades of beauty to adorn its lovely form.

Only a gentle breeze! But how many aching brows hath it fanned! how many hearts cheered by its gentle touch!

Only one stray bullet that pierced the noble soldier boy as he trod the lonely midnight round, faithfully guarding the precious lives intrusted to his keeping, and the sunbeams fell on the cold face of the dead.

Only a sentinel! And yet one soul more had passed from its earthly tenement to meet its reward at the hands of a merciful God.

Only a drop of ink! And yet it carried the news of death to anxious ones at home, and caused the tear of anguish to trickle down the furrowed cheek of a widow mother.

Only a frown! But it left a sad, dreary ache in that child's heart, and the quivering lips and tearful eyes told how keenly he felt it.

Only a smile! but ah! how it cheered the broken heart, engendered a ray of hope and cast a halo of light around the unhappy patient; made the bed-ridden one forget its present agony for a moment as it dwelt in sunshine of joy, and lived in the warmth of that sunshine!

GENERAL CUSHING'S MISSION.—The telegraph announces the arrival of General Cushing at Aspinwall, en route for Bogota. Several days since a Washington special of the New York Commercial Advertiser said:

General Cushing has gone—or am I in error—to Bogota, to treat with the republic of New Grenada about a ship canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. The head waters of the Atrato river, which flow into the Gulf of Darien, now mingle, after heavy rains, with those of the San Juan, which flow into the Pacific ocean, and a ship canal along the route of these two streams is believed to be practicable.

FARM AND GARDEN.

ORCHARDS.

As the nut-bearing trees of the temperate zone were treated of in a former number of this magazine, we will confine our attention to those which are not usually classed, in popular estimation, among the valuable nut bearing trees, viz: the oaks which produce edible acorns, the beech, the salisburia and the nut-bearing evergreens.

The oak is the king of forest trees, the Arcadians believed it to have been the first created of all trees, and from its majestic beauty we must suppose it had its place in Eden, and had the dual Eden character, comprising goodness for food as well as pleasantness to the sight. If the apple degenerated under the paralyzing influence of the curse into the crab, from what noble fruit must the oak have degenerated, and to what excellence may we hope to see it restored. When man labors in the sweat of his brow, with patient faith to remove the curse, God's blessing comes benignly to his aid, and he has cause to rejoice in his labor.

The Grammont oak (Quercus gramuntia) a native formerly of the wood of Grammont, near Montpelier, France, and is still growing wild in great abundance, in some of the forests of Spain. It is quite hardy, maturing its acorns in England, which are said to be "as good as or superior to the chestnut." It is thus described by Captain S. C. Cook: "The tree is very much like the Italian evergreen oak (Quercus ilex,) its nearest congener, but the leaves are thicker and more rounded at the point, and the head of the tree is more compact. The great and essential difference, however, consists in the nuts, which are edible, and when in perfection, are as good as or superior to a chestnut. To give this sweetness, they must be kept; as, at first, they have a considerable taste of the tannin, like those of other species, which disappears in a few days, and accounts for the scepticism of some five writers who assert that both the sweet and bitter acorns are the fruit of the same tree. The sweet acorned oak (Quercus ballota) is a native of Greece, and a large, handsome evergreen tree. The acorns are cylindrical, and an inch and a half, or two inches long, eatable and very palatable, according to Prof. Desfontaines, and used, either in a fresh state or roasted."

The round-leaved Spanish oak, (Quercus rotundifolia) a native of Spain—"leaves stalked, an inch or more in length, glaucus-gray, and not quite smooth above; white and cottony beneath. The acorns are said to be large and long and eatable like chestnuts." (Rees' Cyclopedia.)

The cluster fruited oak (Quercus spicata) is described by Dr. Buchanan, who remarks: "That the acorns are eatable, but not very good; they are of the size and shape of a large filbert, even, pointed, dark brown; the cups short and scaly."

Quercus tribuloides was also discovered by that able botanist, Dr. Francis Buchanan. He found it in upper Nepaul, Hindostan, and after describing the tree says: "Its great peculiarity consists in the acorns, which are eatable, and in some of our specimens, seem even to split into two or three valves like chestnuts."

Quercus cuspidata, pointed Japan oak. The species appears, by its prickly cup, to be allied to the Fagus family, especially as Kœmpfer calls it Fagus folia fraxini, and describes its dry cup as splitting into three, four or five parts. The nut is eaten by the Japanese both raw and cooked.

Quercus æsculus is the Italian, or small prickly cupped oak, and as its name imports, is used for food.

The Quercus persica and Quercus pyrami have also edible fruit. In our own country Michaux describes the chestnut-leaved white oak (Quercus prinus) as having a pleasant tasted nut, and also the swamp white oak (Quercus bicolor,) which is nearly allied to the former, and of which it is said: "The nuts are sweet and nutritious, like most of the prinus tribe."

These oaks being mostly of foreign growth, are not found in our nurseries, but many of our large nurserymen have constant communication with the gentlemen of their own profession in Europe, and could, doubtless, obtain the acorns of any of these varieties for their customers. We would particularly recommend the Quercus ballota, which is described as a large, evergreen tree. Some persons think the ballota and gramuntia are identical. Our own evergreen oak, Quercus virens, grows as far north as Norfolk, Virginia, and all these foreign varieties are probably allied to it, and would flourish in the same latitude. This oak, of all varieties, is so valuable for timber that it is worth planting by the thousand for that purpose alone. There is no tree more valuable for timber than our evergreen oak—it is almost imperishable. In Scotland, in 1738 Duke James, of Athol, commenced planting the larch over whole districts. In 1819 a British frigate, built of these trees, was launched upon the ocean, and he left to his family "the blessed legacy of about fifteen thousand five hundred and seventy-three English acres of ground, which consumed above twenty seven millions four hundred and thirty-one thousand and six hundred trees! Under the larch the land becomes most valuable pasture, worth from eight to ten shillings an acre for this purpose alone, where it was not worth one shilling before.

The beech is also so beautiful that we think it must have had its place in Eden, and that the little, sweet, oily nut it bears was once large and delicious, and very "good for food." Its name, the beechen tree, always brings up poetical images, and makes one feel inclined to carol forth in the words of Campbell's familiar poem:

"As love's own altar honor me—
Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree."

Downing says the best use to which the nuts are applied is in the manufacture of oil, which is scarcely inferior to olive. This is produced from the nuts of the beech forests in the department of Oise, France, in immense quantities; more than a million of sacks of the nuts being collected in that department in a single season. They are reduced when perfectly ripe, to a fine paste, and the oil is extracted by gradual pressure. The product of oil, compared with the crushed nuts, is about sixteen per cent.

The Salisburia or Ginko tree was brought to this country from Japan, and flourishes like a native. It was planted by Mr. Hamilton, at Woodlands, near Philadelphia, in 1784, and the largest of those then planted had attained a height of sixty feet in 1840. A fine specimen also stood on the north side of Boston common, to which spot it had been transplanted from the grounds of Gardiner Green, Esq., after it had attained a growth of thirty or forty feet. Mr. Landreth, of Philadelphia, has a Salisburia which now forms quite a handsome tree. It is said to grow to an enormous size in its native country, with a trunk forty feet in circumference. It is a very singular and beautiful tree. The leaves are wedged shaped, or somewhat triangular, attached to the petioles at one of the angles, and are of a pale yellowish green color; the ribs or veins, instead of diverging from the central mid-rib of the leaf, are all parallel, almost exactly like those of the beautiful Maidenhair fern (Adiantum,) common to our woods, except that they are three or four times as large. The bark is somewhat soft and leathery, and on the trunk and branches assumes a singular fawny yellow color. The tree grows rapidly, and is nearly allied to the pine family, being apparently a link between the coniferæ and exogenous trees. The fruit is a drupe about an inch in length, containing a nut, which is highly esteemed in China and Japan, and is constantly seen for sale in their markets. They are eaten after being roasted or boiled, and are considered excellent. Young salisburia trees may be obtained from Mr. P. J. Berkman's, at Fruitland nurseries, near Augusta, Georgia.

Evergreen fruit bearing trees have not attracted the attention to which their beauty and utility entitle them.

The stone pine (Pinus pinea) furnishes a nut which forms an article of export from Greece, and is a commercial commodity in the markets of Turkey and Syria. In Italy they are much used, the tree being common to that country also. The nuts supply the place of almonds in various articles of cookery, and that they have done so from remote antiquity, appears from their having been found among the domestic stores of the pantries of Herculaneum and Pompeii. There is no tree in Europe which surpasses the stone pine in picturesque beauty. "Its vast canopy, supported on a naked column of great height, forms one of the chief and peculiar beauties in Italian scenery, and in the living landscapes of Claude." Dr. W. M. Thompson, in describing the stone pine in Palestine, says: "The cone from which the nut is obtained is very large and compact. When ripe, it is gathered by the owners of the forests and thoroughly dried upon the roof of houses. In drying, the cone separates into many compartments, from each of which drops a smooth white nut. The shell is very hard, and within is the kernel, which is much used in making pillau or other preparations of rice, and also in various kinds of sweetmeats. In the Arabic Bible, the myrrh which the Ishmaelites, who purchased Joseph, were carrying into Egypt, is called snubar, and the name snubar is applied by the Arabs to the stone pine. In Hebrew ers is the distinctive name for the cedar, and berosh for the pine; and if this is in truth the berosh of the Bible, scarcely any other tree is more frequently mentioned, and this would be in exact correspondence with its actual value." The stone pine, although it is a native of the south of Europe, is hardy in England, and Downing thought would stand our winters south of Philadelphia.

The Swiss stone pine (Pinus cembra) is hardy in every portion of the United States, and is one of the most interesting of the pine family. The fruit is similar to the Italian stone pine, but the shell is thinner.

The nut pine of California is thus described in Hittell's Resources of California: "The nut pine (Pinus sabiniana) is remarkable as a conifer for its spreading top, and for its large cones filled with edible seeds. Its branches spread somewhat after the manner of a maple; rarely more than sixty feet high, though often with a trunk four feet in diameter—a thickness of trunk only found in other conifers of double this height. The nuts are larger than the common white bean, and are very palatable. The Indians formerly relied upon this tree for a considerable portion of their food.

The nut bearing yew (Taxus nucifera) is a native of Japan, from the fruit of which the Japanese extract an oil, much esteemed for culinary purposes. Thoro is also the Torreya nucifera, a hardy nut-bearing evergreen, which might possibly be developed into something valuable.

The Torreya Californica (called in California "wild nutmeg") is a graceful and beautiful evergreen, found in the coast mountains, near San Francisco. It grows from fifty to seventy five feet high, and produces a fruit about the size and shape of a nutmeg, which has too strong a terebinthine taste to be palatable. It has only one of the Eden characteristics as yet, but having one, it ought to have the other, and we hope some Van Mons will take hold of it, and restore it to its full Eden heritage.

We now come to the last and most magnificent and perhaps valuable class of fruit-bearing evergreens, the Araucarias. The nuts are nutritious and excellent, and borne in immense abundance.

The Chili pine (Araucaria imbricata) is the first of this species, and is now to be found in all our first class nurseries. A fine specimen grows in the grounds of the late Mr. Lyon, of Columbia, South Carolina. This tree has a wide range of latitude—being found from twenty-seven degrees to forty-eight degrees south latitude—which in our hemisphere would embrace an extent of country reaching from the upper portion of Canada to Florida. It grows without protection in Scotland. It is one of the most striking and peculiar of trees, "distinguished by its close scale-like foliage, closely overlaid or imbricated, and its horizontal branches, springing out from the trunk in whorls or circles, and the immense globular cones, containing the fruit, which is of the shape of the almond, but twice as large. A single cone will contain between two and three hundred of these nuts, and they furnish the Indians of the Andes their chief supply of food.

The Australian Araucaria (Araucaria bidwellii,) called by the natives bunya bunya, is not quite so hardy as the preceding, and will not stand the winters of England; but has not, so far as we know, been tried in the Southern United States. Its height is said to be immense, sometimes presenting a naked trunk of one hundred and sixty feet before the branches begin to appear; which, in old trees in the wild state, only grow near the tops, owing to the want of light in the woods; but if planted out in an open space, they feather down quite to the ground. The leaves are of a rich, dark green, and the cones are sometimes twenty-seven inches in length and twenty-five inches in diameter—they are also of a beautiful green before they become quite ripe. The nut is about an inch and a half in length. The natives assemble in great numbers, often from a distance of several hundreds of miles, to obtain these nuts, of which they are extravagantly fond. "Each tribe claims its own peculiar set of trees, and each family, as well as each individual, has a particular allotment. These rights are handed down from generation to generation with the greatest exactness, and if any one is found at a tree not his own, a fight is the inevitable consequence. This is believed to be the only hereditary personal property of the native Australians, and is therefore generally adhered to with the greatest respect."—Land we Love.

ROUNDED LIFE.—The religion of Christ develops men as distinct originals, and every true believer so receives the spirit of truth as to best direct and to use his talent, his time and his opportunities in doing good. And this makes religious duty constant pleasure; and working, the Christian rapidly strengthens in graces and powers, and springs up into large and symmetrical life, as willows by the water courses.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, 1869.

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

NOTICE TO PREACHERS.

Those preachers whose post offices are to be changed, will please notify this office, as soon as convenient, of the change to be made—being particular in giving the post office from which and that to which the change is to be made.

THE CAMPAIGN OPENED.

The Rev. Ransom Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, has sent us an earnest of good things—ten subscribers with the money. This is the time for a general rally. Let the subscribers begin in January; it is a convenient month to reckon from. By the by, we wish those Mississippi preachers who paid for their paper would pay themselves out of the first subscriber, giving us due notice thereof. We intend to hold on to the policy of furnishing our agents the Advocate free.

Please send us your post office—the place from as well as the place to which the change is to be made.

The sooner the Advocate is diffused throughout the circuit, the sooner will the preacher be advertised, and the higher will his labors be appreciated. The Advocate may be said to bear twelve manner of fruits—it yields in so many pleasant directions. A preacher who gropes his way around a circuit where there are no Advocates taken, is like a prince without a herald. He has to endure the mortification of constantly announcing himself, and of explaining who he is, whence he is, whither he is going, and what for. All which can be done far more satisfactorily, and in much better style, by his forerunner—the Christian Advocate. After preaching at an appointment it must be to the preacher a bracing thought to consider that while he is absent, gone, maybe, for a month, the silent visits of his "assistant" will keep things in a good way until he can get back again.

The Bingham School, Mebaneville, North Carolina.—Our readers will please notice the advertisement of this institution, presided over by Colonel William Bingham. It is either a preparatory or a finishing school, at the option of parents. A classical or a purely English course can be taken. The spring session begins February 3, 1869. During the war this school was upon a regular military footing.

Of the human race about one million two hundred and fifty thousand are Masons.

THE NEW YEAR.

How few can write for the first time the figures of a new year without some momentary sadness. It is the unmistakable sign of an ebbing life—another tide-mark is left by the retreating ocean. The fallen leaves of autumn have but partially prepared the mind for the decseceding night of the old year.—No matter how gently its final hours move, when at last we are told "it is gone!" the soul feels a shock through all its being. For an instant there rallies in our nature some purpose to arrest this great motion of the spheres, and refuse to advance with the incessant force—to say with Joshua: "Stand there still upon Gibeon!" but at the next beat of the pulse all the frail sense of a dying life comes over us, and awes into submission the stontest heart. Yes, we are borne on by the same mighty forces which wheel the planets to their appointed bound. The whole world feels the jar as time passes from '68 to '69. In many a heart it is a shudder; in some it is as if an earthquake for a moment heaved. Then the whole past rushes in one great wave upon the mind, and the future yawns to the day of doom.

Must life really utterly pass away at the last—all its light, its pleasant society, this solid footing of earth reel and (to me, at least) dissolve! How terrible the thought to one whose whole heaven and earth are in the present, or in the memories of the past, in whose heart there is no supernatural hope. It is only by the spirit of God that such a "substance of things hoped for" can fill the whole future of the soul, such memory sweeten the past as that the swift flight of time can bring with it no sorrow. May our readers have such a visitation of the Spirit of grace, and may the old year be joyfully yielded up, and the new one hailed with gladness! for it brings us all "A day's march nearer home."

"This is the midnight of the century—hark!
Through aisle and arch of Godminster have gone
Twelve throbs that tolled the zenith of the dark,
And mornward now the starry hands move on;
'Mornward!' the angelic watchers say;
'Passed is the sorest trial;
No plot of man can stay
The hand upon the dial;
Night is the dark stem of the lily Day.'"

GOLDEN QUARTERAGE.

We are in receipt of a barrel of the very best oranges that Louisiana can produce, grown in the neighborhood of Houma—a present from Mrs. Dr. Robertson. We call it "quarterage," because it is the precise and complete sum received by us from the entire circuit for the current year. It comes from a region where disaster has followed upon disaster until but little remains for either preacher or people. Talking of fruits reminds one of fowls, because in all fruit-pieces the old artists distributed ducks, pheasants, etc. We make no mention of chickens—the events of the war transformed the Gallus into a purely military bird, and henceforth identified its fortunes with the camp—but we allude to the turkey. Last Christmas we acknowledged the present of one from a city friend, brought, as we have since learned, from Indianola, Texas; this Christmas we received one from a city brother, and yet another from Dr. William Walker, of New Iberia—a thoughtful friend. We put these things upon record, not in any spirit of boasting, but as in evidence that the whole country is waking up to the real merits of the Advocate.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

ON MONDAY.

The Conference meets in a fever—everybody full of the notion of getting through by five o'clock P. M. This state of mind is incompatible with good judgment and defeats itself, for when a body of men feel in a hurry they make poor speed.—Therefore all men who move previous questions, or give notice when the steamboat is to leave—they have "just seen the captain"—or allude to being expected home by a certain day, or who, learning where they are to be appointed, ask for leave of absence, are the bane of a Conference session. One day is with them as a year. Better they had never come all that long distance from wives and babes, than to suffer so much in twenty-four hours.

Fortunately the report on Sabbath Schools drew out our good bishop into one of his best talks, and others, sympathizing in the importance of the theme, spoke until the hope of getting away oozed out of the homeward bound. The training and reception of young persons in the church led to the consideration of the great work of conversion.—"Water baptism," said the bishop, "is being palmed off for spiritual regeneration. It is the smartest thing ever achieved by the infernal powers to get a spurious regeneration in the churches. We are in danger from taking unconverted members in the church, and then allowing them to remain in that condition. Jesus Christ has said with a double asseveration: 'Ye must be born again.' Scriptural holiness is inward holiness and outward holiness. While I make these charges I am bound to say that the doctrines of some churches are better than their practice. Their articles of faith call for a better religion than they enforce; for they allow a spurious regeneration to be imposed upon the public."

Our own denominational Sunday schools were declared by the Conference to be the proper training schools of the church—with our own Sunday-School Visitor, our own questions, our own catechism, our own hymn books, our own Sunday school missionary societies, and our own Bible classes. The formation of societies for the support of our foreign missionaries was specially enjoined upon the superintendents of the schools; and the teaching of the catechism to the children, that they may be indoctrinated thoroughly, must not be left to the mere whim of the hour, but be a prominent part of the Sabbath day training.

The report of the chairman of the Committee on Ministerial Support next comes in review. The amounts necessary for the widows, orphans and superannuates of the Conference is $2,150; the amount collected $1,290, being some sixty per cent. of their claims. The bishops' claim is $1,200; amount collected toward this, $728. (By the by, we notice that the Memphis Conference is assessed only $1,400 for the bishops. It seems out of proportion that a membership more than twice as large as ours should be assessed but one-sixth more; not to mention the excess of ruin which our State has suffered and is still suffering.) A plan of raising current expenses, as adopted by the Carondelet street church, was read by Dr. Walker, at this point, and the entire field of finance came under observation. No new discoveries, but many sage reflections were made. An old and wise preacher remarked that the admiration which was constantly being expressed for the endurance of the itinerant ministry reminded him of what he had recently read of a poet in England, who the people permitted to starve in a garret, but after he was dead they erected a marble monument to his memory at a cost of ten thousand dollars. He had noticed that stewards sometimes protected the people by making a narrow allowance for the support of the preacher—that everything and every business had passed from a credit to a cash basis, except preaching, and that it looked as if the preachers were about to perish in making this transition. Here a brother described a monument that he had seen, with a willow gracefully weeping at its side, and having inscribed upon its front the words: "Sacred to the memory of Credit, who departed this fitful life in the year 1864." Having now heard discussions upon this subject at four Conferences, we may be permitted to parenthesize thus much: The old ideas of allowance and assessments are the only ones advanced; the plans of collecting are modified; some collect quarterly, some monthly; the sums and names of members are distributed among the stewards, to be notified, visited and collected; some plans send a notice by mail, monthly to each member of his arrearage, others send a paid collector; some state the whole expense of the station for the year, in a printed notice, the highest apportionment and the lowest, and then that of the person thus notified; some collect every month in the church plate, in an envelope which has been previously supplied, having the name of the member printed on its back. So the steward can give the proper credit. A very large share of the legislation of the several Conferences this year has been upon this question—how to "pass the center." We think that any system which is not operative each week, and by the week, is defective—that subscriptions should be so much a week, not so much a month or a year; that the religious element is the main one in all church collections—not the "value received" idea; that all the members, even boys and girls, should share in the support of the church, and be assessed so much a week—a system which does not embrace the young is a temporary expedient, and not worthy the name of a system; that by some method the whole membership must be divided into small companies, say of ten, one of whom shall be responsible for the financial oversight of the rest.

Just then a daguerreotype man came to the rescue. The photograph of the whole Conference was wanted—in fact, earnestly wished for—all things were ready at the church—would the brethren consent? Who could resist such an appeal, or quell that rising vanity which calls for endless photographs! So, true to our nature, we all went off to the church and were duly manipulated into advantageous lights, the bishop being the stem of the cluster. After being fixed we were left—the artist "would be back in a minute." He was gone long enough for one of the brethren to tell this story: It reminded him of a traveler who wished to cheat a Yankee tavern keeper out of his bill. So he told the host he would show him how he might quickly turn a barrel of cider into vinegar. They both went into the cellar; the traveler bored a hole in one head of the barrel and told his host to put his finger in it; then bored the other head, and told him to put another finger in that; whereupon the traveler excused himself, went up stairs, mounted his horse and left. A good story. While we were in this state of artistic expectancy all eyes were turned toward the door; there was Deacon Watkins, with his silver spectacles, standing in an attitude as significant as our own, the Discipline wide open in his left hand, and he poring over it with the conscientious air of one who had much to learn in a given time! Doubtless supposing that the sweep of the instrument would make him a part of the picture. To the grief of all concerned, the glass was broken after the picture had been taken—sic transit gloria mundi—and the only picture which remains imperishable is that of the deacon and the Discipline at full length upon the retina of the Conference.

TUESDAY MORNING.

The report of the chairman of the Committee on Education was read. This report we shall hereafter insert at length. The Revs. Charles B. Stuart, B. F. White and other practical educators were on the floor, and the comparative merits of the Protestant schools and those of the Roman Catholics were discussed. The education imparted by Jesuit and other Catholic schools was for the purpose of shocking rather than developing the minds of children, and, therefore, consisted mainly in French, music and needle work. But little attention was given to mathematics. The children were required constantly put upon ten to twenty studies a day, and everything must therefore be superficial. Nuns and priests who had spent life in cloisters could only educate after a very unpractical style. The sympathies and solicitudes of a parent they could not have, and were therefore unfit to train children; but they could teach how to work mats for saints. These facts were declared to be constantly coming under the notice of teachers who are receiving pupils from Catholic schools.

The Branch Publishing House at New Orleans was ably represented, and the book interests of our church, by the agent, Rev. R. J. Harp, in an earnest speech. The preachers responded in that they purposed better things for the future. So also this Advocate set forth its beneficent aims, and appealed with the touching eloquence of its merits to all the brethren. They promised to advertise their calling, their church and themselves over all the territory of Louisiana, far more this year than they had ever done, by greatly increasing its circulation.

The following action was taken:

Resolved, That the bishops be requested to so arrange the appointments of 1869 that the time of the meeting of the Louisiana Conference shall be not sooner than the 1st nor later than the 15th of January.

The time for adjournment had come. Thanks, hearty, immeasurable, to the good people of New Iberia for their hospitality, and to the New Orleans and Opelousas Railroad, and to the Attakapas Mail Transportation Line and their accommodating officers, for their unequaled liberality, were passed in the full unison of a rising vote, by bishop, preachers and laymen. The journals were read up. The sixth chapter of Second Corinthians was then read by the bishop, after which all sang the 275th hymn:

"Jesus, the truth and power divine,
Send forth these messengers of thine."

Grand was the hymn and grand the singing. Surely there is no such hour on earth as that which immediately precedes the reading out of appointments! After prayer the address.—It was comprehensive and tender—full of all manly Christian sentiment. It addressed the preachers, their wives and the people. The only question was: "O have I a chance to spread abroad the savor of a Saviour's name!" "I know," said the venerable superintendent, "of no business where diligence is more rewarded than in the ministry. You know not whether your appointment is a good one or not until you try it." And with many such words he prepared our minds and hearts for the year's work before us. Very soon a large part of the Conference was on board the excellent steamer "W. Bell," and under the courteous protection of Captain E. B. Trinidad we steamed down the Teche.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

J. L. Dunnica & Co., No. 99 Poydras street, general commission merchants and dealers in Western produce.

Those of our friends who wish to purchase bacon, flour, etc., if they imitate our example, will purchase of this house. These gentlemen are thoroughly conversant with their business, and it is a pleasure to deal with them.

THE HEARTH AND HOME.

An extended prospectus of this new paper appeared in last week's Advocate. Messrs. Pettengill & Co., New York, are associated in its publication. We have had a good deal to do with these gentlemen, and feel great confidence in any enterprise in which their names appear. Writers of great ability are employed for its columns. The combination, for talent and responsibility, is a powerful one, and must prove a great success. We can guarantee good faith with subscribers.

East Alabama Male College.

The president, Dr. J. F. Dowdell, sends us this week an advertisement of this institution. It is under the special patronage of the Montgomery Conference, and has a strong place in the hearts of all our people in East Alabama. It is ably officered, and promises to afford to any one who has a real desire to be educated an opportunity at the very lowest rates. If a young man is willing to live as a soldier, and upon soldier's rations, he can do so, and the cost will not exceed $12 per month, including all expenses except clothing. Such students are put upon a war footing, and mess together. We could say many good things of the accomplished gentlemen who fill the chairs of this college if it were not wholly superfluous. They are better known than we.

"The Oaks" at New Iberia.—Mrs. Mary R. Hilliard will receive either boarders or transient custom at this excellent house of entertainment. Of its good fare and boundless hospitality we can speak, having seen it full from top to bottom during the whole week of Conference—full of preachers. The excellent lady never wearied in her attentions to her guests. We hope that she will be repaid a thousand fold for her generous favors.

Christmas and New Year's Gifts. The Branch Southern Publishing House, No. 112 Camp street, is just in receipt of many attractive books, chromo palatings, writing materials, etc., among which we notice a very fine painting of John Wesley—offering a varied and beautiful list to those who wish to purchase holiday presents.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Dictionary of the Bible, comprising its antiquities, biography, geography and natural history, with illustrations and maps. Edited by William Smith, of the University of London. Cincinnati, Ohio: National Publishing Company. 1868. 8vo, pp. 1,017.

This work embodies, in a condensed form, the results of recent research, and of the best biblical scholarship. Dr. Smith is well known as one of the most eminent scholars in this department of knowledge, in Europe or America. It is not so full as Calmet, nor does it take the place of our own enlarged Watson, but it presents in a comprehensive form, and with wood-cut illustrations, the information which a Sunday-school teacher, or the general reader of the Scriptures, demands for a more intelligent understanding of the accompanying history, archæology and topography of the people and region where the sacred word and the lives of the prophets, the apostles and the Saviour were first illustrated.

Wild Life Under the Equator, narrated for young people. By Paul Du Chaillu, author of "Discoveries in Equatorial Africa," "Stories of the Gorilla Country," etc. With numerous engravings. New York: Harper & Brothers, publishers. 1868. 12mo, pp. 231.

The life and adventures of this celebrated hunter will furnish stories for many a Christmas fireside. The scenery, the beasts and the tribes of Africa are destined to be the wonder of the world for a long time to come. Du Chaillu was not credited when he brought the first news of the existence of the gorilla; and he had to return and secure specimens of this "horrible dream creation" of a monster before the fact was accepted by the scientific men of France and England. The engravings in this book, of elephants, snakes, gorillas and wild boars and wild people, together with the hair-breadth escapes of the illustrious traveler, make it a most acceptable holiday present for young people. We shall insert some of its chapters in the Advocate. For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, New Orleans, opposite the post office.

The Apache Country; a tour through Arizona and Sonora. By J. Ross Browne, author of "Usef," "Crusoe's Island," etc. With numerous illustrations by the author. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1868. 12mo, pp. 535.

This narrative of travel and life among the Indians and miners of the Pacific slopes, and the far West, includes a description of the home of the Apaches, the Washoe country, Bodie Bluff, Mono lake, the Walker river region and the Reise river district. The eye of the artist and the imagination give great interest and power to the descriptive writings of this industrious traveler. He sees a great deal, groups it, and fixes it with his pencil; he hears a great deal and records it, and has thus embodied a vast amount of information, especially in regard to the social condition, the agricultural and mineral resources, and the historical incidents of the regions visited. These facts are enlivened by a hundred incidents, which will give relief to the severer recital of the historian who, at some future day, shall describe the first settlement of this vast country The engravings are many and beautifully executed. For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, opposite post office.

A TREATISE ON PHYSIOLOGY AND HYGIENE, for schools, families and colleges. By J. C. Dalton, M. D., professor in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York. New York: Harper & Brothers. London: Sampson Low, Son & Marston. 1868.—12mo, pp. 370.

This work is a treatise on the natural actions of the living body, and how to maintain these actions in a healthy condition. It is a masterly setting forth of this most interesting study, by one thoroughly conversant with the science of human physiology, aided by the microscope and the photograph.—These have created a new era in all science, but in none more than in physiology. This work abounds in most admirable photo-microscopic cuts, illustrating all the marvels of the structure, the circulation, the nerves and the growth of the human body. We intend to put several youngsters we wot of at it during the long evenings of this winter, to read aloud for the common entertainment and instruction of the family. For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, opposite post office.

THE RIGHTFUL HEIR. A drama, in five acts, by the author of Richelieu. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1868. 16mo, pp. 61.

An admirable plot, powerfully and beautifully developed.

SCHOOL LYRICS, for schools. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1868. 24mo, 159 pp.

A collection from Doddridge, Newton and other evangelical poets. For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, opposite post office.

THE GORDIAN KNOT. By Shirley Brooks. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1868. 8vo, pp. 168.

For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, opposite post office.

HONDURAS.

CANTON, December 21, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: As there is some misunderstanding about the time the steamer will leave New Orleans for Belize on her January trip, you will please say to all interested that she will leave on the 20th of January, at 5 P. M., at which time I expect to return to my home in British Honduras.

Your's truly, L. PEARCE.

THE COLUMBIA CONFERENCE.—The Spectator says: This Conference was held at Roseburg, Douglas county, Oregon, September 2-7; Bishop Marvin presided. W A Finley and J Emory were elected secretaries. N M Elton and John Wood were admitted on trial. B F Burch was elected to elder's, and L E V Coon to deacon's orders. E Oliver, a deacon, was received from the Northern Methodist Church. The Spectator adds: Roscoe G Oglesby, David C McFarland and Eliel Oliver were ordained elders, and N M Elton and L E V Coon deacons. The Conference, by resolution, solicits the payment of $1 by every member of the church within its bounds, for the cause of missions—an example worthy of imitation; of course the rich will be expected to "cast in much" more than this. The first Friday in June is set apart as a day of fasting and prayer for more laborers—as they are greatly needed The statistical report shows: local preachers, eleven; members, eight hundred and forty; infant baptisms, fifty-eight; adult baptisms, eighty-four; Sunday schools, ten; superintendents and teachers, fifty-four; scholars, three hundred and seventeen; domestic missions, $114 50; bishops' fund, $175; preachers' claim, $5,065; preachers' receipts, $2,405—deficit, $2,663. The next session is to be held at Corvallis, September 1, 1869.

MARRIED.

By Rev. John A. B. Jones, November 26, 1868, at the residence of Mr. G. W. Humphreys, Mr. LORD JOHN BUTLER and Miss KATE C. HUMPHREYS, only daughter of Colonel John C. Humphreys, all of Claiborne county.

By the same, December 15, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. THOMAS M. REA and Miss CHRISTINA C. STAMPLEY.

OBITUARIES.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO THE MEMORY OF DR. PHILIP P. NEELY.

At the last quarterly meeting conference of the St. Francis street Methodist Episcopal Church South, held on Friday, November 20, 1868, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased almighty God, in his wise but mysterious providence, to remove by death from our midst our beloved pastor, Rev. Dr. P. P. Neely; and

WHEREAS, We feel that a great affliction has befallen our church, and we, the quarterly meeting conference of the St. Francis street Church, feel especially crushed and humbled by this dispensation; be it, therefore,

Resolved, That we deeply deplore this sad event, and that in the loss of Dr. Neely we feel that a great light has been extinguished in the church; that we cherished for him a deep and unfeigned love, and revered and honored him as our minister, pastor and friend.

Resolved, That we feel that no panegyric at our hands will add to his "praise, which is in all the churches," and that we expect this to be done by more skillful, though not more loving hands than ours.

Resolved, That while we deeply mourn his loss, and cherish the memory of his love, friendship and many virtues as sweet incense in our hearts, we humbly bow in submission to the will of our Master, who calls home "his laborers and gives them their hire" in his own good time.

Resolved, That we tender his afflicted widow and his two daughters our deep sympathy, and humbly pray that God in his mercy may give them grace to sustain them in this the day of their sad bereavement.

Resolved, That the secretary of this conference be requested to furnish a copy of these proceedings to the Nashville and New Orleans Christian Advocates, and that a copy be sent to Sister Neely.

THOS. W. DORMAN, P. E., Chairman.

A. W. LAMPKIN, Secretary.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of Mushroom growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE CHILD AND SUNBEAM.

BY J. W. E.

Brightly through the crevice
Shot a little ray,
Athwart the dusky chamber
Where "Rivers" was at play.

Brightly as the sunbeam
Shone his h xel eyes,
While gazing on the vision
Issuing from the skies.

A thousand little atoms
Were dancing in the light,
And awhile he stood bewildered,
Wondering at the sight.

Then stealthily advancing,
His hands above his head,
He sought, with rosy fingers,
To clasp the golden thread:

While vainly thus attempting
To seize the shining ray,
The sun passed by, recalling
His truant beam away.

His little heart was saddened;
A tear was in his eye,
And, turning to his mother,
He sweetly asked her why

The sunbeam had departed,
And whither had it flown:
"Oh, mother! tell me, mother,
Say, will it not return?"

"O, yes, my boy, the morrow
Will bring you back the ray;"
And his features quickly brightened
With thought of coming day.

Thus ever from our childhood,
In every stage of sorrow,
Our solace is that mystic word,
The ever-coming "morrow."

—Planters' Banner.

Games for the Children's Evening.

'And what is our evening?' I hear some child pathetically ask. I know, little friend, how it is. If you are permitted to be up an hour after sunset you are, in a sense, in durance, for 'papa' has his sermon or lecture to write, or letters to answer, or the older children have lessons to learn, so that you dare not speak, or 'baby' is asleep, and you cannot part your lips without having some elderly finger raised in warning, or 'mamma' has a headache, or she is planning breakfast or a dinner party, or is cutting some garment, and talking will disturb the movements of her scissors.

You may well ask, poor dear, 'Which is our evening?' I am sorry for the children who have no evening peculiarly their own. There is something radically wrong in the domestic arrangements of the family that has not a children's evening in every week, or, at least, in every fortnight. On Friday evening, for instance, when the week's school duties are ended, father should leave his business at his office, or lock his pen and ink away in his study, and give himself up to unrestrained enjoyment with the children; and mother should put by her thimble, needle and scissors—though she cannot always lay baby away—and enjoy her children and allow them to enjoy her.

I know a minister of fifty-five, the father of nine children. He is a stately kind of man—the very impersonation of serious dignity in the pulpit—and yet he has for years joined his children in their charades, tableaux and games with an unmistakable heartiness. One of the most enjoyable occasions I know is the children's evening in his family.—The taste, and artistic skill, and wit, and pathos displayed are remarkable.

The young men of this family, of whom there are now four, are never seen in beer saloons or at the gambling table, and the girls are cheerful, womanly and healthy in mind and body. To them all home is the pleasantest place in all the world. Parties, and theaters, and watering places, and fashionable bonnets and new dresses are not necessities.—They are a party within themselves. Father, and mother, and children ride, and row, and skate, and play croquet together, and it seems to me that they get more enjoyment out of each other, and out of life, than any people I know.

Well, I am wandering somewhat. Parents rather than children may find suggestions in these remarks. There are two evenings in the year which your children may claim; these are Thanksgiving and Christmas. Christmas especially belongs to you. Then you have a right to assert yourselves; then you are entitled to the first table, and you have a right to talk there—to be heard as well as seen. You are at liberty to beat your drum, to blow your whistle, to fire your cannon, to spin your top, to scatter your blocks and nine pins, to eat candy and nuts, to play in the best room, to sit up late, and finally, you have a right, for that one evening at least, to father and mother. After you have drummed, and cannonaded, and whistled till you are fairly tired yourself of the noises which have put grandma into a headache, and yet find your enthusiasm unspent, then is the time to impress father and mother, your big brother, your young lady sister, and the younger children, not forgetting the baby; to assemble them in the roomy library, where the grate is glowing and the lamps lighted, and to have your games. And my object in writing this article is to tell you of some games which I consider of interest for such an occasion.

There are some old games, such as 'blind man's buff,' 'genteel lady,' etc., which are always good.

But I shall pass over these games, which everybody knows, and tell you of some which are newer.

I.—THE GAME OF STATUES.

Oftener than otherwise I have seen the game of statuary improvised, that is, got up at a moment's warning, without preparation. In such a case one of the party is appointed artist and another a visitor to his studio, which is represented by the parlor. The other members of the company are to be statues. Of course, care must be taken to select bright, quick-witted persons for the parts of artist and visitor, or the game may prove a stupid affair. This visitor may choose to personate a shrewd Yankee purchaser, or a gaping, wondering countryman, or a vulgar moneyed man, or the cultivated, appreciative lover of art. The statues are, of course, expected to be immovable, though it is extremely difficult to keep down the smiles, as each person is ignorant of what he represents till the artist announces it. And where the parties are well known, and their peculiarities understood, there is always opportunity for happy hits, funny incongruities, and striking surprises. I was once present when one of the statues was the rigid figure of a maiden lady, the most uncompromising hater of everything Southern that I ever knew. I used to think on some occasions, when she got started on the rebel question, that Aunt Sally, before the war should end, would actually give her friends an exhibition of spontaneous combustion.—She had no charity for anybody who had any charity for anything Southern. She thought herself called to hate them all. So we more reasonable people, as we called ourselves—more disloyal, Aunt Sally pronounced us—used to have our laughs and jokes at her expense.

So when our artist, standing before Aunt Sally's gray eye severely fixed on vacancy, announced in sonorous tones and with a majestic wave of the hand: 'In this piece I have sought to represent the flight from tyrannical pursuers of the gallant rebel chieftain, Jefferson Davis,' the equanimity of the statues was disturbed, and the artist's room rang with shouts and laughter, while the statue of the hunted rebel chieftain grew very red in the face, as if with pique and indignation; and then, as though fairly overcome by the comical aspect of affairs, it laughed and laughed till the tears rolled down the marble front.

And when there are no such hits as this in the case of Aunt Sally, it is always laugh-provoking to have two people standing in front of you, commenting on the expression of your eyes, the length of your nose, the size of your mouth, the shape of your hand, etc.

I am not sure that an informal, improvised game is not as entertaining as one which is carefully studied beforehand. But it is possible to make the game of statuary very elaborate and artistic. The statues may be powdered, and draped, and grouped, and attitudinized, and the artist and visitor may have an understanding as to what is to be said and done, and so a grand success may be achieved, which will well repay the time and trouble expended.

II.—CHARACTERS.

One of the company is selected to leave the room. When he is out of hearing the others assign him a character. They agree, for instance, that he is to represent Benjamin Franklin. Then he is called in and treated and addressed as though he was Franklin, care being taken to conceal from him the character which has been assigned him, as that he is expected to discover. For example, one asks: 'Did you enjoy that loaf of bread?' in allusion to Franklin's walking the streets of Philadelphia eating a loaf of bread. Another asks: 'Were you not afraid that people would laugh at you?' 'The ladies still keep up that house-cleaning against which you made such a funny protest.'—'Didn't you feel badly when your mother didn't recognize you?'—'There have been great developments in electricity recently.'

III.—TWENTY QUESTIONS.

When well played, the game of twenty questions is one of the finest I know. One person mentally selects an object, with which he acquaints a second person, who is called the umpire, whose office it is to decide all disagreements between the first person and the party or parties propounding the questions. You perceive that the game may be played by three persons, or any larger number.

The inquisitors or questioners are entitled to have twenty questions answered, and then they have three guesses to discover the subject of thought. Great care and judgment must be exercised in asking the questions, so that every one will advance you toward the desired object. Not one must be wasted. I will give you an illustration of the manner in which the game is to be played. The first person having announced that his selection is made, a good question to open with is: 'To which of the three kingdoms, animal, vegetable or mineral, does it belong?'

'Animal.'

'Is it an animal or the product of an animal?'

'The product of an animal.'

'Does it belong to a water or land animal?'

'To a land animal.'

'Biped or quadruped?'

'Biped.'

'To man or to bird?'

'To bird.'

'What is the form or shape of this object?'

'It is spherical.'

At this point an egg naturally suggests itself, and your questions are directed to the discovery of the individual egg which the person has in his thought. So you ask: 'Has this object an historical interest?'

'It has.'

'Has it a place in sacred or profane history?'

'In sacred history.'

'In postdiluvian or antediluvian history?'

'In both.'

You, of course, connect it with the flood, and most naturally think of the dove that went forth with the olive branch.

'Is it the egg from which Noah's dove was produced?'

'It is.' And so the game ends.

The interest which attaches to the game is exhaustless, and the play is enjoyable to both old and young. I was once in a house where seven Presbyterian clergymen were boarding during the session of the synod, and these reverend gentlemen indulged themselves every day after dinner in a game of twenty questions, and I don't believe they preached, or sang, or prayed any the less earnestly for it.—Golden Hours.

SCIENTIFIC.

MR PARKES, of London, has just made a lens, three feet in diameter, three inches thick in the center, and weighing two hundred and twelve pounds. In the focus of this powerful lens the most refractory metals are almost instantly fused and dissipated in vapor, while unyielding stony substances are as rapidly vitrified.

PROF. CARL NEUMAN, of Munich, a diligent student of Chinese antiquities and bibliography, has discovered from the Chinese year books that a company of Buddhist priests entered this vast continent, via Alaska, a thousand years before Columbus, and explored thoroughly and intelligently the Pacific borders, penetrating into "the land of Fusung"—for so they called the Aztec territory, after the Chinese name of the Mexican aloe.

IN France every effort has been made of late years to resuscitate the fisheries by attention paid to artificial breeding. Various kinds of fishes, oysters, lobsters and crabs have been cultivated, with complete commercial success. The French government gives sailors of the naval reserve the right to portions of the shore, which are devoted to this branch of industry, under the direction of a scientific board.

PROF. B. F. MUDGE gives in Silliman's Journal an account of a remarkable meteorite, which exploded over Kansas, June 6. It was clearly visible at twenty minutes before noon, showing a pink flame, and a light such as would have obscured the full moon, had it appeared at night. It is calculated that its nucleus or head was one thousand eight hundred and ninety feet in diameter, that its height was eighty-one miles when first seen, and 12.5 when it exploded. At a distance of fifty-eight miles the explosion, which was heard about four minutes and a half after it was seen, sounded as loud as a twelve-pounder a mile distant. The explosion produced a cloud a mile and a half long and a mile wide. As it exploded about midway between the Republican and Soloman rivers, a country rather sparsely inhabited, no aerolites have been found, although they must have fallen.

THE speed attained by the swifter kind of velocipedes averages from twelve to thirteen miles an hour.—Adepts find no difficulty whatever in accomplishing fully fifty miles within five hours, without once alighting from their vehicles. A couple of amateurs, making a tour through a part of France, challenged each other as to which could perform the greatest distance within four and twenty hours. One gave in after having accomplished eighty-seven miles; the other went on an additional six and thirty miles, making one hundred and twenty-three miles in all. In impelling a velocipede the limbs are not constantly in motion. A slight impulsion given to the vehicle from time to time suffices to keep up the speed. The ascent of any incline greater than one in twenty-five is said to be impracticable. When the rider, therefore, encounters a hill of more than average steepness, he has to dismount and lead his velocipede with his hand, which he can do with almost the same ease as he can carry an ordinary walking-stick. Although one wheel is directly in front of the other, when in motion there is no more tendency to fall over than in a hoop, which will proceed perpendicularly until it loses its motion, or in a top or gyroscope, which tends to preserve its plane of revolution.

DISRAELI'S DESCENT.

The old story of the raccoon, who offered to come down, rather than trouble his enemy to fire his unerring weapon, has been used so often as an illustration that we are almost ashamed ever to allude to it now. Yet the temptation to apply it to Mr. Disraeli's resignation is well nigh irresistible. After vaunting and vaporing up to the very eve of the elections about the certainty of his success, after exulting coarsely and noisily in his speech at the Lord Mayor's dinner over the anticipated defeat and discomfiture of his antagonists, Mr. Disraeli now comes down from his tree without waiting for Mr. Gladstone's shot, and declares himself a gone minister. He has resigned his office. Mr. Gladstone has formally accepted at the hands of the Queen the task of forming a new administration, and has begun the work by inviting John Bright to a seat in the cabinet.

Not many, perhaps, of our readers understood, when the news came of Disraeli having been offered a peerage, that this was an official recognition of his coming fall. In England the peerage is an elevation to a man obscure in politics; to a political leader, situated as Mr. Disraeli was, it is a graceful way of intimating that his career has closed. Toward the later years of Charles James Fox it was made known to him that the king was willing to confer on him a peerage. The great Whig orator raised his head, prematurely languid, and said, in a tone half mournful, half angry: "Great heavens! they surely do not think it has come to that with me yet?" Mr. Disraeli seems to have taken the proffered compliment in the same sense. He will not yet consent to leave the stirring scene of his many brilliant struggles; the hall of splendid debate, wherein it can only be said that he was not the foremost; the House of Commons, whose animated and momentous nights keep alive through whatever change of fortune the soul and spirit of a true politician, and, to a man like Disraeli, make ambition virtue. He will not submit to be translated just yet to the sleepy, lethargic House of Lords, where debate is conducted in droning whispers, and a division is a ceremonial as rare as it is meaning. As the shade of Achilles in the Odyssey declares to Ulysses that any life, however hard, in the active world is better than the dreary quietude of the land of shadows, so Disraeli would doubtless say that any toil, any struggle, any defeat in the stirring Commons, is preferable to the Lethean tranquility of the House of Lords. Disraeli accepts for his wife the barren title of Viscountess Beaconsfield (they have no children,) and thus signifies his gratitude to the devoted woman who did so much to aid him in his career, of whom he has so often said that she made him what he is. But he will not be a peer himself. He will sit in his old seat as leader of the Opposition in the Commons, and face his brilliant and triumphant rival as before.

We see nothing cowardly in Mr. Disraeli's resignation, although the London Times thus characterizes it. Nor, on the other hand, do we agree with the New York Tribune in thinking that there was anything particularly graceful or magnanimous in the act. Disraeli loves to be dramatic; and his sudden abdication has a dash of stage-play and artistic effect about it which suits his humor better than to await a formal defeat. It looks dimly like making a sacrifice for the sake of public business; and Disraeli delights to seem self-sacrificing without cost. Moreover, it is, on the whole, the best thing he could do, as a mere stroke of policy; and it convinces us that he believes he has yet a career before him. He has saved his party from a declaration and a defeat on the grand issue, and he doubtless hopes to worry, distract, and perhaps even for a time baffle his opponents, by raising side issues and minor questions, and winning little victories of detail, and trying to alienate half-hearted followers, if there be any such, of the Gladstone ministry. It was in this way that he twice succeeded in defeating a Liberal reform bill—that of the Palmerston government, in 1860, and that of the Russell Gladstone government, in 1866. We do not think he will succeed in his favorite policy this time. The issue is too simple; the mind of the country is too well made up. But we feel convinced that he had some such scheme in his mind when he anticipated defeat by resignation. Whatever his characteristics, they do not include either cowardice or magnanimity. If it were his cue to fight, he would have fought to the last. If he flies, it is only because he has even still some faint hope of acting the part of the last of the Horatii, who abandoned the field in order that he might divide his antagonists and defeat them.—New York Independent.

NEW PATENT PIANOS.
RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)
Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.
Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,
Patented August 14th, 1866.
This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.
Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.
The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:
1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of
16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of $10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of 25 00
which payment constitutes him or her a life member.
2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.
But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.
3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.
4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.
5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.
6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.
ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.
The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.
The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.
There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.
Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.
SPECIAL CAUTIONS.
Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.
A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.
It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.
TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.
Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.
Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.
No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

TENNESSEE FEMALE COLLEGE, Franklin, Tennessee, situated on the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, eighteen miles south of Nashville, in a most beautiful and healthful portion of the State, with ample buildings, thoroughly refitted and refurnished, and supplied with the modern improvements for heating, ventilation and bathing. This institution, with a full Faculty, will begin its Fall Session on Monday, September 7, 1868.

In the Literary Curriculum both Latin and French are thoroughly taught, without extra charge. This Curriculum must be completed for a degree in the College; yet young ladies may pursue an eclectic course, and receive diplomas in special departments.

For Music and Painting skilled instruction and the best facilities provided.

Boarders will find a home in the College with the family of the Principal.

Prices throughout very low for the grade of the institution. The entire charges for board and the full Literary Course will not exceed $25 per month.

The climate is specially favorable to study, and hence our scholastic year is one month longer than in the Gulf States.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the fall reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

FIVE HUNDRED SOUTHERN METHODIST PREACHERS,

Who are both the agents and owners of this sheet.

A men who wishes to be known in the country is certainly much in his own light who does not display his name in our advertising columns.

Our terms are precisely the same as those of other weekly newspapers in this city.

We have fewer advertisements than the secular papers, but what we have are read with that conscientious regard for everything that appears in a Christian paper which takes hold—in fact, too strong a hold—and holds the editor responsible for all the patent medicines, hardware, shoes, pork, flour, and even whisky, which may be set forth in its columns.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

SQUARES.	1 MO.	3 MOS.	6 MOS.	12 MOS.
One (8 lines)..	$5 00	$12 00	$20 00	$30 00
Two.....	7 50	15 00	25 00	40 00

THE HOME MONTHLY, Now Orleans, for 1867.

The HOME MONTHLY will contain forty-eight pages of reading matter, printed upon fine paper and in clear type, and will, from time to time, be accompanied by elegant steel-plate engravings. The subscription price will remain $3 per annum, or $1.50 for six months, invariably in advance. In order to build up a still larger circulation, we have concluded to offer the following Liberal Inducements to Agents.

To any person sending us three yearly subscriptions, with nine dollars, we will send the MONTHLY six months, or allow them, if they prefer, to retain One Dollar and Twenty-five Cents of the amount.

To any person sending us six subscriptions, with eighteen dollars, ($18,) we will send the MONTHLY one year, or allow them to retain Two Dollars and Fifty Cents of the amount.

On amounts for subscription less than nine dollars, agents will be allowed to retain ten per cent.

Ministers, it is hoped, will act as agents, not so much from pecuniary considerations as from a laudable desire to assist in building up a home literature worthy of a place among the families of the South and on the center-tables of a Christian people.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $10 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Colsman and A. Bennett.

For further information apply for circular to

O. F. CASEY,

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev. William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited more animation since our last issue, but without much activity. There is, however, a fair business doing in most branches of the wholesale trade. Our leading staple has been in brisk demand, and prices have ruled still more in favor of factors. Sugar and molasses have met a ready sale from the levee, all the receipts having been taken, at full prices for the former and a further advance for the latter. Light stocks have prevented much movement in Western produce, the principal exception to this remark being corn, the receipts of which have been much more liberal, and met a demand both for foreign export and from the trade. A considerable amount has been taken for shipment to Great Britain at 78c. for prime white. At 78c. per bushel and 13d. freight but a narrow margin is left to shippers; but there are heavy orders pending here, and parties ready to go on freely at these figures.—Double extra and the lower grades of flour have ruled more in favor of sellers, prices being stiffened by the prospect of interrupted navigation above Cairo.

The weather has been mild and generally cloudy or foggy, with the prevailing wind from the South. Nothing of any moment has been reported from the country.

The river has fallen six inches since our last report, and is now eleven feet below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 25th instant:

Louisiana and Missis-ippi	bales..	12621
Arkansas		415
Montgomery		426
Mobile		352
Texas		35
Total		13849

On Saturday the movement commenced with a pretty general inquiry, but a disposition among factors either not to uncover their samples, or to raise their pretensions ⅛ to ¼c., which checked operations, but still the sales summed up 6,000 bales, at prices showing some irregularity, indicating, on the whole, a decided advantage on the side of the factors, low middling selling at 22¾c., but toward the close could not be had under 22⅞ to 23c., and strict low middling in some cases brought a fraction over 23c. Middling was firm at 23½c., with occasional sales at 23⅝c. On Monday the general activity was increased by the execution of some considerable orders to complete freight engagements at Mobile. The business comprised fully 9,000 bales, at stiffer prices generally, and a more decided improvement in the higher grades. On Tuesday the market opened with a very good inquiry, and a moderate business was done at about Monday's prices, but under the encouraging tenor of the early telegrams from Liverpool, and as the demand became more fully developed, factors raised their pretensions ¼ to ½c. The bulk of the business was consequently at an advance of fully ¼c., and notwithstanding the high figures asked, the movement continued lively throughout the day, resulting in sales of 10,000 bales, and closing at the subjoined quotations. Most of the business was for Great Britain and the North, the ruling rates being above the limits of the French and Continental orders.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 25,000 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 419,958 bales, against 238,650 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 132,022 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 68,397 bales to France, of 3,279 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 23,478 to Great Britain.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	21½ to 21¾
Good ordinary	22½ to 22¾
Low middling	23½ to —
Middling	23½ to 24
Strict middling	24¼ to —

On the 14th of January, 1869, the Spring session of this Institution begins. One Hundred and Fifteen Dollars will pay the expenses of Tuition, Board, Room rent, Fuel, Contingent fee and Washing, for a session of five months. We have accommodations for more than the one hundred and seventy-nine students already matriculated, and hope for a large increase the ensuing session.

The chair of English Literature and Modern Languages, now vacant, will be filled by the Joint Board at their annual meeting in June next. Applications can be made through the undersigned to the Board.

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLlege, Brookhaven, Mississippi, one hundred and twenty eight miles from New Orleans, on the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad.

This Institution will reopen on the 23d of September, 1868.

The good discipline, the thoroughness of instruction, the healthiness of the location, the parental care over the pupils, the very low terms, all recommend the institution.

In the English Department $125 will pay all the expenses for five months, including tuition, board, fuel, lights, washing and books.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

PARDON TO ALL.

The President, on Christmas day, issued the following proclamation, granting full and free pardon and amnesty to all persons actually engaged in the late rebellion, and to all who aided or abetted the same either directly or indirectly:

By the President of United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, The President of the United States has heretofore set forth several proclamations, offering amnesty and pardon to persons who had been or were concerned in the late rebellion against the lawful authority of the United States, which proclamations were severally issued on the 8th day of December, 1863, on the 26th day of March, 1864, on the 29th day of March, 1865, on the 7th day of September, 1867 and on the 4th day of July, in the present year; and

WHEREAS, The authority of the Federal government having been re-established in all the States and Territories within the jurisdiction of the United States, it is believed that such prudential reservations and exceptions as, at the dates of said several proclamations, were deemed necessary and proper may now be wisely and justly relinquished, and that a universal amnesty and pardon for participation in said rebellion, extended to all who have borne any part therein, will tend to secure permanent peace, order and prosperity throughout the land, and to renew and fully restore confidence and fraternal feeling among the whole people and their respect for and attachment to the national government, designed by its patriotic founders for the general good.

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested by the Constitution, and in the name of the sovereign people of the United States, do hereby proclaim and declare unconditionally and without reservation, to all and to every person who directly or indirectly participated in the late insurrection or rebellion, a full pardon and amnesty for the offense of treason against the United States, or of adhering to their enemies during the late civil war, with restoration of rights, privileges and immunities under the Constitution and the laws which have been made in pursuance thereof.

In testimony whereof I have signed these presents with my hand and have caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, the 25th day December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, and of the independence of the United States of America the ninety-third.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

By the President:
F. W. SEWARD,
Acting Secretary of State.

GRANT'S CABINET.

As to the cabinet, it may be called certain that Mr. E. B. Washburne, of Illinois, wants a place in it, and will get the Secretaryship of the Interior; and there will be no mistake made if it is assumed that Grant sympathises strongly in those peculiar and ardent efforts to save the people's money, by which Washburne's career in Congress has been distinguished, and which have made him hated and feared by the lobby. Those best informed do not think there will be a change in the War Department. There is no more competent man for war minister in the country than General Schofield, and he is on terms of the closest personal friendship with Grant. It is conjectured, and something more, that Grant's Secretary of the Navy will be a naval officer, and Admiral David D. Porter is very confidently named as the man. It will be remembered that he and Grant were, during the war, long and intimately associated in combined military and naval enterprises.

It has been whispered in Washington that General Grant, during his visit to New York city, has been sounding some of the eminent men of that place as to the Secretaryship of the Treasury. That he was at pains to gather opinions is pretty clear. How influential those opinions may be is another matter. But we may add that the most weighty New York opinion favors Mr. David A. Wells for Secretary of the Treasury. That gentleman has certainly displayed extraordinary knowledge of financial topics, and honestly earned a national fame. It is certain that Grant will not look among the politicians for a Secretary of the Treasury, and that Mr. Wells will be backed by his excellent reputation, and by zealous friends of high distinction.

Last and not least, there is something more than mere gossip as authority for the assertion that General Grant looks upon Charles Francis Adams as a man admirably calculated by education, experience and temper for the management of our relations with foreign powers; and one well-known friend of General Grant is quoted as saying that he "knows" the Secretaryship of State will be offered Mr. Adams.

This leaves the Postmaster Generalship and Attorney Generalship, for both of which offices there are Ohio aspirants, to fill; and our information does not warrant the use of their names on the slate.

We may mention, in this connection, that Senator Sumner wishes to be Secretary of State, and that Senator Morton does not wish to be Secretary of the Treasury.—Cincinnati Commercial.

HAVANA, Jan. 6.—Lersundi and Admiral Chaon sailed yesterday for Spain. Before leaving, the former visited Admiral Hoff on the steamer Contocook.

The inaugural proclamation of Dulce is anxiously awaited.

The Cubans say the insurgents will never consent to a compromise, while the Spaniards feel confident that the insurrection will be suppressed.

A report exclusively from rebel sources states that in the battle of the 22d ultimo, between the revolutionary forces under Generals Santisban and Lopez, and the Spanish troops under Colonel Lano, the latter were defeated, with a loss of two flags and forty-two prisoners. The insurgents admit the loss of sixteen killed and thirty-six wounded. The authorities at Havana flatly contradict this report.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—Later African advices confirm the safety of Dr. Livingstone. He is in Zanzibar, prevented from reaching the coast by wars.

PARIS, Jan. 6.—La Turque newspaper, discussing the conference, warns Russia to beware of another Crimean war.

PLYMOUTH, England, Jan. 6.—The British ship Southern Empire foundered at sea. All on board lost. The Southern Empire sailed last from New Orleans for Liverpool with cotton, November 13.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The dullness of the Paris Bourse and decline in Rentes yesterday is said to be attributable to Russia's demands on Turkey.

ARKANSAS.

PEACE.—As two rather prominent commentaries on General Grant's text, "let us have peace," we would suggest the present condition of affairs in Georgia and in Arkansas. In the one State the negroes are banded together in open rebellion against the civil authorities, and maintain their freedom from law with muskets and bayonets. In the other State bands of thieves, regularly organized as State militia, are marching through the country, pillaging indiscriminately, and in many instances adding arson and even murder to robbery. There is no need to rehearse their atrocities; they have become only too familiar. The wonder is that the people of Arkansas have so long submitted to these outrages. They have not been confined to the rural districts, as in several instances the militia have taken possession of considerable towns. It would seem that the citizens would rise en masse and sweep from the face of the earth the militia and the men who organized them. When such things as the deeds done by these ruffians occur, talk of peace is cowardice and submission abject fear. We hope soon to chronicle the utter extinction of the so-called militia of Arkansas, and shall deem every moment which passes until that justice is done, as one more moment of disgrace to the people of Arkansas. Let the militia be broken up and Arkansas will have peace.—New Orleans Crescent.

LOUISIANA.

The hall of the House of Representatives is just now surprisingly like what the Academy of Music was a month ago. On the floor can be heard the purest negro oratory, varied sometimes by a horse-laugh when something occurs to tickle the Ethiopian fancy, while a glance up reveals a gallery as packed with darkies as was ever the upper tier of the St. Charles Theater. To this complexion have we come at last.—New Orleans Crescent.

IT IS proposed to ask the Legislature for a new parish to be made out of Caddo and Bossier.

UNIVERSAL AMNESTY.

The President has at last proclaimed and declared "unconditionally and without reservation, to every person who directly or indirectly participated in the late insurrection or rebellion, a full pardon and amnesty for the offence of treason against the United States, or of adhering to their enemies during the late civil war, with restoration of all their rights, privileges and immunities under the Constitution and the laws which have been made in pursuance thereof."

This gracious act, justly done on the birthday of the Prince of Peace, puts an end, so far, at least, as the President is concerned, to that war upon the Southern States which ought not, under no circumstances, to have been prosecuted beyond the day when the Confederate armies were disbanded and the Confederate States ceased to exist. Let us hope that the universal assent with which the people greet the President's act will inspire Congress with the same gracious spirit, and make it conform its legislation to the heartfelt desire of all for peace. Let it complete the good work which the President has begun, and give us real and perfect peace. Let it repeal all those harsh measures with which it has sought to fetter the Southern whites, and to punish their "rebellion" against the government. Let it repeal those hateful test-oaths and acts of disfranchisement which now wound the hearts and cripple the energies of the best and the most intelligent part of the Southern people. Let it again subordinate the military to the civil authority within those States, and re-establish that grand principle of self-government, which is the corner stone of our liberties and the source of all our prosperity.

For, after all, it rests with Congress to give full and complete effect to the President's proclamation of amnesty, and to "secure that permanent peace, order and prosperity throughout the land, and to renew and fully restore confidence and fraternal feeling among the whole people, and their respect for and attachment to the national government." His proclamation only protects the Southerners against prosecutions for treason. It does not restore to them the rights of which they have been deprived by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and by Congressional action; chief among which rights is the inalienable right to participate in the making and administration of their own laws.

The immediate and most important effect of the President's proclamation will be the dismissal of the proceedings against Mr. Jefferson Davis, and the return to this country of Mr. Breckinridge and the other Southern leaders against whom indictments have been pending. We presume that there are not a thousand people in all the land who will object to the release of Mr. Davis. There was a time, while the passions engendered by the war were still aflame, when the public sentiment of the North demanded that the people of the Confederate States should be punished and humiliated through their fallen president; but that time has long since passed.—We believe, indeed, that any time within the last two years the Northern people would have almost unanimously protested against the execution of Davis, even had he been duly convicted of treason.

The truth is, the President's proclamation of universal amnesty has been delayed too long; much longer than was demanded by the people; very much longer than was consistent with the best interests of the country. Had it been made in May, 1865, when he published his first amnesty, or even in September, 1867, when he published his second, much of the vindictive and ruinous legislation of Congress would either have never been enacted, or would have been neutralized and made harmless.

But we are in no mood to find fault. Let us rather applaud the President's wise and gracious act, and pray Congress to complete it, by re-enfranchising the Southern whites, and by repealing all the ex post facto laws with which it has sought to punish those who adhered to the Confederacy. Let Congress do this, and make the President's amnesty what it ought to be, what all real amnesties are, a complete oblivion and forgiveness of the offenses charged to have been committed. Let us have peace!—New York News.

IT IS a fine thing to ripen without shriveling, to reach the calmness of age and yet keep the warm heart and ready sympathy of youth.

THE TEXAS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has passed into the hands of Messrs. Veal & John, members of the Texas Conference. Both are enterprising in a high degree, and as able to command the support of the church in Texas as any two men in it. We copy from its highly interesting

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

The Waxahachie district meeting, which had met some time before at Weatherford, held an adjourned meeting at Waxahachie, beginning November 6. We found quite a large attendance of the official members. Bishop Doggett presided.

The principal item of business before the meeting was the selection of the site of a district college. Weatherford, Gathings' neighborhood, and Waxahachie were in the field. On Friday night, after addresses from Rev. J. W. P. McKenzie and Bishop Doggett, Brother Annis, the P. C. of Waxahachie station, called on its citizens to subscribe toward the erection of suitable college buildings in their town. Their response reached over $9,000, which was the next day increased to $12,000. On Saturday night, after a protracted discussion, it was resolved to locate the institution at Waxahachie. The representatives of that point pledged for it and vicinity the sum of $30,000. It is the wish of the members of the district meeting to make this the Conference college, whatever may be the decision of the Annual Conference. Waxahachie has won for itself a good name by this advance movement in the cause of education.

This district has been visited in a remarkable manner with revival power. From the report of the Committee on the State of the Church, we learned that there had been within its bounds nine hundred and thirty-nine conversions, and one thousand and thirty-one accessions to the church the past year. Additional reports at the Annual Conference will possibly swell these figures. Every circuit and station, and almost every appointment, has witnessed this revival influence. In addition to this increase, the district will send up a goodly number of recruits to the itinerant ranks. Brother Veal, the presiding elder, has been abundant in labors. Though crippled in the earlier part of the year, he has met all his appointments. He gave an evidence of his efficiency by presiding over three Quarterly Conferences at the same time, on Saturday of the district meeting. Putting the P. C. of each work in the chair, and collecting each body into a separate part of the house, he moved about, giving directions to the business of each Conference, so that all moved on without friction or jar. * * * * *

NORTHWEST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

The Conference opened Wednesday, November 11. Bishop Doggett had been suffering severely from exposure and illness during his trip, but was able to be in the chair; and after some earnest and impressive remarks, proceeded promptly to the business of Conference. When the roll was called no voice responded to two of the names: Rev. J. L. Crabb and J. N. Mullins had passed from labor to reward. Our sadness was mingled with holy triumph as we thought of their faithful lives and triumphant deaths.

The reports of the preachers showed unusual prosperity in every portion of the Conference. The conversions reported amount to two thousand six hundred and fifty-five, and the accessions to the church to two thousand four hundred and eighty-six. With such tokens of divine favor our people may "thank God and take courage." Throughout the Northwest Texas, as well as the Trinity Conference, we have unquestionably an earnest ministry and a living church. The past year had been full of trials, but they came to the Conference filled with that buoyant, hopeful spirit which men who are conscious that they are doing a great work can exhibit in the midst of privations. They had received but little money. It had been a scarce article in the region where they had traveled. One brother told us that he had seldom seen a dollar during the year, but his people had supplied his wants, furnishing him with meat and bread, clothing his family, and the tuition of his children at school, and he was ready to devote another year to the work with the same prospect of support. Another said, "I don't see how I have gotten along, but we have had enough to eat. My family have been comfortably clad, and I am willing to trust God for another year." We never meet such men but we feel exalted by our association with them.

The Northwest Texas Conference is now, in point of ministerial strength and membership, the leading Conference in our State. It has plenty of room for expansion. As the population, which is spreading over its rich black prairies, push the line of civilization far out into the Indian range, the field of church extension will be enlarged, until the question of division will again agitate the minds of its members. Its ranks are fast filling up. Quite a number of new recruits, and among them several young men, were admitted into the traveling connection. May God answer the prayer of his church, and as converts crowd our altars may men of God be sent forth to meet the growing wants of the church.

We listened with especial interest to the statement of Brother J. M. Johnson, presiding elder of Lampasas district. His work embraces the larger portion of the frontier work. Every mission in its bounds is more or less exposed to the raids of the Indians. It takes the same sort of heroism which enabled the apostle to contend with "wild beasts at Ephesus," to travel these border circuits, where every light moon brings the Comanche within their bounds. Brother Johnson reports Methodism firmly established in that region. The people rely on the Methodist preachers to bring them the Gospel message, and as they brave the perils and privations of frontier life to proclaim its promises, the hearts of the people not only answer the call, but regard with grateful affection these faithful ministers of the word. Though the frontier settlements have been driven in, families have been murdered, women and children carried into captivity, yet our church has been wonderfully prospered, and out of this scattered, suffering population, upward of five hundred have been gathered into the church.

In the examination of character the bishop bestowed especial attention to the obligation resting on the preacher to meet the classes to attend to their pastoral work and promote, both by precept and example, family religion among the membership. There is a manifest improvement in all these departments of ministerial usefulness, and the extraordinary increase is no doubt attributable in a large degree to this cause.

Much interest was manifested respecting the educational interests now under the care of the Conference, in those new movements which are being set on foot. The report of the committee was an able paper, in which the difficulties attending the establishment of permanent institutions of learning were forcibly stated, and the importance of wise plans and vigorous action clearly enforced. We left before final action was taken, and shall mark with interest the policy this young and growing Conference will adopt with reference to an interest so important to the church and society.

Numbers, North Georgia Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I send the grand totals. I owe an apology to Brother W. J. Cotter, who goes to the Grantville circuit, and to Brother J. N. Myers, who goes to the Acworth mission. The omission of their names was a mere clerical lapsus—the list being made out after one o'clock at night. Dr. Jesse Boring presented his "certificate of location" and was readmitted by a rising vote just before the adjournment. He is supernumerary at Wesley chapel, Atlanta.

A CHURCH ORGAN IN CHINA.

SHANGHAI, China, Aug. 12, 1868.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHINESE RECORDER—Dear Sir: The time seems now to have arrived for the introduction of that most important and useful adjunct to our missionary labors, to wit, a church organ; and as I am favorably situated at present for conducting such an enterprise, I would beg to notify brethren of the respective missions and others interested therein that arrangements for its issue are now quite complete.

It is to be exclusively Chinese, i. e., in the Chinese character, and to bear the title of Kiau Hwui Sing Bou, of octavo size, each copy to contain four or five sheets, i. e., eight or ten pages, and from five to seven thousand characters, with occasional Scripture and other illustrations. Its subject matter will be the same as that of similar periodicals in the West, modified to some extent, it may be, by our different circumstances; and its object the same—the diffusion of Christian and useful knowledge, to disseminate information and news of the churches, to offer a medium of communication between the native brethren, and afford a convenient record of the past and present history of the church in China for the present and future benefit of all concerned. It shall be conducted in all faithfulness and brotherly love, without partiality or bias of any kind, and afford, if possible, both to the Christian and the heathen an unequivocal testimony of "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

All the missionary brethren at Shanghai with whom I have had opportunity to communicate are in favor of it, and the native preachers and Christians without exception, so far as I have been able to hear, are delighted, and have promised their hearty co-operation.

A weekly issue is contemplated, and the first copy will perhaps be ready by the middle of September. The price suggested by the native preachers at this place, and fixed upon, is one Mexican dollar per annum, say for fifty copies, which amount, supposing it to have a paying circulation of five hundred copies, will, according to our present calculation, keep it from financial embarrassment. My services will be gratuitous, and the only expenses to meet will be for paper and printing, etc., and perhaps postage to some of the ports; to most it can be sent free.

Communications from both foreign and native brethren are solicited, and any brother, whether foreign or native, sending us ten dollars, together with the names and address of the subscribers, shall have a copy free. Brethren of the respective missions desirous of promoting such a periodical will kindly act as agents for the same.

Address YOUNG J. ALLEN,
Care Messrs. John Thorne & Co.,
Shanghai, China.

THE NEXT SENATE.—On the 4th of March next the terms of the following Senators expire: Bayard, of Delaware; Buckalew, of Pennsylvania; Chandler, of Michigan; Conness, of California; Dixon, of Connecticut; Doolittle, of Wisconsin; Edmunds, of Vermont; Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey; Henderson, of Missouri; Hendricks, of Indiana; Morgan, of New York; Morrill, of Maine; Patterson, of Tennessee; Ramsey, of Minnesota; Sprague, of Rhode Island; Stewart, of Nevada; Sumner, of Massachusetts; Tipton, of Nebraska; Van Winkle, of West Virginia; Wade, of Ohio; Welch, of Florida, and Whyte, of Maryland. Of these twenty-two Senators, only two, so far, have been re-elected—Messrs. Edmunds and Sprague, both Republicans. In California, Eugene Casserly, Democrat, has been elected to succeed Mr. Conness. In Connecticut, ex-Gov. Buckingham, Rep., has been elected to succeed Mr. Dixon, Democrat. Mr. Patterson, of Tennessee, son-in-law of President Johnson, will be succeeded by Parson Brownlow. Ohio will exchange Ben Wade for Judge Allen G. Thurman, Democrat, and Maryland, William Pinckney Whyte for William T. Hamilton, both Democrats. The Florida Legislature has elected Abijah Gilbert to succeed A. S. Welch. The latter gentleman, although he had been representing Florida in the Senate for the last six months, has never given up his residence in his own State of Iowa, where he will return after the 4th of March, to take charge of the State Agricultural College. He is the only Southern Senator who goes out with this Congress.

THE FIRST SNOW-FALL.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

"The snow had begun in the gloaming,
And busily all the night
Had been heaping field and highway
With a silence deep and white:

"Every pine and fir and hemlock
Wore ermine too dear for an earl,
And the poorest twig on the elm tree
Was ridged inch-deep with pearl.

"From shed new-roofed with Carrara
Came Chanticleer's muffled crow,
The stiff rails were softened to swan's-down,
And still fluttered down the snow.

"I stood and watched by the window
The noiseless work of the sky,
And the sudden flurries of snow-birds,
Like brown leaves whirling by.

"I thought of a mound in sweet Auburn,
Where a little headstone stood;
How the flakes were folding it gently,
As did robins the babes in the wood.

"Up spoke our own little Mabel,
Saying, 'Father, who makes it snow?'
And I told of the good All-father
Who cares for us here below.

"Again I looked at the snow-fall,
And thought of the leaden sky
That arched o'er our first great sorrow,
When that mound was heaped so high.

"I remembered the gradual patience
That fell from that cloud like snow,
Flake by flake, healing and hiding
The scar of our deep-plunged woe.

"And again to the child I whispered,
'The snow that husheth all,
Darling, the merciful Father
Alone can make it fall!'

"Then, with eyes that saw not, I kissed her;
And she, kissing back, could not know
That my kiss was given to her sister,
Folded close under deepening snow."

IN THE SADDLE AGAIN.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE,
December 21, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: Returned from Conference on Thursday last. A horse must be had for the new year. A generous friend has supplied me for two years past. I must now look about me for a Selrin or Bucephalus. The gospel must have transportation.—While thus musing a drover comes up. I am no jockey. Two of my stewards being near, I deliver over the trade to them. In fifteen minutes this deponent is in possession of a beautiful bay horse, for the moderate sum of $150.—How independent he feels! A horse of his own for the first time in thirteen years! Now he can obey the great command: "Go." Never feel so much at home as on horseback. How free, elastic, buoyant, strong! Can now run through a troop and leap over a wall. What a place for thinking is the back of a horse! How many thunderbolts have been forged there! How many grand thoughts have had their birth there! While musing, at this gentle elevation, how the soul is roused, and the heart all set aglow and astir with emotion, and the desires leap forward—the irrepressible longings—to do better and to do more for Christ's kingdom! What a place for self-searching, for introspection, looking inside as well as out, examining our motives, desires, plans, probing our selfishness, and discovering how mean and vile and low and sordid we are!

And sometimes the devil takes a trip with you. He whispers to you: "This is a very poor business you are at. Who cares for you? Here you ride through the mud, and over the ice and over the snow, while others are by their cheerful fire. There is your comrade at home, who has made money and to spare, and you are straitened, your coat threadbare, and your wife and children stinted, and may be suffering." He has his outside comforts, but you have inside blessings. Whip up. You will soon be at New Prospect. Soon you are in sight. The brethren greet you warmly. You are soon on your knees begging for help. The power of the Highest overshadows you. He that liveth and was dead is by you, and is alive forever more, and reveals his life in you. There is power in your preaching because Jesus is in it, and a good sister meets you and tells you she is very glad you are returned to the circuit, and tells you how much good the sermon has done her, and you see the glistening dew-drop on her face, and you forget for the time your coat and the humble board at home, and your soul feasts and laughs and grows fat.

Preached twice on yesterday. House well filled in the morning. Received four members into the church, and took the name of one candidate. Two of these were the head of a large family. The Lord be praised.

Went to dinner with a Baptist brother. He encouraged me by saying: "We raised $50 for you last year, and could have raised $100 easily." This is a week-day appointment, and a small membership, and paid nothing two years ago.

We are beginning the new ecclesiastical year auspiciously. Let us to our knees and our work. Let us strive by the Lord's help to push the battle to the enemy's gate—to stem the tide of ungodliness that threatens to sweep over the land. On, comrades, on! The foe is crafty, sleepless, mighty, subtle. Put on all your armor. Despise your own strength. "Go forth in his great might." On, fellow-itinerants, on! Let us, by God's help, upheave society and make it right. The prevailing morals taught are all wrong. The divine law—the golden rule—must not yield to expediency or to circumstances.

"Arm, warriors, arm for fight!"

Amen. Your's, BEBER.

TO THE YOUNGER MEMBERS OF MY CONFERENCE.

MY DEAR BRETHREN: You will probably allow me to say a few things to you, such as I think you will see tend to religious usefulness and the elevation of ministerial character among us.

Our last annual session at Vicksburg was, I think, one of the most profitable the Conference has ever had. Last year put many of us to a pretty severe test. It was a hard year. But the meeting and greeting, and comparison of notes, brought out signs of improvement. Every one seemed to look on the brightest side. The country is improving, the church is improving. We will take courage.

Our need of more pastors is apparent, particularly young men without families, who can go anywhere. For supply we must look to ourselves. Keep your eye on the young men of the church.—Good preachers are sometimes found in the most unlikely looking places. Notice the young men who come into the church. Seek opportunities to make them acquainted with themselves. The Sunday school is a first rate place to invite them forward. May be they possess the elements of a preacher. Try them in conversation. Test their sense of personal responsibility. Bring them forward in family prayer, in your own family and elsewhere. Send them to talk with others about religion. Many will hear a layman who will not listen to you.

Look for preachers, also, out of the church. Very many preachers—that is, those Divinity designated for preachers—are out of the church. Don't let any young man escape your observation. Approach him socially—then closely, but carefully. Be his friend, though the enemy of his wickedness and irreligion, and he will soon find it out and esteem you for it. All men are grateful and kind-hearted. If you think you see something in a man that points toward the ministry, you will be able to adopt many ways of probing it to the bottom. You can make an extensive reconnoissance without intimating anything on the subject directly to him. If you suspect him, pray for him, specially, personally, directly. In some way—I don't know how—he will feel it. It will get to him.

In searching for preachers, look among all classes, high and low—of the best and the poorest religious and literary opportunities; and not only among men, but among boys. Who knows how old persons must be before they are personally designated, by the Almighty, for the ministry? Who knows but it is always from childhood?

Before I dismiss this point I might mention that our Conference requested me to publish an essay on The Call to the Ministry, which I did. I feel the more free to speak of this because Bishop Andrew, Dr. Summers and several other editors, and others, highly recommended its circulation.—Bishop Andrew expressed a great desire, for reasons which he stated, that it might be largely distributed and read, particularly by young men.

Our religious literature contains very little on this subject. Indeed this is almost the only essay I know of wholly devoted to it. It is for sale at the Publishing House at Nashville, at about the cost of publication—say, including postage, about six for $1. I have also a few, sent me to sell, at the same price.

There are two or three other matters which, with the permission of the editor, I will call your attention to in the future.

Your's affectionately,

"FIRING AT THE CRISIS."

ST. LANDRY PARISH, LA.,
December 5, 1868.

MR. EDITOR: I propose the question again to all whom it may concern: Shall we have evangelic or church theaters? This is a plain question, but it is evidently misapprehended. It does not involve the question of amusements in the abstract. The question is: Shall we adopt a system of amusements as a church plan? Will "New Iberia" admit the following conclusions, drawn from his premises: "There are and should be amusements," therefore there is no impropriety in the action of the church providing or supervising them. "Pious people bring their children and strain their eyes to see torchlight processions, transparencies, humorous mottoes," etc., therefore the church can with propriety get up such exhibitions. "Verdant visitors to your great city are delighted and entranced sight-seers," therefore the church can with propriety furnish transportation for their benefit, or tax their verdancy for her own. If these conclusions were not intended, then "New Iberia" has been "firing at the crisis." No enemy to invent amusements was near. If he says they are logical deductions, then I will take his argument and show that there is no impropriety in having church theaters. If there is no harm in an occasional dramatic or any other theatric exhibition, supervised by church wardens, then there is no harm in an organized theater, with scientific performers, under the direction of the same wardens.—Will the church superintend only the elementary department, where the tastes and tendencies of the young begin, and then turn them out to graduate, she knows not where? Why a man with only one eye can see the result. We insist that the church should admit no person or plan on probation that she will be ashamed to receive in full fellowship by confirmation.—There are many things useful and innocent that should not be allowed to join the church, and neither "New Iberia" nor any other real Christian would seek to place the church in a position where the shadow of reproach would be cast upon her sacred character. The spirit of John Wesley lives and works in the Methodist Church, and it will never change his old plan of church improvement and extension till doomsday. Your's truly,

P. BRUCE.

TRUST IN GOD.—For those who trust him, God keeps in his great storehouse manifold blessings; and though one should come disguised under the form of "tribulation," an infinite love will send with it the good angels of Trust and Patience, who will show you light in the darkness, and teach you to find heavenly joy in earthly sorrow.

MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION, PRESENTED TO THE MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE, GREENVILLE, ALABAMA, DECEMBER 9-16, 1868.

NUMBER TWO.—CONTINUED FROM LAST WEEK.

Once again, upon the plan presently proposed, we beg you to seek out such young men as feel already the movings of the Spirit, urging them to the work of the ministry. Send them up to "the school of the prophets," where they may learn "to behave themselves wisely in a perfect way," where they may grow in stature and in wisdom, where they may increase in favor both with God and man. Put away the enthusiastic doctrine that, with the call of the Spirit, God imparts, with plenary beneficence, all requisite qualifications for the solemn functions of the sacred office. Let no brother so judge of us, as though we spake heresy against the opinions of the fathers. If a man be called to the ministry in mature life, when opportunity has passed and leisure is denied, and occasions of mental enlargement no more invite; when habits of thought are fixed, and tastes are irreversibly settled, and intellectual processes run their little rounds in long-accustomed grooves; when sustained toil of mind is intolerable and scholarly acquirements in any direction are impossible; if the call lie heavy upon his heart and the voice of the Master ring loudly in his ears; if the burden of his spirit cause him to groan inwardly with unspeakable yearnings over his dying fellow-men, and the joy of his soul be to sound the trumpet and call the charge, and dash into the thick of the fight, with the "holy turbulence" of an impassioned Peter—let such a man gird up his loins, and stay not upon the order of his going. Let him not stop to try on Saul's armor, for as he runs God shall give into his hands munitions of war, though they be but smooth stones of the brook; God shall give bread for the multitude, though, like the lad in the Gospels, he have but five loaves and two small fishes. But when youth and opportunity conspire with the unmistakable call of the Spirit; when a noble rage for learning fires the opening mind, and the soul of the boy longs, with irrepressible ardor, to enter upon the limitless domain of knowledge; when the busy hours of the day are full of plans for self-improvement, and the snatches of leisure are husbanded with delicious self-denial, and the dreams of night are radiant with the far-seen splendors of a lofty intellectual companionship, let such an one be trained in a suitable novitiate, as was Samuel at the hands of Eli, and let us with pious diligence send annually to the lad the little coat, wet with tears of wrestling, and broidered with golden threads of prayer. And there, in that blessed stage of preparation, though there be no "open vision" in Israel, the devout soul shall catch, in the night watches, such thrilling messages of God as shall make men's ears tingle when they hear the prophetic burden!

We frequently hear from the pulpit emotional allusions to the rude and illiterate characteristics of the early apostles and evangelists who attended upon the ministry of our Lord. We hear pathetic references to the unlearned fishermen of Galilee. Even the illustrious Apostle Paul is sometimes spoken of, with patronizing complacency, as the great itinerant, the speaker, in his glowing declamation, wholly subordinating the wonderful intellectual abilities and profound learning and masterly powers of epistolary composition, through which the apostolic mind glows and burns along the Christian ages, to the apostle's connection with the early missionary efforts of the primitive church. In our zeal to exalt the divine and all-sufficient spiritual efficacy of a call to preach the Gospel, we are in danger of drawing hasty and inconclusive inferences. That little band of devoted men, who constituted the nucleus of Christian discipleship, deserves our reverential admiration. Learned men they were not, in the modern sense. Yet were it equally a misnomer to pronounce them illiterate. The probability is that they spoke and read, with correctness and colloquial felicity, the Hebrew and the Greek tongues, two of the most difficult idioms of antiquity, the latter the most elaborate, refined and spirituelle language of the ancient world. Some of them unquestionably understood, in addition, the Latin, the language of the Roman legal and military tribunals, the spoken and written tongue of their political masters. Certainly no man of intelligence will be so hardy as to speak of the evangelists as illiterate. Matthew, it is believed, wrote his Gospel both in Hebrew and in Greek. Mark is the most vivid and graphic of biographers, catching look and tone and fold of drapery and sweep of gesture, and fixing them before our gaze forever. Luke was himself an educated physician, polished by travel and adventure in many a foreign clime. St. John, writing his Gospel at Ephesus, amidst the waning splendors of the heathen worship, grasps the very weapons of the prevalent Neoplatonic philosophy, and in the sublimest utterances of the New Testament sets forth the pre-existent glory and eternal sonship of the word of God.

Never was there a greater demand than now for educated ministerial labor. Infidelity, though often foiled, as often renews the fearful struggle upon new fields of endeavor. We need trained and polished intellects to meet and grapple with the Protean foe. Everywhere before the Christian minister spread out inviting fields of study, in which fresh victories may be won in the Master's cause. Yet where are our men furnished to the work of repelling the assaults of the learned skepticism of the present time? Had the burden of the refutation of Straus' Mythical Theory rested upon the Methodist Church, where should we have found the champion prepared for the strife? Were it imposed upon us to answer, upon the basis of scientific truth, the infidel cavils of Nott and Gliddon, drawn from their ethnological studies, who of our number would step into the arena? Where are our astute metaphysicians who can expose and explode the offensive materialism of Herbert Spencer? Should we be met by the insidious scientific speculations of the learned and ingenious Darwin, where is our master of learning competent to accept the wager of battle? Much as we may decry the heretical views of Renan, where are our learned Oriental scholars who have sounded the depths of Hebrew and Arabic literature needful to challenge his numerous citations, and to refute his conclusions upon his own chosen ground of debate? True they have been met and answered, each and all, well and thoroughly, but with little help from our learning or scholarship. Without enlarging upon this suggestive topic, we offer these thoughts as tending to evince the urgent necessity that exists for the most liberal education of young men preparing for the ministry.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Rev. WILLIAM VENABLE died at the residence of his son-in-law, Walter K. Carruth, in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, on the 12th of November, 1868, in his eighty-second year. He was born near Liverpool, England, April 25, 1787.

He became religious and joined the Wesleyan Methodists at the age of fourteen years, from which he never swerved. He emigrated to the United States, in company and under the care of Rev. Lorenzo Dow, when about twenty years of age. Landing in New York, they remained only a short time. They pursued their way to the Ohio river, and came down that river to Jefferson county, Mississippi, where together Dow and Venable carried on milling for some years.

Here Brother Venable married Miss Mathews, sister of the late Rev. John Mathews, about 1809, by which marriage there were six children, only two of whom remain. She also died in the faith in 1818.

In 1822 he married Miss Sarah Watson, sister of the late Rev. Jas. Watson, of the Mississippi Conference, by whom there were fifteen children, of whom only two remain. This wife died, in sight of heaven, in 1839.

In 1841 he married Miss Sarah Lewis, by whom there were two children, both of whom died. Sister Venable, after suffering much affliction for several years, also died in the faith.

Brother Venable was licensed to exhort and preach by the Methodist Episcopal Church in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, but I have no means of ascertaining the time. He has been an acceptable working local elder at least a quarter of a century. He had the unbounded confidence of the community. He was a fast friend to the itinerant preachers. His house and purse were ever open to them. Of a robust constitution, he labored much—constantly, willingly, anxiously—for he looked for the recompense of reward. He was arrested by disease a year ago. His strength overcame it for a time; but relapse came, and he suffered greatly, but with resignation. Whenever asked of his prospects, his answer was: "All is clear. All right." Anxiously he looked for the time of release, that he might join those three holy women, with whom he had spent a pleasant and happy life, and his nineteen children, whom he had given back to the God who gave them, as also nearly all his early Christian friends, among whom was the beloved Dow; but, above all, his Saviour.

"The voice at midnight came;
He started up to hear;
A mortal arrow pierced his frame;
He fell, but felt no fear."

We conveyed his body to the church, where the writer preached a sermon over his remains to a large and weeping congregation, who followed them to the place of interment. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." Your's, in the Gospel of peace, JOS. NICHOLSON.

SPAIN.—The "Annual of Public Instruction," published in Madrid, shows that there are at this time in Spain and the adjacent Spanish islands twenty-seven thousand schools for young children, attended, according to the last census, by one million five hundred thousand pupils. There are seventy seven normal institutions for the training of teachers, and five establishments for the education of the deaf and blind. Of higher academic schools there are two of the first class, sixteen of the second, thirty-two of the third, and fourteen local institutions. There are ten universities for teaching the law, medicine, the sciences, literature, philosophy and theology. There are eleven special schools for the study of the fine arts, one for music and elocution, two for manufactures, one for diplomacy, five for commerce, and seventeen for navigation. There are twenty-nine boarding schools, and one hundred and eighteen private establishments. More than two and a half millions of dollars are annually paid from the public funds for the support of these schools, while the additional sums raised by the different provinces and the communes increase the total amount annually expended in education to about twelve millions. Spain abounds in large and valuable libraries. Nothing but the most oppressive of governments and a superstitious and depressing system of religious belief, could have kept her from holding the conspicuous rank among the educated peoples of the nineteenth century that she held politically under Charles V. and Philip II.

In the Spanish national libraries there are one million one hundred and sixty-six thousand five hundred and ninety-five volumes. The library of Madrid contains three hundred thousand books; that of the Central University three hundred thousand, of Barcelona one hundred and thirty six thousand, and of Salamanca fifty-five thousand. No nation has exhibited more vigilance in watching over its public archives. The whole history of the country, internal and external, and for long periods that of the whole civilized world, are embodied in the immense treasures of manuscripts, carefully filed and preserved. Packages of such invaluable papers, to the number of over seventy thousand, are stored in the old palace of Simancas; ninety-seven thousand in the National Historical Record office; thirty-five thousand at Alcala de Henares; and thirty-four thousand in the archives of the Crown of Aragon. Our historians have revoled among these dusty alcoves, and enriched the literature of the world out of their buried treasures. Irving, and Prescott, and Bancroft, and Motley, and Kirk, have here found the inspirations and the materials for their fascinating pages. New York Christian Advocate.

THIS WORLD A FLEETING SHOW.

MOORE.

This world is all a fleeting show,
For man's illusion given;
The smiles of Joy, the tears of Woe,
Deceitful shine, deceitful flow—
There's nothing true but Heaven.

And false the light on Glory's plume,
As fading hues of Even;
And Love, and Hope, and Beauty's bloom,
Are blossoms gather'd for the tomb—
There's nothing bright but Heaven!

Poor wanderers of a stormy day,
From wave to wave we're driven,
And Fancy's flash, and Reason's ray,
Serve but to light the troubled way—
There's nothing calm but Heaven.

Report of Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Montgomery Conference, M. E. Church South.

Since the last anniversary of the society, the condition of the country and the straitened circumstances of our treasury have prevented very enlarged operations in the field of missionary effort. That it should have been otherwise is a wish shared by every lover of our Lord Jesus. From the minutes it appears there are but nine domestic missions recognized and supported by our Conference. This, with a very small contribution to the foreign work in China, constitutes the measure of the apparent missionary effort of nearly thirty thousand of Christ's followers, whose religious boast is that their organization is Christianity in earnest. While the figures which appear do not fully represent our missionary effort, inasmuch as we have supplimented the salaries of a limited number of our preachers who have labored during the year in partially destitute fields, still it must be admitted the exhibit we make is in strange contradiction with our boast and character.

The keen eye of the Christian world has not been asleep to this fact, and the charge has been reproachfully made that ours is not a missionary church. In certain influential quarters it has been rather sneeringly said that in estimating the missionary effort of the Christian world, the Southern Methodist Church is not to be counted—her contributions being so very small as not materially to affect the general estimate. That this should be said of us, who claim to be the vanguard of Christ's militant hosts—ever ready to enter and cultivate any moral waste—is strikingly significant and calculated to impress us with the most painful emotions. There is some truth in the assertion, though the impression sought to be made is more to our damage as a church than it should be.

Our whole system is partially on a missionary basis. And in these times many of our ministers who draw nothing from the missionary treasury, may be said to do missionary work—and that too largely at their personal expense. It is likely not twenty members of the Montgomery Conference have been so supported since the war as to be above the necessity of supplimenting their salaries with their individual means and exertions. And it is with feelings of gratification bordering on pride that we witness the heroic spirit of sacrifice with which our ministers, regardless of poverty, loss and toil, have gone through our bounds repairing the wastes of the last few years, relieving the needy, soothing the disconsolate and preaching Jesus everywhere.—Scarcely a corner of our territory has failed to receive a visit from some one of these evangelists of our blessed Lord.

We may well ask what would the country do for the Gospel but for the minister of our church? Most truly may we boast that we give the Gospel to the people at home; and the reproach that we are not a missionary church is unjust in the sense of our being devoid of interest in the great work and not giving the Gospel to the destitute in our midst.

But we cannot deny that in zeal for the work abroad we are not abreast with many other evangelical churches. Leaving out our Indian missions, which properly are of the domestic character, we have but two missionaries—and they feebly supported—representing us in the foreign work. To say this is the measure of the ability of nearly seven hundred thousand members is to make a confession of poverty and weakness our condition will not guarantee, and but few of us are willing to allow. With the light of experience shining fully upon us, we are forced to see that the mistake of former years was in magnifying what was called the domestic work among the slaves of the South to such an extent as to weaken our sympathies for other interests and partially to blind us to other fields of religious effort.

The cry, "the Greeks are at your doors," seems to have startled and confused us to such an extent as to hush the melting voice of the multiplied millions who from the depths of the deepest moral gloom and death asked us for light and salvation; and we rarely stopped to inquire if there was the taint of selfishness in all our boasted liberality. While the fruit of our labor among the slaves is seen in the quiet subordination and general good conduct of the freedmen of the present day—which gratifies us as much as it astonishes the world—still as a people and a church we cannot repress a sigh that in the days of our abundance we were so blinded as to satisfy our consciences, and vainly try to satisfy God, by a great show of missionary zeal and liberality in a work we should have recognized as a part of the claim of our own household upon us. The fact that some men would do nothing to give their domestics the Gospel was not enough to have induced and continued our policy to the extent to which it governed us, for it is a mistaken opinion that every man at home must be preached to and converted before the church can properly look abroad.

This idea would have confined the ministrations of the apostles to the region around Jerusalem, and Paul never would have preached in Athens nor founded a church in Rome.

Limiting our operations to home interests, we rarely look to the perishing millions of the pagan world. We seem not to know that a majority of our race never heard of the Saviour. Asia, the seat of the early churches and region where the apostles chiefly preached, has to-day only about 13,000,000 of professing Christians out of an estimated population of 798,600,000; and many of her Christians are only such in name. Africa, with 188,000,000, has but 4,900,000 professing Christians. A moral night, as dark and seemingly as permanent and hopeless as the color of the inhabitants, has settled upon her arid plains and marshy fens. And the islands of the sea stretch out their hands also and cry for help. In short, out of an aggregate population of 1,250,200,000 there is only a Christian population of 369,400,000. In other words, nearly three out of every four of earth's vast family are entirely ignorant not only of the principles of the Gospel, but of the very name and character of the Saviour. "And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent." With this vast destitution before us our ideas and efforts of a missionary character have been mainly bounded by the horizon of our former plantations and the spiritual necessities of our own domestics. Is it strange that the Lord of the vineyard has taken away our talents from us? The Christian world has been in motion all the while, but we have not been provoked either to emulation or good works. Even their taunts have not aroused us from our inaction in the missionary cause.

That we may see how we appear by contrast let us look for awhile at the operations of some of the leading churches of the United States.

The Methodist Episcopal Church North numbers 1,144,763. Her missionary contributions for 1867 were $680,000, and she supports missions in West Africa, India, China, Polynesia, and in North and South America and in various parts of Europe. She supports 2,341 missionaries and gives the Gospel to 75,954 members in her distant fields. Her church extension society last year raised over $60,000. And the whole church last year—the centenary of American Methodism—by a united effort raised for colleges, theological schools and other church interests, over $7,000,000.

The Baptists, for foreign and home missions, raised $328 804. They have missions in Birmah, farther India, China and Siam, and 90 American missionaries, with 300 native assistants and 16,000 members, in those fields. Besides this they have sent out and supported missionaries in almost every kingdom in Europe, until they now have 1,300 stations and out stations, many of which are returning money to the parent treasury.

The American Board of Foreign Missions raised last year $448,000.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign and Domestic Missions and Church Extension Society (O. S.) raised last year $411 637. They support missions in Africa, India, Siam, China, Japan, and North and South America.

The Presbyterians (N. S.) raised $238,849 for foreign and domestic missions. They support 43 foreign missionaries, and missions in Africa, Turkey, Syria, Southern and Eastern Asia, Pacific Islands, and among the North American Indians. The reformed Dutch Church, for foreign and domestic missions, raised $144,738. They have missions in China, India and Japan, and 26 missionaries and assistants.

United Brethren in Christ—a sect unknown among us, numbering 97,982 members—support 3 missionaries in the foreign work, 81 on the frontier and 127 in the home field. It is said the Moravians have one foreign missionary for every sixty members at home.

Time would fail me to speak of the activity and vast labors of the Roman Catholics, and of the energy and liberal donations of the Congregationalists, Protestant Episcopalians, and of almost every other sect in the United States, in the blessed work of sending the Gospel to the poor and benighted of other lands. And a comparison of the operations of the various missionary societies of England—including the Wesleyan, which is abreast with the first—and of France, and Germany, and the Propaganda in Rome, with what we are doing is well calculated to make us pause, reflect and ask, is it true we are a branch of the vanguard of Christ's militant hosts?

As we have seen above, our brethren of Christendom have been moving, and laboring, and giving to light up the waste places of the pagan world, while our operations abroad, at least, have been so limited as scarcely to be considered worthy of mention in the general estimate.

The spirit of self-sacrifice seems not to be upon us. Long years have passed since any young man has stepped forward with the spirit and heroism of the sainted Belton and said—"send me."

Painful and humiliating as these facts are, they are nevertheless true, and while they reflect on the enterprise and liberality of the church at large, it is not to be denied that with the ministry rests a large share of the blame. Not that they have been slow to give of the little they have, or not in sympathy with the work, but because they have failed with due faithfulness and constancy to plead for the heathen and to urge God's claims on us in their behalf. I am satisfied, when the mind of the church is fully enlightened on this subject and the heart touched, there will be no difficulty in procuring men and means for any work; it matters not how distant or arduous it may be.

This is the work before us—to bring our membership up to a knowledge of their privileges and obligations in this regard. No plan can more effectually do this than that our society has so wisely adopted. Let each pastor early in the year see every member of his charge, as our regulations require, and present the subject of missions to his prayerful consideration. Let him take time, carry with him his statistics and be fortified with scriptures bearing on this Christian duty, and very soon, instead of hundreds, we shall control thousands of dollars, and our brethren, Allen and Lambuth, who now so nobly represent us among 477,500,000 of earth's population, will shout for joy at the swelling tide of missionary co-laborers coming to their help in their heaven-appointed labor.

It is a striking and instructive fact that those who have followed the society's plan of operations have usually succeeded in raising the amounts assessed to their charges.

The plea of the poverty of the people won't do as an excuse for inaction so long as the example of the widow's two mites and Christ's endorsement of her course is a part of the Bible. That little incident—so beautiful as an act of simple trust in God—shows most powerfully that withholding from the Lord enriches no one, and giving to his treasury sends no one supperless to bed.

M. S. ANDREWS.

ROMISH SCHOOLS.

"Yes, my son goes to a Catholic school; but the teachers never bother him about matters of faith; the instruction is tolerable, though not thorough; the care is unremitting, and so I continue to let him go." Such is the language of thousands of American fathers, every one of whom would be horrified with the belief that one of his children could be induced, by any means, to accept the dogmas and the polity of the Romish church. Whether this son is in danger or not from the contamination of Romish theological doctrine, it is not ours to inquire. His change of faith, if he be of mature years, is his business, not ours. It is not with that branch of the subject that we propose to deal. Our purpose is to point out the fact, that every Protestant pupil in a Romish school is an encouragement, moral and pecuniary, of that bad spirit which is gathering all possible strength, far and near, for an assault upon the system of popular education which has made this country what it is. Every such pupil is boasted of as a living proof of the imperfection of the Protestant system, and of the necessity of replacing it by such instruction as the church affords. Every dollar paid is a contribution to intolerance and bigotry which will by and by address themselves to the destruction of religious liberty in this land. And what we say in relation to the patronage of schools established, is doubly true of schools contemplated, which are asking, nay, demanding, aid from Protestant carelessness and liberality. To say, No! with emphasis when such demands for help are made, is the imperative duty of every friend of free institutions everywhere. The American people have, with rare liberality, though overwhelmingly Protestant in their religious preferences, decreed that education in their public schools shall be non-sectarian.—These schools are open and free to all. They have proved their beneficence in a way not to be disputed. To them all may go, Catholic and Protestant alike, on a footing of equality. There is no valid reason why they should not have the support and patronage of Catholic parents, and the constant presence of all Catholic children. Nothing but the fear of education without the taint of sectarian basis, as a means of religious and political enlightenment, has made the priesthood their deadly enemy. Nothing but the desire to mold the youth of the country to their purposes, political as well as theological, has spurred that priesthood on to such prodigious exertion to maintain the schools of their choice, in which the youthful mind is poisoned at the beginning, by the preposterous pretensions and revolting fables of the church. We would not have Protestant money or Protestant encouragement bless their exertions.—Catholicism is ultimately deadly to human liberty, and he is careless or criminal who promotes it.

In this country, the war between the opposing forces—Catholicism as the representative of authority, on the one hand, and of Protestantism as the representative of freedom, on the other—will probably be one in which only words will be invoked. The great primary battle is for the education of the young. The Catholics have recognized this fact from the first; and their constant endeavor has been to hold the power over that education in their hands. For a like purpose they are imperiling the peace of a large part of Europe, and for this they are moving all their available forces in the United States. Their partial success in wringing from the Protestants of this country a support of their schemes, proves only how wary they are and how thoughtless their Protestant helpers have been. It is time that public attention was called to the danger of not only sending Protestant children to Catholic schools, but of using Protestant money to give these schools the foundations on which they rest. The poison of papal pretension runs through them all. It is in the history, the moral philosophy, the metaphysics—in all they teach. Theology, especially of the Catholic sort, is, where firmly held, an all-pervading force in the mind of the holder. It shapes opinion, colors fact, distorts history, warps the reason, and perverts imagination. Unconsciously it crops out in everything. Say that there is no intention of proselyting, or of turning the mind of the young pupil from its Protestant rectitude, and we reply that the intention will make no difference in the fact—the teacher is the mouth piece through which theology speaks. Our institutions are the result of a revolution, the seeds of which are inherited from the days of 1644. Can any Catholic tell the story of that date, or of any of the modern upheavals of revolutionary energy? What son of the church could be trusted to write of the French revolution? What Catholic priest does not regard that great tragedy, which gave light and hope to half of Europe, as the war of the adversary? What American wants his son or his daughter to be instructed in the Catholic estimate of the events of 1848? Yet in all Catholic schools in which history is taught, it is history with a theological gloss. Republicanism and democracy have historical as well as moral foundations. Do American parents desire to sap the foundations of the political creed in which they believe?—Chicago Evening Post

THE EXECUTIONS AT ROME.—In Paris an immense sensation was created among the lower orders by the execution of Monti and Togneti by the pope. M. Marcello Ranzi sent to the Opinione Nationale a copy of a letter he addressed to Pius IX, in which, in vigorous language, he reproaches his holiness for having caused this scandal. The letter occupies two columns, and in it M. Marcello Ranzi enumerates the number of heads that have already fallen from the scaffold with the pope's sanction. Among other victims, we are reminded of the fate of Giardini and his four companions; of the three custom house officers, who ascended the scaffold singing a stanza from "Marino Falioro;" of Count Simoncelli, a relative of the Pius, guillotined in spite of the tears and prayers of his own family, who knelt at his feet, crying out "Misericordia, Holy Father, for the innocent!" of Castantini, the young sculptor, aged twenty, likewise beheaded, although falsely accused of participation in the murder of Count Rossi; of that of Grandoni, who shared the imprisonment of Castantini, and who preferred strangling himself in his dungeon rather than ascend the scaffold. To this frightful list must be added another victim, whose guilt was never proved, Locatelli, and who yet was sacrificed to papal vengeance.

FARM AND GARDEN.

WINTER MANAGEMENT OF SHEEP

There is no part of the United States, if there is of the world, where sheep are not better for some degree of winter shelter. In western Texas and in the Gulf States perhaps they demand no more than a polo-shed or dense clump of trees to break the fury of the "northers;" north of latitude forty degrees, to forty two degrees, close barns or stables, with abundant ventilation, are beginning to be preferred by careful and systematic breeders. Open sheds are too much exposed to drifting snow, and they cannot be shut up and made warm enough for early lambing. A room twenty by forty feet in the clear will properly accommodate seventy-five Paular sheep, and they can all eat at a time, without crowding, at wall racks placed around it. The Infantados want a little more room; and the English breeds still more. Sheep barns should be placed in dry, elevated, but not windy situations. They are usually two stories high, the upper one being used for the storage of hay. The sheep stables underneath should be at least seven or eight feet high. A room large enough to hold one hundred and fifty Merinos may be partitioned across the middle by feeding racks, and seventy-five sheep kept on each side—their outside yards being also divided—but not more than one hundred and fifty ought to breathe the atmosphere of the same general apartment, however it may be divided on the floor. The rooms should be well lighted, capable of abundant ventilation, and that ventilation constantly employed. Confined, impure air is highly injurious to sheep, and perfectly fatal if a dangerous epizootic makes its appearance in the flock. The slatted box rack is now generally preferred in sheep barns and yards. The stables should be kept well littered down, and should be thoroughly cleaned out at least three times during the winter, so that the sheep should not lie, especially during thaws, on fermenting beds of manure. It is well, at intermediate periods, to scatter gypsum over the manure before covering it with fresh straw, as this absorbs the escaping gases, and adds greatly to the value of the manure. Sheep yards should, if practicable, be on dry gravelly ground, and should have at least three times as much area as the stables. They should have high, tight fences on the sides most exposed to severe winter winds, and should be kept well littered down. Habitual exposure to mud and filth is highly injurious to sheep.

The close confinement of sheep to stables and small yards operates on them as it does on all other domestic animals: it renders them torpid in habit, and promotes the taking on of fat and flesh. This is well for fattening sheep, but not for breeding ewes. The want of exercise and the increase of condition promotes that tendency to plethora which is natural to pregnancy, and though the evil effects of this are not always visible in the offspring, yet there come seasons when other co-operating conditions render it highly destructive. The lambs are yeaned small and weak, and those that live are of but little value. Breeding ewes should have exercise by having access, at proper times, to a field, or obtain it in some other way.

Water is indispensable to sheep fed on dry feed in the winter, and they should have constant access to it. Salt is also indispensable to vigorous health. It is improper to salt sheep-hay heavily when it is put in the mow or stack, or to brine all their hay for them at intervals, because in either case the instincts of the animals are not left to guide its consumption. Salt should be placed in boxes in the sheep house so that they can eat it at will; or the orts taken from the rack may be brined and put in a large rack kept for that purpose where the sheep can come to it at their pleasure.

It is estimated that all sheep daily consume, in the average winter weather of the Northern States, about one pound of hay, or its equivalent, for every thirty pounds of their own live weight. All that they will eat of meadow hay is about the amount of nutrition demanded by the Merino sheep in good, plump, store condition. If a portion of concentrated food like grain is given, its excess of nutrition may be safely counterbalanced by feeding a corresponding amount of food less nutritious than hay, as, for example, straw. Barley and oat straw, if cut and cured green, are highly relished by sheep. Wheat straw is less so, and they will eat but little besides the chaff and heads of it, if they can obtain other food. Rye straw, unless chopped fine and mixed with meal, is wholly unfitted for sheep feed. Pea-haulm, if cured green, is an admirable fodder, but dry and dead, as it is generally gathered, it is wholly valueless except for manure. The blades and tops of nicely cured cornstalks make prime sheep feed. Fine red clover hay, cured bright and green, is better than the best meadow hay and on a full winter allowance of it sheep actually fatten; it is also highly favorable to the milk secretions in breeding ewes. The grains and pulse most used in our country for sheep feed are oats, corn and peas. Oats are given to store sheep and lambs; corn is given to fatten sheep, and with some it is a favorite for all other classes of sheep. Some excellent feeders, like Mr. Johnson, of Geneva, New York, employ buckwheat. Peas are fed in a few instances to breeding ewes, and they greatly promote the growth of wool and the secretion of milk, but they are too scarce and expensive for common use. The same is true of beans, though they are accounted among sheep breeders more heating, and therefore less suitable feed. Bran and shorts, mixed with a little grain, make a most excellent feed both for lambs and old sheep. Bran slop is admirable for promoting the secretion of milk in yeaning ewes. Breeding ewes thrive better, and are better prepared in their general physical condition to bring forth well-developed, strong lambs, if they habitually receive green food during the winter, and other sheep are healthier for it. Colic or "stretches," often so serious a malady among flocks confined to dry feed, does not attack sheep that get green feed. In regions adapted to their culture, Swedes and some other varieties of the turnip are especially adapted to this object. There is a beet which was brought from Silesia by Mr. William Chamberlain, (not the variety sold in seed stores as the Silesian beet,) which some persons who have tried them prefer to turnips. Either root is vastly cheaper than grain of any description for the feed of sheep. Carrots have been tried and do not give satisfaction, and potatoes are too expensive.

Regularity in feeding is one of the important points of successful sheep farming, and consists in strict regularity in the time of feeding, and in proportioning the amount of fodder to the want of the animal. With good attention to these particulars, sheep will do better on moderate keep than on the best food fed with irregularity.—American Stock Journal.

SUNDAY.

If Sunday had not been observed as a day of rest during the last three centuries, I have not the smallest doubt that we should have been at this moment a poorer and less civilized people than we are.—Lord Macaulay.

There is no religion without worship, and no worship without the Sabbath.—Count Montalembert.

The more faithfully he applied himself to the duties of the Lord's day, the more happy and successful was his business during the week. Sir Matthew Hale.

A corruption of morals usually follows the profanation of the Sabbath.—Blackstone.

The Sabbath, as a political institution, is of inestimable value, independently of its claims to divine authority.—Adam Smith.

Sunday is a day of account, and a candid account every seventh day is the best preparation for the great day of account.—Lord Kames.

I can truly declare that to me the Sabbath has been invaluable.—William Wilberforce.

Give to the world one-half of the Sunday, and you will find that religion has no strong hold of the other. Pass the morning at church, and the evening, according to your taste or rank, in the cricket field or the opera, and you will soon find thoughts of the evening hazards and bets intrude themselves on the sermon, and the recollections of the popular melody interfere with the Psalms.—Sir Walter Scott.

I feel as if God had, by giving the Sabbath, given fifty-two springs in the year.—S. T. Coleridge.

A Sunday given to the soul is the best of all means of refreshment to the mere intellect.—Isaac Taylor.

Where there is no Christian Sabbath there is no Christian morality; and without this free institutions cannot long be sustained.—Justice McLean.

The religious character of an institution so ancient, so sacred, so lawful and so necessary to the peace, the comfort and the respectability of society, ought alone to be sufficient for its protection; but, that failing, surely the laws of the land, made for its account, ought to be as strictly enforced as the laws for the protection of person and property. If the Sunday laws be neglected or despised, the laws of person and property will soon share their fate, and be equally disregarded.—Attorney General Bates.

As a day of rest, I view the Sabbath as a day of compensation for the inadequate restorative power of the body under continued labor and excitement. One day in seven, by the bounty of Providence, is thrown in as a day of compensation, to perfect by its repose the animal system.—John Richard Farre, M. D.

New Orleans:

SATURDAY, JANUARY 9, 1869.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

NOTICE TO PREACHERS.

Those preachers whose post offices are to be changed, will please notify this office, as soon as convenient, of the change to be made—being particular in giving the post office from which and that to which the change is to be made.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

A great many subscriptions expire about this time. Please favor us with a remittance, that your paper may continue without interruption. We prefer an old subscriber to a new one, but like both. The old is already acquainted with our weak points, and knows how to make due allowance for many things which may shock a new subscriber.

By looking on the printed direction of your paper the date of expiration can be ascertained—one year from the time as there printed.

In changes of post office, where the place from is not given we pay no attention to the request.

TO AGENTS.

A brother sends "a happy new year" and several new subscribers—with the money. There's an air of sincerity in such greeting that we could wish universal.

Another sends an admirable article for a "pigeon-hole experience." He makes the good point that if the ADVOCATE could be moved up into Mississippi territory there would be a great rallying to it. May be so—but they did not rally to the Methodist, though in the heart of that noble State. He was "glad to pay for the paper"—well, the law now is, that every preacher who has paid for the paper is to reimburse himself out of the first subscriber obtained, sending on the surplus dollar and giving due notice. The same writer says that "want of money," "mail facilities," etc., are a good joke—that those who urge these reasons for not taking the ADVOCATE have hanging on a string, by the chimney, a file of New York Ledgers, Albions, etc. Well, we are trying to learn something every day.

A CLOCK has been invented that runs by electricity and never needs winding up. The battery that runs it may be connected with any number of dials in the same building.

THE Houma Civic Guard, of the 2d, estimates the sugar crop of Terrebonne parish at ten thousand hogsheads.

THERE are thirty million bearing grape vines in California.

THE VICTORIES OF 1869.

The marshaled hosts of God upon earth are so many and so powerfully armed, and the forces of the adversary are so vast in array, so industrious, so thoroughly drilled, and so bold to dispute every foot of territory, that every hour conflicts transpire upon which hang the fate of myriads, and every day the great battle of Armageddon goes on.—From the very hour that the Prince of Light declared, "I came not to send peace, but a sword," the friends of the Saviour have assailed the empire of darkness, and have steadily diffused the glory of his power. If at any point the church has faltered, the enemy has by so far recovered, just as night presses quickly upon the yielding day.—Never was the battle wider than at present. The shouts of the contestants may be heard along the banks of the Yellow river, on the shores of Australia, upon the steppes of eastern Russia, at the Cape of Africa, in the cities of Europe, and among the gold washings of the Pacific range.

Previous to 1800 the only representatives of the Protestant Church of Christ in the thickly peopled East were Carey, in India, and Morrison, in China. Now that seed has become a million of Christians, each of whom bears the torch of truth. In another half century, if as much be proportionately accomplished, the world will be everywhere on fire of the glory of God. The arsenal is stored with ammunition—the resources of the church of God have been gathering strength in every direction, until now she wields, or may wield, a wealth of substance, of science, of language, of inspired truth and of faith, which are adequate to unlock both the gates of earth and heaven. The greater part of the world's population are found gathered in a single territory, speaking and reading a single tongue, and waiting to hear the words of one greater than Confucius. Already some of the noblest sons of the East have found the Star of the Magi, and the spirit of God has formed Christ in their hearts the hope of glory. This determines the whole question—that great civilization is the inheritance of the Son.

The responsibility of this great enterprise of enlightening the world has been at last placed upon the consciences of the wealth-producing nations. So it is that those who have most truth have most money. God has provided a stream which should flow with the church in all her journeyings. Woe be to those who turn this river of wealth out of its appointed channels, that it may minister to the mere pleasures of sense! If this tide, springing from a rock harder than that of Horeb, shall but be turned full in its proper course, there are men now living who will see the knowledge of God covering the earth, as the waves cover the sea. And why not? Why may not the great use of property be at last acknowledged? Why may not the art of reducing the covetousness of the church be discovered this year—a discovery greater than that of Newton, or Watt, or Morse. Must men wait until every waster of his Lord's goods shall be subjected, as Dives, to the smelting furnace of God before they learn the awful value of gold? This is the sole want, we may say, to the fullest realization of the empire of the Son. The covetousness of the church alone keeps him out of his lawful right. "Woe unto you that are rich!"

One of the most hopeful things of the present hour is that the real enemies of Christianity are being disclosed. The Roman Catholic Church has put Mary in place of the one Mediator. It already openly assails the holy Scriptures under the guise of a protector of the truth, and it everywhere proclaims the doctrine of baptismal regeneration. Following in their footsteps, a large part of the Church of England has renounced the doctrine of justification by faith only, and the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit, in favor of the power of a derivative priesthood. But to these wolves in the garb of piety the Holy Spirit presents a front of fire. His searchings have awakened the dark holds of the Pyrenees, and released the multitudes of the peninsula from the grasp of the Dominican. The time has passed when superstition, by assuming the vail of a Christian, can be mistaken for Christianity. Courage is being recognized as a grace of the new manhood, and satan, in all his shapes, is being detected and withstood.

The power, the mighty power, of the present dispensation of the Spirit must be accredited. The might that waits upon the preaching of one "son of thunder" must be felt in all its original fullness—the arm of God is not shortened. In no other way can the huge bulk of this world's array against heaven be overcome. One must be able to chase a thousand. The Holy Spirit is at work now upon uneasy floods, and all that is wanting is a single preacher to declare the word—for God saves men by the foolishness of preaching. The events which have but just transpired in Spain prove that the Spirit is in advance of the movement of the church, and is waiting at a thousand points for her to come up and secure the victory.

"O'er the gloomy hills of darkness,
Look, my soul, be still and gaze!
All the promises do travail
With a glorious day of grace!"

Branch Southern Publishing House, 112 Camp Street.

We insist upon it that every Southern Methodist in this city and the Southwest should feel pride enough in the enterprise of the agent of the church—the Rev. R. J. Harp—to largely and promptly patronize this establishment. It abounds in good books. There is not a Protestant church in the South that would not rejoice in such a book house as an important element of ecclesiastical force.

Just as we had written the above, the agent appears and places upon our table the CLERGYMEN'S VADE-MECUM, designed for ministers of all denominations. It is a blank book with various departments, admirably ruled and headed: as 'Official Boards,' 'Sermons Preached,' 'Baptisms,' 'Marriages,' 'Members,' 'Sick Person's Diary,' 'Salary Receipts,' 'Periodicals,' 'Presents Received,' 'Texts for Consideration,' 'Engagements,' etc., some of which are excellent, as the 'Presents Received,' which, by the by, reminds us of a barrel of molasses which we heard of this morning as likely to be on the way to us—which, when it comes, will be the fourth entry to be made in that department for the current year, viz: 'One turkey,' 'one ditto,' 'one barrel of oranges,' 'one barrel of No. 1 syrup,' or 'one-half barrel,' as the case may be. The cost of this very neat blank-book by mail will be $1 50.

We have also, from the same house, the NILE TRIBUTARIES OF ABYSSINIA, and the Sword Hunters of the Hamran Arabs. By Sir Samuel Baker, M. A., F. R. G. S., author of the 'Albert N'Yanza Basin of the Nile.' Philadelphia: J. A Lippincott & Co. 1868. 12mo, pp. 413. This work we will fully review hereafter.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

The Louisiana Equitable Life Insurance Company, 142 Canal street, New Orleans. Capital $500,000. The directors of this institution are gentlemen of the highest integrity, and have been successful in business. It is upon the non-forfeiting principle—that is, after their annual premiums have been paid, if the party wishes to discontinue further payments he will receive a paid up policy for as many even dollars as he has paid the company. The entire surplus of this company belongs jointly to the policy holders and stockholders, in proportion to their contributions. Premiums may be paid in semi-annual and in quarterly instalments, thus placing the benefit of life insurance within the reach of persons with small incomes.

SINCERITY.—The only way for a man to escape being found out is to pass for what he is. The only way to maintain a good character is to deserve it. It is easier to correct our faults than to conceal them.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A COMPLETE GRAMMAR OF THE GERMAN LANGUAGE, with exercises, readings, conversation, paradigms and an adequate vocabulary. By James H. Worman, A. M. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co., 111 and 112 William street. 1868. 12mo, pp. 576.

This excellent work might have been well named the German conversation grammar; as it combines this object in its structure with that of teaching to read and write the German correctly. Its plan of gradual unfolding has all the advantage of the Olendorf method, without its redundancy of repetition. Its type-distinctions are a great help to the student in enabling him to catch at a glance the tense peculiarities of the language. We do hope the time will be when the Germans will adopt the Roman letter in place of their barbaric equivocal signs of speech. The paper of this book and everything about it is highly satisfactory to the eye. For sale by Henry C. Andrews, 332 Magazine street, New Orleans.

THE LIFE OF GEORGE STEPHENSON, and of his son Robert Stephenson, containing a history of the invention and introduction of the railway locomotion. By Samuel Smiles, author of "Self Help," "The Huguenots," etc. With portraits and numerous illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1868. Octavo, pp. 496.

The founding of the railway system, by George Stephenson and his son, must be regarded as one of the most important events, if not the very greatest, in the first half of this nineteenth century. This admirable "Life" of these great men is a republication from a revised English edition, the first having been published some ten years ago.—George Stephenson was born, 1781, in Wylam, a colliery village on the Tyne, about eight miles from Newcastle. His father, Robert, was a Scotchman, who found employment at Wylam, as fireman of the old pumping engine at that colliery, his earnings amounting to twelve shillings a week. In one quarter of a small brick house, which was occupied by four families, George was born. His first employment, as a boy, was to assist his father at the engine; his duty was to watch it, to see that it kept well in work, and that the pumps were efficient in drawing water. Here were developed that marvelous accuracy of observation, and that inventive genius and industry which made him a blessing to the world.

Railroads in that day were merely iron or wood rails strung together with a cograil, in which a cogwheel worked to keep the car from slipping. Horses or stationary engines were the motive power. In all England and France there was not an engineer who believed or suspected that a smooth wheel could do more than slip when turned upon a smooth rail. Stephenson, by actual experiment, demonstrated that the cog was superfluous. A locomotive engine had been invented by Trevethick, a lumbering machine which lacked steam and speed. Stephenson conceived the idea of improving the draught of the chimney by turning into it the escape steam; by this means, and the tubular boiler which he adopted and improved, he was enabled to produce "The Rocket," a locomotive that moved off at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour, and took the prize at Rainhill, in October, 1829. This was the beginning, we may almost say the perfecting, of that great power which has revolutionized the travel of the world. In this great success both George and his son Robert shared, as they had in the experiments which led to it. But the next great achievement of these engineers was in the construction of the Liverpool and Manchester railway, and subsequently that between London and Birmingham. Not only genius in the highest degree, but courage, perseverance and the knowledge of men were necessary to convince Parliament and the outside public of the feasibility and the utility of these new and wonderful applications of steam to the wants of commerce. The conflict with opposing dukes, engineers and advocates was properly called by the elder Stephenson, "The Battle of the Locomotive." And his successes were such as seldom have fallen to original thinkers or the pioneers of science. The construction of the North Midland railway line was a greater work than Napoleon's military road over the Simplon. If the labor expended in constructing the London and Birmingham railway be compared with the building of the Great Pyramid of Egypt, it is calculated that, reducing the two kinds of work to a common denomination, twenty-five thousand million more cubic feet of stone were raised in building this line. The two great tubular bridges, one over the Menai Strait, England, the other the Victoria Bridge, over the St. Lawrence, in Canada, were built by the younger Stephenson.

We have never read a more inspiring and entertaining recital of the labors and triumphs of self-made men than is to be found in this volume. Every family where there are boys should have in the book case this life of the Stephensons.

THE Leonard Scott Publishing Company continue to issue promptly all the British quarterlies and Blackwood's Edinburg Magazine, in excellent style and at their usual low rates. The contents of "Blackwood" for November are: Doubles and Quits, a Comedy of Errors, Part I; Lewis' History of Philosophy; Madame Aurelia; conclusion of Disestablishment and Dean Alford on the Church of the Future; Spanish Revolution; Cornelius O'Dowd; Walewski; Medical Lectures; Old and New; The Coming Elections. INFANTICIDE AT THE NORTH.

A most remarkable meeting has recently been held at the Cooper Institute, New York, in behalf of Hester Vaughan, now under sentence of death for killing her own infant.—At this meeting Mr. Horace Greeley presided.—The murderess was spoken of as "glorious Hester Vaughan," and the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That the association demand, in civil and criminal cases, woman shall be tried by a jury of her peers, who are to have a voice in the making of the law, the electing of the judge who pronounces the sentence, and of the sheriff who executes it.

Resolved, That the death penalty, odious where man is the victim, is doubly so when an inexperienced girl is to suffer; and the case of Hester Vaughan should startle every mother into a sense of her responsibility in making or executing laws under which her daughters are to live or perish.

Resolved, That human life should be held alike sacred by the individual and the State, and capital punishment should be banished from the land.

We give below an article from the New York Times upon this horrible condition of things in Massachusetts and elsewhere. It will account for the very remarkable statistic that in the State of New York there are one hundred and ninety thousand families without a single child. These people, many of them, are too mean to live, and so are killing themselves off, that is, destroying their own posterity.—The prevalence of this crime marked the decay of the Roman empire just before its overthrow. There are now in the city of New York thirty houses for the avowed object of producing abortion. Their "rules" for the conduct of inmates and applicants are duly published. That a public meeting should be called to shield one convicted of this great wickedness strikingly displays that fanaticism that can die for a slave, and murder a child.

The horrible crime of infanticide prevails to such an extent in America, that in some localities the growth of the population is seriously affected by it. In great cities especially its results are as shocking as they are alarming; and the attention of social philosophers and Christian moralists has lately been directed to the necessity of adopting some means of limiting its prevalence. It is not only practiced by women who, having gone astray, are so anxious to conceal the result of their error as not to stop at murder, but women who are legally married, and move in respectable society, redden their souls and their hands with the blood of legitimate children, to escape the troubles of maternity and the labors of nursing and training. Some of the most eminent physicians in the country—notably those in Massachusetts, where the subject has been investigated more carefully than elsewhere—have revelations on this subject which must challenge the serious thought of all who are capable of appreciating its moral and social bearings.

Legislation has failed to reach the evil as a preventive, though it undoubtedly has a restraining influence so far as it shows, or is able to show, that it will be treated as a crime, and will meet the punishment of crime. But it is an offense generally committed in secret, and so difficult of detection that the law is rarely brought to bear against it; and when the law is invoked, it is rare that a penalty is inflicted sufficient to serve as a warning and a terror to the guilty. The clergy have lately taken up the subject, and some of them have treated it with befitting plainness and solemnity; they have dealt with it as a damnable sin against heaven, as well as a crime against society, law and the human race. But unfortunately the clergy fail to reach the greater proportion of those who are guilty in this direction; and the terrible evil continues as though neither law nor Gospel had any bearing upon it.

It is inexpressibly shocking to observe that, just at this time, when recent developments and statistics have shown more clearly than ever the results of this social evil, there should be an attempt by certain parties to ignore its criminal nature and do away with its penal consequences. A wayward woman in Philadelphia was recently convicted of murdering her infant, for the purpose of getting rid of the fruits of a guilty connection. The deed was traced to the culprit. She was tried, and, after a fair hearing, was condemned. She is now in prison in Philadelphia. Her case has been taken up there and in this city by the party of "Woman's Rights."—Several of the journals have been filled with apologies for her crime, mawkish sentimentalities about her sufferings, and appeals, not only for her pardon, but for her triumphal release from the prison where she is confined. A meeting is to be held this evening in the Cooper Institute in this city to help her case. The advertisement says it is held "at the solicitation of several distinguished ladies of this city," and we are promised "eloquent addresses" and "discourses of the most thrilling character," and are also assured that it is "confidently believed the Governor can easily be induced to restore her to liberty."

VICTOR HUGO TO SPAIN.—Victor Hugo has just addressed a new proclamation to the Spaniards, demanding the abolition of slavery. From it we cite the following passage for the benefit of our readers:

"A final word. In the depth of evil, despotism and slavery meet, and produce the same effect. No identity is more striking. The yoke of the slave rests more heavily, perhaps, upon the master than upon the slave. Which of the two possesses the other? It is a question. It is an error to imagine that you are the proprietor of the man whom you buy and whom you sell. You are his prisoner. He holds you. His rudeness, his grossness, his ignorance, his savage nature, you must partake of them; if not, you will be a horror to yourself. You imagine that this black man belongs to you; it is you who belong to him. You have taken captive his body; he takes captive your intelligence and your honor. There is established between you and him a mysterious level. The slave chastises you for being his master. Sad and just retaliation, only the more terrible because the slave, your dark ruler, is unconscious of it. His vices are your crimes; his misfortunes become your catastrophes. A slave in a house is a savage soul who is in your house and in you. By it you are penetrated and obscured; it enters your system, a corrupting poison. Ah! this great crime, slavery, cannot be committed with impunity! Fraternity denied becomes fatality.

"If you are an intelligent and illustrious people, slavery, accepted as an institution, makes you abominable. The crown on the forehead of the despot, the chain on the neck of the slave, is the same circle, and the soul of the people is stifled by it. All your splendors have this stain, the negro. The slave imposes his darkness upon you. You do not communicate to him civilization; he communicates to you barbarism. Through the slave, Europe is inoculated with Africa.

"O, noble people of Spain, there is for you a second deliverance. You have freed yourselves from despotism; now free yourselves from slavery. VICTOR HUGO.

SUNDAY.

We are to account the sanctification of one day in seven a duty which God's immutable law doth exact forever.—Richard Hooker.

The very life of religion doth much depend upon the solemn observance of the Sabbath. Consider, if we should but intermit the keeping of it for one year, what a height of profaneness would ensue in those that fear not God!—Archbishop Leighton.

We never, in the whole course of our recollection, met with a Christian friend, who bore upon his character every other evidence of the Spirit's operation, who did not remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.—Dr. Chalmers.

The Sabbath must be observed as a day of rest. This I do not state as an opinion, but knowing that it has its foundation upon a law in man's nature as fixed as that he must take food or die.—Willard Parker, M. D.

So far as my observation extends, who are in the habit of avoiding worldly cares on the Sabbath are those most remarkable for the perfect performance of their duties during the week. I have a firm belief that such persons are able to do more work, and to do it in a better manner, in six days, than if they worked the whole seven.—John C. Warren, M. D.

SENSATIONAL TRAIN emitted the following reply to a committee of reception:

ON BOARD STEAMSHIP AUSTRALASIAN,
Christmas Day, 1868.

Dear Committee of the Fenian Brotherhood:

"Pay or fight. Release citizens or war. If short of cash, sell us Ireland for Alabama claims."

That is the platform on which I accept these addresses of the Fenians. Ireland is all ablaze with hope; but relies on Ireland. They didn't want your money—they will only accept your guns.

James Stevens has been reinstated to supreme control. England shakes with the palsy. The delivery of this address under the British flag shows you in earnest.

Russia and America are back of Greece. Farragut has all the soundings. The monarchy and laws have gone up in England. As a matter of hospitality, you had better engage a hospital on the Hudson for the dethroned monarchies.

All right for the great meeting at Cooper Institute, when I will bombard England again with bastile epigrams. Sincerely,

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN.

OBITUARIES.

Rev. JACOB CARR, of Rankin county, Mississippi, died October 3, 1868.

I knew this excellent old man only a year before his death, but I seemed to know him perfectly, so unconcealed, so bold, frank and generous was his nature. In his presence one always felt respectful. Contemplating his character, I have often felt what a fine soldier he would have made. When I first knew him his tall form was bent with age and disease and toil, but his spirit was buoyant and his intellect vigorous. He was intelligently devoted to the doctrines and usages of the church, and in the days of his strength labored extensively and usefully as a local preacher. Once he was in circumstances of ease and affluence. After the war he felt impelled to the hard labor of the farm, as well as to the most rigid economy. To this his strength was unequal. His health failed rapidly.

A month before his death I was with him in the love-feast. His soul was alive in religion. He alluded touchingly to the reverses of the late years of his life. He said thus far he had not suffered want. He had confidence in God that he never would. "Before that time comes God will take me out of this world to a better." The good man's faith was honored, and the Scripture was fulfilled that "the righteous is taken from the evil to come."

By papers handed me it appears that Jacob Carr was born in South Carolina, August 30, 1796; was married first in Simpson county, Mississippi, to Mary Magre, and second, in Rankin county, in February, 1865, to Mrs. Jane Mann, who survives him. In 1832 he received license to preach, and in 1857 was, in Brandon, ordained elder by Bishop Early.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

Died, on Sunday, the 29th of November, 1868, BENJAH SMITH ELLIS, of Jefferson county, Mississippi, in the twenty-ninth year of his age.

Our friend Smith was a great sufferer. His disease, in its early stages, was pronounced incurable by the most eminent physicians of the South. After he learned this thrilling fact he began to realize the great change that awaited him. Remembering vows he had made to his heavenly Father on the battle-field, he commenced at once to set his house in order. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, professed faith in a precious Saviour, and gave evidence of that preparation of heart that is recognized by Bible Christians as necessary to the truly converted, and died in the faith.

He was a gallant soldier, a true patriot, a faithful friend, and a devoted husband, father and brother.

He leaves a wife, sister, and two dear little children. His friends deeply deplore his death, but we would not call him back. He has joined a host of relatives and friends in that "far better land." Let us who remain be faithful, and try to meet them all on the other side of Jordan.

THE BEST IN THE WORLD.

NEW VOLUME JANUARY 1.

THE

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN FOR 1869.

The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is the largest, the best, the cheapest and most popular journal in the world, devoted to Invention, Mechanics, Manufactures, Art, Science and General Industry, and contains a vast amount of very interesting and valuable reading matter for all classes.

Among the many important subjects discussed are steam and mechanical engineering in all its branches, chemistry and all its varied processes and discoveries, agriculture and all improved farm and household implements, architectura and building, mining and metal working, firearms, manufacturing, hydraulics, railroad improvements, photography and the fine arts, new inventions, scientific sports and games, popular lectures upon scientific and mechanical subjects, articles by able writers, practical workshop and household receipts, and many other things instructive and useful to all classes of readers.

Each number contains from five to ten original engravings of new machines and processes, also an official list of patents granted at the Patent Office, with names of patentees, together with illustrations and editorial notices of the principal inventions. The numbers of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN for one year make up two handsome volumes of four hundred and sixteen pages each, full of choice reading, and illustrated by hundreds of splendid Engravings.

The new volume commences January 1, therefore now is the time to send in subscriptions to begin the volume. Terms: The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is issued every week, in sixteen large quarto pages, at $2 a year; $1 50 for six months. Clubs of ten names, or upwards, $2 50 each per annum.

Specimen numbers sent free.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE LITTLE ONES.

A row of little faces by the bed,
A row of little hands upon the spread,
A row of little roguish eyes all closed,
A row of little naked feet exposed.

A gentle mother leads them in their praise,
Teaching their feet to tread in heavenly ways,
And takes this lull in childhood's tiny tide
The little errors of the day to chide.

No lovelier sight this side of heaven is seen,
And angels hover o'er the group serene;
Instead of odor in a censer swung,
There floats the fragrance of an infant's tongue.

Then, tumbling headlong into waiting beds,
Beneath the sheets they hide their timid heads,
Till slumber steals away their idle fears,
And like a peeping bud each face appears.

All dressed like angels in their gowns of white,
They're wafted to the skies in dreams of night;
And heaven will sparkle in their eyes at morn,
And stolen graces all their ways adorn.

MY LITTLE FRIEND KATY.

BY ANNA WILMOT.

Dear little Katy! Her sweet, serious face was like the memory of a saintly picture seen in some far-away time. It was too old and thoughtful; and the eyes had too much depth of meaning—blended too many shadows with their sunlight.

I found her in tears one Sabbath evening.

'What troubles you?' I asked.

'Oh, I am so wicked!' she answered; and she laid her head down in my lap, weeping silently.

'Indeed!' I said, in a serious tone. 'What dreadful things have you been doing?'

She raised her head quickly, looking at me with a surprised expression on her face.

'Wicked people do bad things,' I said.

'Oh, I am not wicked in that way,' she answered, in some confusion of manner.

'How then, Katy? Have you been thinking wicked thoughts?'

'It isn't that either, Miss Anna. I have wicked thoughts sometimes, but then I put them away as quickly as I can. No, it isn't that.'

'What then, dear?' I laid my hand softly on her head and smoothed the silken hair.

'My heart is so wicked, Miss Anna.'

'Who told you so?'

She lifted her serious eyes to mine with a look of wonder.

'We are all born wicked,' she answered.

'No, dear, not wicked, but with evil inclinations. There is a great difference, Katy. If we do the evil to which our hearts incline, then we are wicked.'

'Oh, Miss Anna, I never thought of that!' and light played in among the shadows on her face. 'Then God isn't angry because of the evil that is born in us, but only for the evil we do?'

'Never think of God as an angry being, Katy,' I replied; 'but as a good and loving Father; our Father in heaven, who watches over us with the tenderest care. He knows about all the evil into which each of us is born—a great deal more than we can know—and is ever ready to help us overcome and put it away. He doesn't want us to feel condemned and unhappy because of the evil things in our hearts. That can do no good. But he wants us to fight against and overcome them; and he promises to give us divine strength in every conflict. If we do the evil to which our hearts incline, then we sin against God—then we are wicked, and should be very sorrowful and repentant. But, if we resist and fight against evil desires and evil thoughts, then we have no cause for self-condemnation.'

She dropped her eyes to the floor and sat very still, thinking.

'How have you spent to-day?' I asked.

She almost started at the question, a shade passing over her face.

'If ever I tried to be good and religious, Miss Anna, I have tried to-day,' she answered.

'The good are happy. I fear you have not been successful.'

'It has been one of my unhappy days;' and the child's voice broke into a sob. 'It seems as if the harder I tried to be good, the worse I felt.'

'There is something wrong in your way of trying, Katy. I am sure of that.'

'Maybe there is;' and she drew a long sighing breath.

'How did you begin the day?' I asked.

'When I awoke this morning,' she answered, 'and remembered that it was Sunday, I said to myself, "This is God's holy day, and I will devote it to religious thoughts and self-communion." So I got up, and after dressing myself quickly, sat down and read the Bible until breakfast time.'

'Were you interrupted while you read?'

'Oh, yes; many times.'

'By what?'

'Little sister Ellen, who sleeps in the room with me, and who can help herself very well if she chooses, kept troubling me every little while for one thing and another. It was, "Won't you fix this for me?" and "Won't you untie this knot?" and "Won't you see what ails my shoe?" and so on and on, until I got worried and spoke cross to her.'

'You did not feel very peaceful when you went down to breakfast, although you had been reading in the Bible for half an hour.'

'Oh, no. Instead of feeling peaceful, I was disturbed. Ellen complained to mother about me, and said that I had been cross to her and wouldn't help her a single bit. Mother looked at me reproachfully, and said she was sorry. Oh, dear, I felt so wretched! And yet I had tried to begin the day aright, so that it would be one of heavenly life and progress.'

'After breakfast what did you do?'

'I went up to my room and read, and thought, and prayed until church time.'

'Did that make you feel any better?'

'No. Somehow there seemed to be a dark cloud over my mind, and my heart was so hard and cold that I was grieved on account of it.'

'You were dressed and ready for church in time?'

'Oh, yes. I'm particular about that.'

'And found all the family ready when you came down from your room?'

'All but mother.'

'Why was she late?'

'Oh, she has the children to dress for church, you know.'

'Your father is a very punctual man.'

'Yes; he is like me in that; or, I should say, I am like him. He can't bear to be late—particularly late to church.'

'Was your mother much behind time this morning?'

'Yes;' and when she at last came down, looking worried, father spoke a little crossly. She was hurt, and he was sorry, I know, for what he had said, a moment afterward.'

'There was not much pleasant talk in going to church?'

'No; there was scarcely a word spoken, except by the children.'

'Did you feel better after you got to church?'

'No. I couldn't fix my mind on anything.'

'What caused this wandering state?'

'I don't know. My wicked heart, I suppose.'

'What happened after church? How did you spend the afternoon?'

'As soon as I got home I ran up to my room, and, falling on my knees, wept and prayed for a long time.'

'Did you feel better after that?' I asked.

'I was calmer, but not happier. The weight here,' laying her hand on her breast, 'was like lead. I opened my Bible after that, and tried to fix my thoughts on its holy words, but they seemed to hurt instead of comforting me. In the afternoon I went to Sunday school.'

'With your little sisters?'

'Only with Mary.'

'Why didn't Ellen go?'

'When I came down from my room I found only Mary, and she said that mother's head was aching so badly that she couldn't get Helen ready. So she had to stay at home.'

'The Sunday school didn't help you any more than church-going and reading the Bible?' said I.

The poor child shook her head sadly, and her eyes were full of tears.

'And there isn't much cause of wonder,' I added, 'seeing that the day was devoted to self.'

'To self, Miss Anna!' There was a startled look in her face.

'Only to self, on your own confession. Why did you read in the Bible this morning?'

'That I might know my own heart, and learn the way to heaven—that I might get a deeper conviction of my own sinfulness and need of divine mercy. I wanted to separate myself from the world on this holy Sabbath day, and live a higher and purer spiritual life.'

'All for yourself, Katy, and nothing for your neighbor. It was that you might learn how to be good, and not how to do good.'

She caught her breath in a wild sort of way, like one half suffocated.

'Let me,' said I, 'show you a better path in which to walk—the path of self-forgetfulness and love of others. If, when Ellen came to you for aid, you had kindly helped her, your state of mind would have been opened toward heavenly influences by the loving act; and then, when you turned again to your Bible, you would have found help and comfort in its pages. There would have been no complaint against you at breakfast time, and so that cause of disturbance would not have existed. Then if, instead of shutting yourself up in your room to read, pray and commune with yourself, you had given a portion of the morning to helping your mother with the children, she would have been ready for church in time, and you would have shared the peaceful satisfaction of the whole family, instead of its unhappy disturbance. I need hardly say that you would then have gone to church in a more religious state of mind, and in the services of the sanctuary found that peace and strength you so much desired. If, again, my child, you had been thoughtful of your mother and little sisters, instead of only yourself, Ellen would not have been compelled to stay home from Sunday school because her mother's head ached so badly that she could not get her ready.'

At this point Katy's feelings all broke down, and sobs shook her slender frame.

'Oh, I see it all, dear Miss Anna!' she cried. 'I see it all! I was just trying to save myself—to please the Lord by religious thoughts and feelings, instead of by doing good.'

'It is only by doing good,' I answered, 'that we can get good.—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."'

'But, Miss Anna, isn't there danger of self-righteousness?' Her face was calmer, but very serious.

'We are always in danger from self,' I answered, smiling; 'but in far less danger when thinking of and trying to serve others than when thinking of and trying to serve ourselves.'

One Sabbath afternoon, a few weeks afterward, I met Katy on her way from Sunday school, holding a hand of each of her little sisters, Mary and Ellen. On her gentle, serious face there was a look of peace. It brightened as she saw me.

'How is your mother?' I asked.

'Not very well; she had one of her bad headaches to-day.'

'Oh, I'm sorry. I didn't see her at church this morning.'

'No; she wasn't able to sit up.'

'Who got the children ready for church? I saw them there.'

'I did.' She looked at me half shyly.

'Hadn't much time for reading and self-communion?'

'Not much; but I was up early and read a chapter in the Bible before the children were awake. After that I was as busy as I could be until church-time.'

'Were you unhappy at all this?'

'Why, no, Miss Anna; I was only too glad to take the burden from mother, and help everything to go on as smoothly as if she hadn't been sick.'

'But,' said I, 'the course of religious thought was so interrupted and disturbed by these common duties that you were in no state to enjoy the service at church or to profit by the sermon.'

She lifted her large, saintly eyes to mine, half in wonder. Then, as a sweet smile played about her lips, she answered:

'I never felt so near to heaven as I felt this morning, and never had so much help and comfort in a sermon.'

'And the day is closing peacefully,' I remarked.

'Yes, very peacefully.'

We stood for a moment looking into each other's eyes. I stooped and kissed her. The children drew upon her hands, saying, 'Come, Katy,' and she moved on with them, a light playing over her face that made me think of the beauty of an angel.—Children's Hour.

A STORY OF TERRIBLE SUFFERING.—Particulars by the steamship Wasser of the suffering of one of the boat's crew that left the Hibernia, are of a most painful character. Second officer Davis, of the lost vessel, says they were out fourteen days. They had twenty-eight passengers, and reached the Irish coast with only three, and on landing their limbs were so swollen that they could not move. The boat had very rough weather. There were a number of children on board, all of whom died in their mothers' arms. They ran short of food and water. Nine or ten persons went mad, drank salt water and leaped into the sea. On the eleventh day out, the waves upset the boat and washed the provisions and every one overboard. The three men clung to the keel until the boat was righted, and then hoisted a tarpaulin for a sail, and after three days of intense suffering from thirst and suspense, they ran upon the beach, on the west side of Fannett Point. The narrative of Davis is one of the most thrilling and terrible in the annals of shipwrecks.

THERE are twenty-nine universities in Germany, with twenty-one thousand five hundred and forty-two students, and the number of professors engaged in lecturing at them amounted in the last term to two thousand one hundred and ninety-four. There is a movement on foot for raising funds for the benefit of the poorer scholars, so as to enable them to give their minds exclusively to their studies.

THE envious man is like that rich man in Quintillian who poisoned the flowers in his garden so that his neighbor's bees should get no more honey from them.

SCIENTIFIC.

Tooth's System of Boiling Sugar.

The London Produce Markets Review says: "In an ordinary vacuum pan the top of the liquid alone forms the evaporating surface, and evaporation would, of course, be more rapid were a greater portion of the liquid exposed. The most notable feature of Mr. Tooth's invention consists in pumping the juice down from the top of the vacuum pan, at the moment of granulation, through a rose. The juice is thus distributed in small streams through the air contained in the evaporating vacuum chamber, and the surface exposed, as compared with the old system, is said to be as 1,000 to 50. The evaporating chamber differs from the old vacuum pans in shape, being, to speak roughly, a long cylinder with the ordinary round pan at the top and bottom. The juice, before reaching the evaporating chamber, is pumped up through a number of pipes surrounded by steam in a cylinder. The following advantages are stated by the inventor to be secured by this process: 1. The juice is protected from excessive and long-continued heat. Long exposure to the injurious influence of the atmosphere is avoided. 2. Great rapidity in carrying on the evaporation is secured. 3. The juice is transferred to the vacuum pan (or evaporating chamber) immediately after defecation and filtration, avoiding the necessity of open pans. 4. Any extent of heating and evaporating surface is easily obtained. 5. The cost of fuel is greatly lessened. 6. Vacuum pans now in use may be made available for the improved system at a comparatively small cost. 7. The finest sugar is produced without the expense of animal charcoal, and the crystallization being perfect, there is no loss by drainage. 8. There is no formation of molasses beyond that naturally existing in the juice, as the temperature never need exceed one hundred and forty degrees to one hundred and sixty degrees Fahrenheit. 9. The system is also useful in beet-root sugar manufactories. There is an arrangement by which the clogging of the rose, through which the partly granulated sugar passes, is remedied. The idea of exposing a greater surface to evaporation seems to us excellent in theory, but it belongs, of course, to practical men to say if it will work. Mr. Tooth has another patent to compete with Mr. Fryer's concretor for rapid and cheap evaporation. This consists in passing the partially granulated juice through a rose, and letting it drop down through a long cylinder or tower filled with heated air. The patentee states that the juice reaches the bottom in the shape of sugar.—American Artisan.

THE NOSE BLEED.—There are two little arteries which supply the whole face with blood, one on each side; these branch off from the main arteries on each side of the windpipe, and, running upward toward the eyes, pass over the outside of the jaw-bone about two-thirds of the way back from the chin to the angle of the jaw, under the ear. Each of these arteries, of course, supplies just one-half of the face, the nose being the dividing line; the left nostril is supplied with blood by the left artery, and the right nostril by the right artery. Now, supposing your nose bleeds by the right nostril, with the end of the forefinger feel along the outer edge of the right jaw till you feel the beating of the artery directly under your finger, the same as the pulse in your wrist, then press the finger hard upon it, thus getting the little fellow in a tight place between your finger and the jaw-bone; the result will be that no drop of blood goes into the side of your face while the pressure continues; hence the nose instantly stops bleeding for want of blood to flow; continue the pressure for five minutes, and the ruptured vessels in the nose will by this time probably contract so that when you let the blood into them they will not leak. Bleeding from a cut or wound anywhere about the face may be stopped in the same way.

PHOTOGRAPHY AND GUNNERY.—With reference to some experiments with heavy guns, soon to take place at Fortress Monroe, it is stated that a skillful photographer, connected with the Ordnance Department at Washington, is making arrangements to take photographs of the targets, from a bomb-proof, after each shot, thus showing the exact amount of damage done by each projectile.

HOW EGGS ARE PRESERVED IN PARIS. Into a caldron of boiling water a colander containing a dozen eggs is plunged, and kept in it during a minute. This short immersion coagulates a thin layer of albumen, which, attached to the interior of the shell, constitutes an impermeable lining.

NOVEL AND INGENIOUS.—A remarkable combination of physical forces, applied to purposes of war, has lately been made the subject of experiment at Antwerp, with a view to the defense of the passes of the Scheldt. Torpedoes are placed in the river, and cameras similar to those used by photographers are adjusted, so that an object directly over one of them will present its image in the instrument situated on the shore at any convenient distance. As soon as the image of an approaching hostile vessel appears in the camera, an electric current is sent through a wire to the torpedo which underlies it, and the explosion takes place.

IMPROVED CHINA INK.—A correspondent gives an account of a new preparation of China ink. The preparation is a solution of the ink in a chemical liquid which renders the glue used to agglomerate the carbon particles insoluble when it becomes dry on the paper in the usual way. The lines made by this ink will not wash in coloring a drawing. The preparation has the advantage over other solutions of China ink, that it will not decompose by long keeping.

ANTIQUITY OF COAL.—Bituminous coal was known and employed by blacksmiths in the earliest ages of Greece and Rome; nevertheless, no indications can be found that it was employed largely in the metallurgy of iron. Such coal was found in Elea, on the road to Olympia, and in Liguria, where amber was to be obtained also.

IRON RUST.—Shellac varnish, made with alcohol, is a good preparation to prevent iron from rusting; but it will not stand wear, neither will any other varnish.

IMPORTANT RECORDS OF THE CONFEDERATE GOVERNMENT SECRETLY TAKEN AWAY FROM RICHMOND AND CONCEALED. In his article on the flight of Jefferson Davis, in the current number of Packard's Monthly, Mr. Edward A. Pollard makes the remarkable statement that the bulk of the valuable documents of the Confederate government, including the correspondence of Jefferson Davis, exists to-day in concealment; that many days before the fall of Richmond there was a careful selection of important papers, especially those in the office of the President, and letters which involved confidences in the North and in Europe, and that these were secretly conveyed out of Richmond and deposited in a place where they remain concealed to this time, and will probably not be unearthed in this generation. Where this repository of the secrets of the Confederate government is, Mr. Pollard is not prepared to say.

He has repeatedly sought access to these papers out of historical curiosity, but he has been invariably met with the explanation that, while this indulgence might be allowed him for such legitimate purpose, it would be unsafe for private reasons, and the information if published might be productive of serious consequences to persons of importance yet living, and within the jurisdiction of the government. It has been impossible to surmount this objection, and there is no doubt that many of these papers do really involve discoveries of some curious negotiations in the war, the parties to which might astound the public. During the war it was well known, in some circles of confidence in Richmond, that Mr. Davis maintained a large secret correspondence in the North; that he had sources of comfort, information, and advice there; and indeed it would have been strange, considering the volume of disaffection in the North—a remarkable peculiarity of the late war—if it had not found some expression in secret negotiations, or some sort of surreptitious communication with the Confederate authorities.

Mr. Pollard mentions the case of a single secret document which he was once permitted to see in Richmond, wherein certain parties offered to assist the Confederacy, by supplying its Western armies for a whole year from the granaries and magazines of the North. Such important letters and other secret papers (says Mr. Pollard) still exist, were preserved from the wreck and fire of Richmond, and at this moment are kept in a manner and place which render them secure against discovery, loss or mutilation.

The mysterious information which Mr. Pollard thus communicates is much more agreeable than the belief which we had before entertained, that the papers in question had perished. We can testify that on the capture of Richmond the offices of the Confederate government were found to have been carefully stripped of every document which was thought important, and that the rebel archives now preserved at Washington are of very little historical value indeed.—New York Sun.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of
16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of $10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of 25 00
which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1820.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the latest Combination Sounding boards;

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. This sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased."

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

THE THIRTY FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwartz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hiniz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of Instrument, $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of and at the same time rendering it the most perfect end even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greeneboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term.....30 00
Contingent fee, per term.....2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing, it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Hennen.

For further information apply for circulars to
O. F. CASEY,
aug15 2m Secretary of Faculty.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTItute, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited only a moderate degree of animation since our last issue. A fair business has been done in some branches of the wholesale trade, but very little in Western produce, operations being restricted by light supplies. Corn, in fact, is the only article in which there has been anything taken for shipment, but it comes forward too sparingly to afford much scope to buyers. Sugar and molasses, on the contrary, have been in good request, and the receipts have met a ready sale from the levee at full prices. Our leading staple has advanced ¼ to ⅜c., and, notwithstanding unfavorable weather, sold to a fair extent.

The weather was clear and pleasant on Saturday, but on Monday it was dark, rainy and muggy. On Tuesday it was clear and cool. We learn from the country that there is still a large amount of cotton in the field, which, with fair weather and diligent picking, might produce a considerable yield, but it is neglected and going to waste. The negroes cannot be induced to go out early in cold weather, so that many planters are abandoning what remains ungathered. The accounts from Arkansas are highly discouraging. The outrages committed by the militia have created such general disturbance as to materially prevent service by laborers, and picking in many districts has been abandoned.

The river remains the same, being eleven feet below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 1st instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ....bales..	13419
Mobile	279
Texas	28
Total	13726

On Saturday prices were unsettled and easier, and although factors were unwilling to recede from their stringent pretensions of the day previous, yet the advantage throughout the day was on the side of the buyers, the grades below middling closing at a falling off of ¼c., while middling was held at the previous advance. The movement, however, was materially restricted by the difference between factors and buyers, and the sales were confined to 3,700 bales. On Monday the failure of the usual morning telegrams and very unfavorable weather prevented much movement until toward noon, when encouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York renewed the demand, which was subsequently still further stimulated by Liverpool dispatches, reporting a further advance, and for the rest of the day buyers operated with considerable spirit, the business summing up 6,550 bales, and prices closing at an advance of ⅜ to ½c., low middling ruling at 24⅝ to 24¾c., strict low middling at 24⅞ to 25c., middling at 25½c., and strict middling at 25¾ to 26c. On Tuesday the market opened with an active inquiry, and a moderate business was done at Monday's prices, leaning to outside rates, but toward noon the demand became more active, and although factors raised their pretensions, variously claiming from ¼ to ¾c. over previous rates, yet the movement continued quite animated, and 5,700 bales changed hands, at an average advance of ⅜ to ½c. The demand was stimulated by the advance reported at New York and the upward tendency of the Liverpool market.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,950 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 451,611 bales, against 262,497 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 111,664 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 67,885 bales to France, of 11,825 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 25,327 to Great Britain.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	22⅜ to 23½
Good ordinary	24 to 24½
Low middling	25 to 25¼
Middling	25⅞ to 26
Strict middling	— to 26¼

FUNERAL OF MR. BOTTS.

RICHMOND, Jan. 10.—Hon. John M. Botts was buried this afternoon from St. James Church. All the State officials and the Grant and Colfax Association were in the procession. A very large crowd of freedmen followed the remains to the cemetery.

THE EUROPEAN CONFERENCE.—THE CRETANS.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—The conference met yesterday and hold its first session, which lasted seven hours.

The Greek and Turkish representatives manifested a conciliatory disposition, and a peaceful solution is confidently looked for next session, which occurs Tuesday.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—The Post publishes a letter from Dr. Samuel G. Howe, stating that the insurrection in the interior of Crete is in full blast, and urges the Cretan relief committees not to be misled by lying Turkish reports.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The present status of Turkey and Greece will continue, pending the conference. The general impression is that a war is obviated.

STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION.

The steamer Glide, Captain J. Muse, left the wharf at the lower landing Tuesday evening, shortly after five o'clock, for Grand Ecore, on Red river. When at Valcourraine's plantation, about forty-nine miles above the city, she ran aground, and shortly afterwards, between twelve and one o'clock, exploded her larboard boiler, destroying almost every part of the boat.

By the explosion the following officers, passengers, deck hands and firemen were badly and slightly scalded and burned: Captain J. Muse badly about the head, face and hands, also internal injury. L. Clayton, first clerk, scalded badly. T. Clemens, second clerk, hands, arms and shoulders badly scalded. Charles Conklin, badly scalded. Richerson, passenger, badly scalded—taken to the St. Charles Hotel. George Wood, badly scalded. Thos. Shepard, barkeeper, badly scalded. George Shepard, barkeeper, badly scalded. Cabin boy missing. Three firemen and five deck hands, some slightly and others badly scalded, all taken to the Charity Hospital.

The steamers J. C. Blackford, Captain Pickett, and Thos. Powell, Captain Dinvant, running up about a mile and a half astern, soon came to her assistance, and took off all the wounded and those who escaped, and transferred them to the steamer Governor Allen, Captain Tobin, bound down from Camden, and brought them to the city on Wednesday morning.

The Glide had on a good freight of merchandise and seventy-five head of mules, all of which, with the boat, were burned.

CAUSE OF THE ACCIDENT.

The boat struck the bank, and remained stationary until all the passengers, crew and wounded were taken off. It is the belief that the severe concussion of running aground was the cause of the explosion. The boat, shortly after the explosion, took fire and was entirely destroyed. We could not learn the amount of insurance. The boat was valued at $25,000.

LOUISIANA ITEMS.—We have the most cheering accounts from the work on Grand Levee. Mr. Lombard, who is devoted to the interests of the people resident behind this great protective earthwork, is working with a will to have it built in such a manner that the overflowed lands may be again planted and improved with every confidence that the crops will not again be swept away. The base will be probably enlarged to one hundred feet. On or about the 12th the gap will be completely closed with a levee ten feet high, and two-thirds of base completed.—Baton Rouge Advocate.

THE Micajah Barrow place has been bought by the heirs. It is badly cut up and "sand barred" by the old Chinn crevasse. The Blount farm in East Baton Rouge has been sold to Pritchard, of Orleans—three hundred arpents for $3,500. This place is well improved. The Le Blanc plantation, situated on the first point above this city, in West Baton Rouge, was sold last Saturday to Colonel Hugar, for $14,000. This is a sugar plantation with dwelling and sugar house.—Ibid.

THE sugar crop of this parish may be put down at ten thousand hogsheads. This is rather more than half a full crop.—Houma Civic Guard.

A JAPANESE TRACT AGAINST CHRISTIANITY.

TALES OF NAGASAKI.

THE STORY OF THE EVIL DOCTRINE—THE ROMAN CATHOLIC RELIGION.

At a village named O oura, near Nagasaki, the French built a church and five or six priests took up their residence there. They gave wages of one or two hundred Rios annually to about twenty Japanese readers, and sent them out in the disguise of traders or of traveling students to Hirado, Simabara in Hizen, to Fanchabori and to Amahousie. To the poor they gave money and to the superstitions they exhibited prodigies in order to proselytize them, or worked upon their feelings by conventicles (a conventicle is a meeting of both sexes at night in a secret house or chamber for pleasure.)

In a short time therefore one hundred or two hundred followers sprung up who disregarded the most stringent injunctions of the Lord of the district, and neglected the social relations and the five virtues, a most fearful state of things indeed.

A certain spy, as he was concealed under the veranda of a house in Auracami, heard a priest of the evil religion preaching, who said "persons who enter our sect and believe its doctrine will be born in heaven and enjoy eternal felicity; whilst believers in Christianity, Confucianism and Buddhism, will all go to hell and suffer torment; should only a simple person of a family enter our sect all the rest will be born in heaven;" then he showed in glorious palaces and mansions, people enjoying themselves with beautiful women. Consequently they became desirous of dying at once and being born in heaven, and do not care for the severest punishments.

I will narrate further stories of prodigies performed.

THE JESUS OR PROTESTANT DOCTRINE.

In the same way the American and English have built Jesus halls (churches,) and five or six priests have come, and try to lead astray the talented and clever men of Japan. These priests of Jesus doctrine live mostly in private houses and under pretence of teaching astronomy, geography and the use of fire arms and medicines—desire, in actual fact, to spread abroad the abominable poisons of Jesus Compared with the Roman Catholic Religion; this is a very cunning doctrine indeed. Although they try to make out that there is nothing abominable in it, they are really foxes in the same hole, and it is really more injurious than the Roman Catholic doctrine. The priests say "the Jesus doctrine which we recommend to you does not practise magic." It advocates the observance of the social relations and the five virtues, and is very beneficial to the state; just see for yourselves in this book; and they try to convert by showing books with plausible titles, such as Easy Road to Knowledge of Right Reason; Elements of the Five Virtues; Elements of the Five Social Relations, but in the matter of abolishing Shinto and Buddhism, and of treating Prince and Father with contempt, it does not differ from the Roman Catholic religion, for which reason it is very hurtful to the state. A Chinaman named Chang-chit-sao, in a letter to a friend of mine, says: "I find from my acquaintance with the retainers of Japanese Daimios residing in Nagasaki, that they are all studying Western learning by command of their princes. The fact is the Western barbarians practice murder instead of agriculture. Astronomy, geography, warlike weapons and other toys of theirs, are only fit to amuse the eye and ear. But there is not one of their books which does not praise the spirit of Jesus, or of the Lord of heaven (God,) and persons who do not study these books with a profound appreciation of fundamental truth, will find themselves respecting the doctrine before they know where they are. I sincerely hope that the doctrine of Jesus and of the Lord of heaven may not spread all over Japan in two or three years."

These words are perfectly true; should it turn out so, Japanese will become enemies of their own country for the sake of foreigners. I pray most earnestly that superior and benevolent men may not be overcome by the plots of these people, but will assist our countrymen with just laws and keep our state as firm as Taien.

ELEMENTS OF THE EVIL DOCTRINES.

The Jesus doctrine and the doctrine of the Lord of heaven are the same in origin and are merely branches of one. Three hundred and fifty-two years ago a division of the Roman Catholic religion was founded, which professed to observe the true meaning of Jesus, and called itself the Jesus doctrine. They say that the Roman Catholic religion consecrates wooden images and practices all sorts of prodigies; the Jesus does not practice prodigies; they derive their doctrine from the Old Testament in twenty-nine books, and the New Testament in twenty-seven books. The commencement of the Old Testament says five thousand eight hundred and sixty-three years ago the Lord of heaven made the heavens and earth, the sun, moon and stars, herbs, trees, birds and beasts; in the space of five days, and on the sixth made a man and a woman, who are the original ancestors of all mankind, wherefore the Lord of heaven is also called Creator. He is also called the great Prince and great Father, natural princes and fathers being distinguished, as little princes and little fathers. In that case, what is said in the classic poetry, "that in the whole of what is under the heavens, there is no place which is not royal territory—in the whole earth there are none who are not royal subjects"—comes to nought. When they say that the Lord of heaven made human bodies, which were of earth, and that the Lord of heaven put life into them, what is said in the classics of filial piety, "that we have received our bodies, hair and skin from our fathers and mothers," comes to nought. They look upon prince, father and mother as nurses who merely nourish us, and say that if we worship our ancestors we shall be hated by the Lord of heaven. This is treating prince and father with contempt, and entirely disregarding the natural relations of prince and vassals—father and child—which is a great evil to the state.

The Old Testament contains the Commandments of the Lord of heaven. The first of them says, "There is no other God but me;" consequently the evil consideration of Uracomi-muro, in Nagasaki, throws the tablets of Tenstro-Ko Dai gin (the sun goddess,) and of Hasuga Hachi-man and the rest into the fire—into the water and into the privies. The sixth says, "Thou shalt not kill," but this means, thou shalt not kill people of our religion; they murder the most virtuous and superior men if they do not belong to their religion. There are many cases in the Old Testament of persons who are said to be beloved by the Lord of heaven, becoming united in the bonds of parent and child, husband and wife, and besides at Uraca-mi, near Nagasaki, very lately under the name of conventicles, men and women met secretly in the depth of the night, which is abominable lechery. The eighth says, "Thou shalt not steal," but they seize on other countries and make them subject to their own. Is not this flagrant robbery?

In the New Testament is written the history of Jesus from his birth to his death by crucifixion. This person called Jesus was originally very poor. In his twenty-fifth year he was banished, upon which he traveled through many countries, learning magic, arts, curing the sick, stopping floods and other magic. He deceived the ignorant lower classes, making them follow him, until his evil design of murdering the sovereign of the country being discovered, he was put to death by crucifixion. He was a most traitorous criminal. It is however written that he was crucified to atone for the sins of all men; that after death he came out of his grave and preached to his disciples for the space of forty days, and then ascended to heaven alive; this is the invention of these fellows and is entirely unfounded.

Considering that the foundation is such violent wickedness it is impossible that any of his believers can be either filial or loyal. They say that the most unfilial and disloyal can go to the very top place in heaven if they only love the Lord of heaven. The dissesters of Simabara and Amaconsa may be looked upon as warnings. The love of novelty is unfortunately such that divine tickets and images of Buddha are caused to fall down from heaven, as they have done since last autumn. There are plenty of common people who, under the pretence of worshiping the God, dance and sing drunken songs and forget the principles of the social relations. Such would be the misfortune of the state were people to be sunk in this evil doctrine. What I pray for, is that patriotic Laman in this shall know how this people offend against the principles of fidelity and filial piety, what ambitious designs they have against the state, and by fortifying men's minds with good principles, block up every chink by which the evil doctrine might creep in.

I do not aim here at describing the thing in detail, but only to speak my mind and narrate a story for the benefit of the ignorant and young.

HISTORY OF THE EVIL DOCTRINE AT NAGASAKI.

Since the opening of the port of Nagasaki, the French among the Western barbarians have mainly preached the Roman Catholic religion, and the English and American the Protestant religion. In addition to these there is the Greek religion, the Mohammedan religion, and others, all of which resemble the former and are as injurious to the state as they are. In O Ura, at Nagasaki, Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches have been built, and the Japanese are secretly induced to join these religions.

The Roman Catholic religion proselytizes from the middle down to the lowest classes of the inhabitants. The Protestant religion chiefly proselytizes those in a higher position than the middle classes.

The numbers of the Roman Catholics are as follows: In Uracami, near Nagasaki, about two thousand people. In the territory of O-nura, above one hundred. In the territory of Fercshora, in Hizen, above one hundred and fifty. In Takagami, Shimabara in Hizen, Amacoma in Hiogo, Hirado in Hizen, proselytizing is going on, and it is not known exactly how many thousands there are.

On the evening of the 23d day of the sixth month of last year, (July, 1867,) the Governor of Nagasaki sent to seize the evil ones and threw them into prison. The images in the church which had been erected at Uracami were seized at the same time and entrusted to the charge of the mayor of the village. The officers who were sent to apprehend these men brought them all, seventy odd in number, to the Governor's official residence. Six or seven men were left to guard the mayor's house, but the remainder of the evil band, to the number of several hundred, attacked the place and repossessed themselves of the images. They also seized two of their subordinates as hostages, declaring in violent language that they would not give them up unless the prisoners were set at liberty; in consequence of this hundreds of other offenders were left alone and not apprehended.

The people of the next village were all of a resolute disposition, and always observed the principles of loyalty and filial piety, although built in a continuous line with the village of Urecami. When the evil fellows of Uracami were apprehended, the officials were very much afraid and did not like to force an entrance, but the people of Nishi thought now was the time to do their duty, and forced their way among the enemy and did good service.

In Uracami there is a place subject to Amura; that place contained some of the evil band; the authorities of Amura arrested more than one hundred in the commencement of September and committed them to prison. The evil ones who had been apprehended by the Governor of Nagasaki, and cast into prison, were quietly summoned by him and remonstrated with on their evil conduct, but they remained obstinate and gave no signs of repentance; on the contrary they actually begged that they might be permitted to openly join the Roman Catholic sect.

As the Governors and the collectors could do nothing with them, on the 14th day of the eighth month the priests from nine temples, seven being of the Swinshion sect and two of the Teashian sect, were summoned to the Governor's official residence and asked if they could suggest plans for bringing back the evil fellows of Uracami. The priests replied that they would give in their answer after mature consideration, and retired, and the following day they sent in their reply, which was to the effect that they would do their best in exhorting these people to change their hearts.

On the 19th day the collector and judges went to Uracami with the priests of the nine temples and tried to exhort these people, but they were obstinate and refused to be convinced in the slightest degree, the fact being that as they had not been severely dealt with up to that time, the evil hands only increased in their obstinacy.

In the middle of the ninth month the people imprisoned by the Governor of Nagasaki falsely pretended to have repented and were released from prison, but they collected together again and increased in numbers from day to day, and the affair ended by the village being made responsible for those who had been released from prison. The evil fellows thought they had found a capital opportunity; they took a quantity of money belonging to their church and went secretly to all places, giving it to the people; consequently in a short space of time large additions were made to their number, ten in one place, a hundred in another. The fourth commandment of the evil religion ordains the observance of a day of rest; the Japanese began gradually to keep this day, by which their having entered the sect became apparent. As the Roman Catholic religion had spread so evidently it behooved those of the Protestant doctrine to take measures to increase the circle of their sect. A person called Maria, of one Verbeeck, a priest of Jesus, left her child at the breast and went to China in a steamer; she went as far as Shanghai and Hongkong for the purpose of inducing the priests residing there to come with her to Japan.

This is a summary of the doings of the evil ones at Nagasaki. I do not know what may be the state of things at Yokohama and Hakodate, but as there are several priests residing at those places, it is pretty certain they will entice the Japanese gradually.

Hiogo became an open port last winter, and there is no doubt the priests will gradually make their entrance there, and I fear they will soon pour their abominable poison into Osaka and Kioto; but as they have not yet commenced working at those places, I hope that a plan for preventing them will be taken while there is yet time.

As the evil ones of Nagasaki are fully convinced and are not at all likely to be converted again, they ought to be visited with the severest punishment; but the persons who have been merely drawn in by others will probably repent if they are exhorted in the proper manner.

In the above I have given an account of the rise and progress of the evil doctrine.

Through the kindness of a friend who arrived by the Costa Rica we have been favored with the above article, which is one of the most remarkable productions we have ever read, and shows the insidious means resorted to by the native priests to countervail the exertions of the foreign missionaries in Japan.

We hasten to lay it before our readers that they may understand what is being done by these people against progression, and the necessity for extra watchfulness on the part of our ministers.

After reading this ingenious attack, it is not difficult to understand the action of the government in the case of the Christians who were recently sent away in the steamer Sir Harry Parkes to parts unknown, or to their death.

The paper was only discovered a few days before the Costa Rica arrived at Nagasaki, and immediately the best interpreters were engaged to translate it, and we are the first, we believe, that will present it to the public in print. A number of copies were made for distribution, but the "News" is the first to publish it for universal perusal.—Friend of China.

The Legislature and the Public Schools.

The attack of Governor Warmoth upon the School Board of this city met with prompt treatment. The board is composed of gentlemen who are able to assert and defend their rights and the interests confided to them. Immediately upon the publication of the scathing reply of the board, the Legislature comes to the rescue. The citizens will sustain the board despite the equivocal indorsement of one or two of the city papers.

Yesterday two bills were introduced into the lower house, both providing for the immediate abolishment of the present School Board, and the appointment of another by Warmoth. One was introduced by a man named Carr. It makes the board to be composed of seventeen members, to be appointed by Warmoth, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The other was offered by Rey, a colored man, who was elected to his seat by the House itself and not the people. It gives only five members to the board, and provides for their absolute appointment by Warmoth.—Both bills were referred to the education committee. It is not to be doubted that one or the other of these bills will become a law. One similar to them was introduced last session, but dropped simply because the members thought they had then gone to the very furthest verge of outrage that they would be allowed to go. When the bill does pass, Warmoth will undoubtedly appoint negroes on the board, when the question of mixed schools will be brought very plainly before the people. Time alone will show how they will receive it.—Crescent.

BARCLAY'S DIGEST.—An occurrence demonstrating the ineffable stupidity and complete ignorance of a portion of the members of the lower house took place yesterday. The House had been adopting certain rules of order for its own governance, the last one being that, whenever the rules then adopted were silent, Barclay's Digest should be considered authority. A motion was made, of course, to print the rules for the use of the members, when some saphead, whether negro, carpet bagger or scalawag, we could not discover, moved that one hundred and fifty copies of Barclay's Digest be printed for the use of the members.—The debate on the proposition continued in good earnest for some minutes, when one of the members informed the House that Barclay's Digest was a book of some two or three hundred pages, to print which would be rather a large job, and that the book was copyrighted and that the State had no right to reprint it. The mover of the proposition, after this explanation, relapsed into silence, and the last seen of him he was hunting a dictionary to find out the meaning of the word copyright. Mr. Carroll, in discussing the question of printing, suggested that only sufficient copies be printed to supply those members who could sign a receipt for them, in which case the expense would have been materially reduced. This proposition was indignantly rejected.—New Orleans Crescent.

THE JESUIT.

BY DEAN MILMAN.

"I've sunk,
For ever, title, rank, wealth—even my being;
And, self-annihilated, deem myself
A limb, a nameless limb, of that vast body
That shall bespread the world, unchecked, untraced—
Like God's own presence, everywhere, yet nowhere—
Th' invisible control by which Rome rules
The universal mind of man. On me
My father's palace gates no more shall open,
I own no more my proud ancestral name,
I have no property even in these weeds—
These coarse and simple weeds I wear; nor will,
Nor passion, nor affection, nor the love
Of kindred touch the earth-estranged heart;
My personal being is absorbed and dead.
A noble born
Of Rome's patrician blood, rich, lettered, versed
In the affairs of men—no monkish dreamer
Hearing Heaven's summons in ecstatic vision—
God spoke within this heart, but with the voice
Of stern, deliberate duty, and I rose
Resolved to sail the flood, to tread the fire—
That's naught—to quench all natural compunction,
To know nor right, nor wrong, nor crime, nor virtue,
But as subservient to Rome's cause and Heaven's.
I've schooled my haughty soul to subtlest craft,
I've strung my tender heart to bloodiest havoc,
And stand prepared to wear the martyr's flames
Like nuptial robes—far worse, to drag to the stake
My friend, the brother of my soul—if thus
I sear the hydra-head of heresy."

A VISIT TO SUMMERFIELD, ALA.

COLUMBIANA, Ala., Jan., 1869.

MR. EDITOR: On my return home from the session of the Montgomery Conference, recently held at Greenville, Alabama, I concluded, on arriving at Selma, to make a short visit to Summerfield, nine miles distant, and the site and location of that noble old school, the Centenary Institute—an institution, by the way, that perhaps has sent ont a larger number of yonths, both male and female, edncated in head and heart to bless the world, than any other in this section of country. To accomplish this desired visit, I improvised an old mnle in Selma—there being no hack going out at that time—borrowed a saddle from the livery-stable man—a gentleman of color—and took passage upon the hurricane deck of the aforesaid mnle.

Jndging from the exterior appearances of my craft, I concluded, very rationally I think, that the materials from which locomotion is generated had not been very bonntifnlly supplied for the days, weeks and months last past. Conseqnently my speed was not equal to that of the iron horse. Bnt in my case patience and perseverance conquered this difficulty, and a little before snnset I cabled up at the hospitable gate of my old and tried friend, Dr. A. H. Mitchell, long the efficient president of the Institute, and now the presiding elder of the Demopolis district, Mobile Conference. The doctor is in rather feeble health, and begins to show age and bodily infirmity; but his mind is still vigorous, and he manifests much cheerfulness of spirit. How pleasant it is to see a green, cheerful old age, full of years and usefulness, its hallowed influences falling as gently as the soft, mellow rays of the setting sun. Much better this than the sour querulousness that too often characterizes those in the infirmities of old age. I was much pleased with the doctor's household arrangements. The religious element enters largely into the family government. After tea we had sweet singing by the young people, and then a prayer, and in the morning the reading of alternate verses of the Scriptures by each member of the family; and then the morning sacrifice of prayer and thanksgiving, and again each repeating from memory a verse before the morning meal. I conld but feel that my son, an only child—now a member of this Christian family—was safe. There can be no friction in the family machinery of a household like this. Luckily my visit happened to be at the time of the review and exhibition that preceded the Christmas vacation and holidays, and being appointed by my Conference one of the visiting committee to this institution, I felt I was not out of place. An incident occurred soon after I entered the college chapel, which demonstrated that I was, at least in one respect, the right man in the right place. It was bitter cold weather, and I had taken a vacant seat near the stove, and was holding a pair of large buckskin gauntlets in my hand. One of the older boys was delivering an original speech on "Providence."—Suddenly, without any apparent cause, the stove-pipe began to fall, and I as suddenly caught it. using my gloves, which prevented me from being burned, thus saving a crowd of ladies, seated near. from a terrible fright, and perhaps from serious injury.

I was much pleased with all I saw and heard. The boys acquitted themselves well in their speeches, some of which were original and some selected. If the ban of the voting masses was not upon Southern boys, it would not havo been difficult for me to have come to the conclusion that there was in all probability an embryo President in that class of youthful orators. My son was among the speakers. His was a selected speech. The subject was "The Lone Star State." I shed some large tears while he was speaking, not because of the subject matter of the speech, or the manner of delivery, but because of recollections which it brought up. Texas was the adopted home of two of my brothers, as noble as ever blessed the existence of any man. Full of Southern blood, patriotic and chivalrous, when the tocsin of war sounded they were not slow to gird themselves in defense of the lost cause.

The yonnger was the first man killed in his first battle, gallantly leading his command in a charge upon the enemy, and is buried in an adjoining State. The elder sleeps quietly beneath the soil of the Lone Star State. Thank God, they were also Christian soldiers, and I havo good reason to believe they have secured an eternal peace.

But my object in this communication was to say something about Centenary Institute and her accomplished corps of teachers.—Professor Massey, the principal of the male department, seems to understand all about boy-nature—I rather suspect he has been a boy himself—and if they are not disciplined it is because they are incorrigible, and if they do not learn it is because they are minus the brains. I am told his discipline is very mild and persuasive. Perhaps he is right, but I have always been impressed with the fact that there were some specimens of boy-juvenility that needed the birch. However, Professor Massey succeeds in having good discipline, and that is the best test of the means and manner of securing it.

Professor Vaughn is all that could be desired in the female department, and although I am not an adept in the music art, I judged from the specimens interspersed through tho exercises of the day that the music department was not deficient in competent teachers. The trustees have wisely rednced the price of tuition and board. Everything connected with the institntion is in good running order, and all that Centenary Institnte needs to regain its former prestige and usefulness is for parents to send in their children by the scores and hundreds, thereby giving their brain capital that cannot be confiscated or taken away. I observed quite a number of young preachers who are tarrying at this Jericho for their theological beards to grow. They are being educated free of charge, both tuition and board. This noble work is being done principally, if not wholly, by Professor Massey and the citizens of Summerfield.

Ought not others, who can and are able, to help in this good and benevolent work? I, at least, think so. Would it not be well for each presiding elder's district to select from its own bounds one young man, at least, who is called of God to preach, and pay his expenses in securing a liberal education? No investment, in my opinion, would pay a better dividend than this. Who will set the ball in motion? Let it roll round to all the district meetings to be holden this summer, and in these advisory councils assume practical form.

And last, bnt not least, in the exercises was the admirable address of my old friend, B. J. Harrison, Esq., to the Franklin Society. Brother Harrison is an old citizen of Summerfield. I knew him when I was a boy-preacher, twenty years ago, and after so long an absence I found him, as then, the same high-toned Christian gentleman, and staunch friend of the church, and zealous advocate of sanctified education. His address abounded with good advice to his youthful audience.—Especially did he emphasize the evils of debt and immoderate use of tobacco.

But, Mr. Editor, I must close. I saw your good-humored face, for the first time, at the Greenville Conference, and this is the reason I have presumed upon your good nature with this rather lengthy letter, and that you may not get out of humor trying to decipher my hieroglyphics. I will have them copied into a plainer hand. We mountain preachers are not egotistic enough to think we can write as well as editors; but is it not well to mix in some long forage with the better and more matured grains of journalism now and then? The people rather relish it. Many there are among the masses whoso intellectual teeth are not sufficiently strong to crack productions of a high literary character.

Bishops' Deficiency, Montgomery Conf'e.

To the Preachers of the Montgomery Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN: You will remember that resolutions were adopted by our Conference, at its late session, requiring preachers in charge of such works as failed to pay their assessments for the support of our bishops last year to take up collections to make up the deficiency, immediately upon entering on their work; also requiring presiding elders to give special attention to this matter. The secretary of the Joint Board of Finance was also requested to publish in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE a statement showing the amount of deficit on each pastoral charge.

I have no means of furnishing such a statement, as the assessments were laid by the Joint Board upon the districts only. The district assessments were apportioned by the presiding elders or district stewards to the several pastoral charges, but no statement of the amount assessed to each ever came into my hands. Hence I can only give a statement of the deficiency of the districts, and leave for the presiding elders to ascertain the deficiency of the several works. The statement is as follows:

Districts.	Assess't.	Amt. pd.	Def'y.
Montgomery	$475 00	$419 60	$55 40
Wetumpka	250 00	113 00	137 00
Gadsden	50 00	18 05	31 95
Jacksonville	50 00	70 25	.....
Lafayette	80 00	54 80	25 20
Eufala	325 00	294 25	30 75
Union Springs	200 00	157 00	43 00
Marianna	70 00	61 00	9 00
Camden	100 00	39 55	60 45
Other sources	.....	22 00	.....
Total	1600 00	1249 50	372 50
Less paid from other sources			22 00
Leaving			350 50

Brethren, will you not raise the above deficiency of $350 50 at once, and forward it to Rev. William Shapard, president of the Joint Board of Finance, at Auburn? Let our people know how great is the necessity, and they will respond promptly.

E. S. SMITH,
Sec. Joint Board of Finance.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

BLACK HAWK, Mississippi.
January 4, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: A few weeks ago, just before the close of the last Conference year, and under the pastorate of Brother J. D. Newsom, the church at this place was blessed with an extensive revival. A large number were converted, and seventy-two united with the church, quite a large proportion of whom are heads of families.

Much of the interest of the meeting was due, under God, to the searching and spirited sermons and exhortations of Brother Stephen Johnson. The church here is in a good condition for effectiveness during the coming year.

Your's in Christ, L. H. B.

WHISTLER, Ala., Jan. 6, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I have entered into my new field of labor, and find plenty to do. Brother Dunlap, who has lived at this place and served the church one year, says "it is the most important work in the bounds of the Mobile Conference."

I had a fine congregation last Sabbath. There were two accessions to the church. There was one baptism and a very interesting communion service. Last night I received a dying man into the church, and baptized him and his sweet babe.

We had a church meeting last Sabbath evening, but owing to the rain the attendance was small. I presented the claims of the Advocates, and got three subscribers, and expect more soon.

Your's truly, J. J. GRACE.

To the Preachers of the Montgomery Conference.

At your late session much was said about "full minutes," and the funds necessary to defray the expenses of publication. The final action resulted in two orders:

1. The secretary must publish five thousand copies.

2. The preachers must, on reaching their fields of labor, at once raise the necessary funds and send to the secretary.

You wish to let the church know what has been done, and what is proposed for the future. This is a healthy purpose, but it will cost something—cost between four and five hundred dollars.

Shall I have five thousand copies published, with at least sixty-four pages, or shall I fall back and publish as heretofore?

The money can be raised. How? Let each preacher secure subscribers at say twenty-five cents per copy.

Who would refuse that amount for the knowledge to be gleaned, through this channel, of the activities, the results and developments of our church for 1868? I shall expect a hearty response from every minister, and from many laymen, within our bounds.

Another item. A resolution was passed requiring every preacher to send to the secretary the name of his post office, county and State, to be published in the minutes. There is danger of delaying the publication. Only two have complied up to date.

JOHN MATHEWS,
Secretary.

JANUARY 1, 1869.

PREACHING AND PRAYER.—An American pastor saw his preaching extraordinarily blessed. For twelve years he had a revival in his church every year. He was himself surprised at such success, until one evening, in a prayer meeting, one of the brethren stated that for some years he had been in the habit of praying every Saturday until midnight that on the morrow the preaching of his pastor might find its way to the people's hearts. We should, without doubt, see more fruits of the numerous sermons which are preached every Sunday, if every minister had one friend who took really to the heart his pastoral work, and presented it without ceasing at the throne of grace.

A sermon of a Scotch preacher, John Livingston, was the means of the conversion of five hundred persons in one day. But it should be said that a large number of Christians had devoted all the preceding night to prayer for this object. Let us not forget that the Holy Spirit alone can make preaching efficacious, and that he is sent in answer to the prayer of faith.

WE are always looking into the future, but we see only the past.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

REV. DR. GEORGE W. STEWART died near his late residence, in Madison county, Mississippi, on the evening of the 9th of November, 1868.

He was born in East Tennessee, May 23, 1810. He was converted to God and called to preach the Gospel in his twenty-second or twenty-third year. He removed to the place of his late residence in 1835, and has spent his life in the practice of his profession, preaching as a local minister in the Methodist Church regularly and faithfully, as opportunity offered. He was married to Miss Mary Crozier in 1838, who, with an interesting family, still survive him.

The above dates contain in brief the salient points in the history of a true friend to his Maker and to his race. The particulars of that history, stretching, as it does, over a period of fifty-eight years, and spent in the duties of the two most useful professions of earth, would fill a volume, which would interest and benefit the reader, exemplify and adorn the Christian character, and reflect honor upon the man himself.

From the time of his conversion to the day of his death, love to Christ and his church were predominant traits in his character. All things were held truly subservient to the claim of God. Honor and wealth did not tempt him to stray. He sought rather to lay up treasure where moth and rust do not corrupt. Trials and sufferings did not dismay him. He was confident in the faith that one moment in glory would make up for them all. A firm faith in the overruling providence of God carried him safely over the rocks that stranded the belief of many. During the late war and at its close, when many were wavering in faith, and some, alas! actually avowing their infidelity, he was accustomed to say that God was at the helm, and that all things were working together for good.

Religion was with him not a mere profession—not something that he would lay on and off as a garment—but it was a part of himself. It had taken possession of his heart, and spoke out in his words and exemplified itself in his actions. He loved the people of God and the place of worship. His delight was to talk of religious experience and to sing the songs of Zion. There was nothing austere in his piety. He was genial and frank. In the social circle, with his own family at home, as well as with acquaintances abroad, the love of Christ and the service of God were as household words. Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth spoke.

Dr. Stewart was a most successful practitioner of medicine. He had that combination so very desirable, yet so rare—skill in his profession, with continual dependence upon the great Physician. With him, in "saving the sick," the "prayer of faith" always accompanied the "anointing with oil." The healing agent could only be efficacious with the blessing of God. He practiced a great deal among the poor. If they were unable to pay, the expectation of hearing from the great Judge, "I was sick and ye visited me," was compensation sufficient for him.

As a preacher Dr. Stewart aimed at immediate results. It did not satisfy him to think that he had preached an acceptable sermon unless he could believe that sinners had been awakened or believers comforted. He was so entirely opposed to sermons gotten up for show—to that kind of preaching which has the enticing words of man's wisdom merely—that perhaps he rather erred on the other side, trusting too much to the inspiration of the moment. He was an ex tempore preacher, and occasionally his discourses were delivered with thrilling effect. At camp meetings, in his earlier days, his ministry was often so attended with the demonstration of the Spirit that vast throngs would be aroused to the highest pitch of religious excitement.

He loved the ministry of Christ. He felt great comfort and pride in giving to the church his eldest surviving son, Rev. Andrew B. Stewart, of the Mississippi Conference. He himself once joined the same Conference, and filled with success and acceptability the Raymond and Spring Ridge circuit; but at the close of that year, being unable to attend the Conference, he was discontinued from the traveling connection through a misapprehension of his brethren, and because his services as a physician were so much prized and needed in his old neighborhood. He had made all his preparations to rejoin the Conference, which was to meet just eleven days after his death, and he felt great satisfaction in the prospect of spending the remainder of his days in the untrammeled service of the church. But God had a better appointment in reserve for his servant. He had proved him to be faithful in a few things, and took him to be a ruler over many things.

He was sick only nine days. He was so violently attacked as to be unable to reach home, having to stop at the house of his niece. His sick-room, from the very first, was a place of almost continuous worship of God. Prayer and praise were being constantly offered up. His death displayed the completest triumph of Christianity. There was not an action, not a word, not a look that betrayed the slightest trepidation. All was calm, trusting, triumphant. A number of Christian friends witnessed his death, and all could indorse the sentiment:

"Privileged beyond the walks of common life,
Quite on the verge of heaven
Is the chamber where the good man meets his fate."

C. G. ANDREWS.

CATECHISING CHILDREN.—The Jewish Rabbins observe a very strict method in the instruction of children and others, according to their age and capacity. At five years old they were called sons of the law, to read it. At thirteen they were sons of precept, to understand the law; then they received the Passover as a sacrament, for even children did eat it as a remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt. At fifteen years old they came to be Talmudists, and went to deeper points of the law, the Talmudich doubts. Thus did the Jews. And let not Christians lag behind them in propagating the truths of Jesus Christ, their Master. Let children be well instructed, principled and catechised in the fundamentals of the Christian religion; for without catechising, the people perish in the want of knowledge, and become fit subjects for every priest, Jesuit and sectary to work upon. The papists have confessed that all the ground we have gotten of them is by a more diligent requiring and practice of it. In a word, catechising is as well a family as a church duty. Were but the family well instructed, the minister would have less work to do; there would not be so many uncatechised heads, nor so many weather-cock Christians as now are to be found among us.—Spencer.

THE TEACHER.—One cannot prescribe specific methods and duties for teachers. Each one will work out in those ways in which he finds he works best. If I were called upon to say what is the first and greatest qualification of a Sabbath school teacher, I should say it is to have his heart full of the Holy Ghost. That would be the first thing needed, the second thing needed, and the third needed. Be prompt: Every superintendent knows how chilling it is to look over the school and see that half the teachers are not present. Be earnest: I do not mean be in earnest simply in the Sabbath school, but everywhere. Be direct and personal: Remember you are dealing with immortal souls, and that you and they must stand before the judgment seat of Christ. Be exemplary: in the week day as well as on the Sabbath; in your business as well as in your religion. Be prayerful: Whatever you do and however you do it, neglect not to call upon God to bless the means. It will be your fault if he does not send his Holy Spirit. Be hopeful: Be expectant: How can a teacher be otherwise? Believe that God will convert the children. It is useless to work without this; having it we certainly shall succeed.—Scarrett.

CHRISTIANITY has given to truth a dignity, independent of time and numbers. It has required that truth should be believed and respected for itself.—Vinet.

SANCTIFIED afflictions are like so many artificers, working on a pious man's crown, to make it more bright and massive.

VANITY.

The sun comes up and the sun goes down,
And the day and the night are the same as one;
The year grows green and the year grows brown,
And what is it all when all is done?
Grains of sombre or shining sand,
Gliding into and out of the hand.

And men go down in ships to the seas,
And a hundred ships are the same as one;
And backward and forward blows the breeze;
And what is it all when all is done?
A tide with never a shore in sight,
Steadily, steadily on to the night.

The fisherman droppeth his net in the stream,
And a hundred streams are the same as one;
And the maiden dreameth a love-lit dream;
And what is it all when all is done?
The net of the fisher the burden breaks,
And after dreaming the dreamer wakes.

EXTRACT FROM A SERMON

PREACHED AT TRINITY CHURCH, BALTIMORE, BY REV. R. A. HOLLAND.

"How old art thou?"—Gen. 47: 8.

This is the last Sabbath of the old year. It brings to our hearts a black-bordered invitation to attend his death scene. Let us, then, in imagination gather around his couch to hear a sage's counsel and kneel at his side to receive a patriarch's blessing. Pale, emaciated, wrinkled and gray-haired, the dying year lingers under his sheet of snow—with eyes fixed on vacancy as if in effort of recollection—with breath feeble and short as if almost spent. His thin lips move. Bow thy ear, my brother, and catch the farewell whisper—"How old art thou?" Ah, it is a solemn question. It sends memory down the cypress-shaded vista of the past to count the milestones life has left behind, which are indeed the tombstones of dead years, whose dust shall hear no resurrection trump; and as she pensively passes from slab to slab and stoops to decipher their weather-stained inscriptions, it is not strange that tears get tangled in her long eye-lashes and that involuntary sighs startle the stillness of her reveries. How much of thy time is gone, irreparably gone; and of what is it composed? Hast thou truly lived? Hast thou caught the moments as they flew by and tied around their carrier-dove necks messages of love to God, written in good works?

How old art thou in sin?

Born in iniquity and nurtured in disobedience, how long hast thou despised the reproofs of conscience and turned away from the sweet persuasions of religion?—how long hast thou postponed penitence with specious promises of future amendment—promises which, because broken, have only aggravated the sense of guilt they were designed to allay.

Five, ten, twenty years have elapsed since persons in this congregation swore to themselves that they would forsake the ways of sin, descending to hell, and follow the footprints of Christ to heaven. It was probably on an occasion like the present, when seated in the sanctuary and cut to the soul's quick by the word of truth—"sharper than any two-edged sword"—that they anointed the wound of conviction by a pledge at some more convenient season to call for the Spirit of God. That pledge has been often re-applied. When felled by the stroke of severe sickness, they languished through dreary days darkened by the shadow of death; they vowed in importunate prayers for recovery that if spared they would give their lives as a pure thank-offering to God. When bending over the wan features of a pale face, watching the hectic shift on the hollow cheek, feeling the flickering pulse, wiping with a gentle hand the death-damp—the dew of heaven's dawn—from the cold forehead, kissing the colorless lips already parted for the spirit's flight from the body, they promised between stifling sobs to meet the dear one then just ready to depart, among the white robed saints who worship around the throne. When standing at the grave of a husband, a wife, a parent, a child—one whose life had become so enfibred with theirs that the shock which sundered the union was like an earthquake of the soul; as they took the last, lingering look of the loved lineaments locked in lifeless marble—saw the coffin slowly slide into the ground—heard the solemn "dust to dust," and the heavy fall of shovelled clods—thought of the fond embraces, the holy confidences, the many hours made happy by being enjoyed in each other's society, all buried, buried under the sod; oh! with what deep sincerity of grief did they resolve to renew the precious companionship beyond the dividing stream of death. Had you insinuated to them then that at the end of this year those oaths would be still unredeemed and blotted over with perjury, they would have spurned with indignation the dishonoring insult. But moons have waxed and waned, seasons have chased each other in annual round, and the life that was to improve has steadily tended downward to deeper depravity, and the heart that was to be placed upon God's altar, has lain in the mire as offal for the swine of sinful appetites, and the spirit of that departed friend, which was to shine from the sky as a load-star to guide a heavenward course, has watched with misty beam a rudderless wreck drifting nearer and nearer the engulfing maelstrom of hell!

How old art thou in sin? How long hast thou been hazarding thy immortality against the Devil's stake of a little life-time's lust of flesh? How long hast thou been defying the wrath of him who is a consuming fire! How long hast thou been using the name that seraphs adore, as a by-word to spice a vulgar jest or emphasize an angry oath? How long have thy knees been stiffened by pride from bending in prayer and thy eyes been blinded by the dust of sordid cares from gazing after Christ into the sky? How long have God's Sabbaths, beautiful with sunshine, looks of hope, been beckoning thee in vain to that rest they typify? or melancholy with rain-weepings of sympathy been ineffectually pleading with thee to flee like Bunyan's Pilgrim from the city of destruction? What o'clock is it, O man, in thy brief day? How many hours past noon? How few till dark? Are there no thunder clouds piled around thy Western horizon like bastions ready to belch forth fury?—no rumbling sounds as of distant peals predicting the storm? If thou wouldst not have thy sun set in gloom and tempest; if thou wouldst have it go down clear and cast back on the world a twilight testimony that means "this eventide enchanting vision here with its celestial hues is only a hint of the more glorious morn that is at the same moment breaking beyond in a world where there is no night"—is it not high time for thee to invoke the breezes of God's spirit to blow away these direful portents which sin so rapidly gathers about the dusk of the wicked.

Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

The Wesleyans and the Elections.

The last Watchman states that the Wesleyans were bitterly misrepresented in the late elections throughout the kingdom. We quote:

Our connection, as such, has no politics. It exists for purely spiritual and evangelical purposes. This was clearly explained at the last Conference, and was set forth in the president's letter. Among the Wesleyan Methodists there are Conservatives and Liberals of all shades and classes, and every man exercises the right of private judgment, without let or hinderance. Let us, however, say to our church friends that if any Wesleyan Methodists have, in the late elections, assumed an attitude of active hostility to the church, some of the clergy have to thank themselves for it. They have denounced us as schismatics, they have treated our ministers as laymen, they have rebaptized our children, they have refused to bury our dead, they have driven our children from the national schools because their parents wished them to attend their own Sabbath school, they have prevented us obtaining sites for schools and chapels, they have dismissed Methodist servants and ejected Methodist tenants, and they have threatened to prosecute our missionary collectors under the vagrancy act! We are thankful to believe that ten thousand faithful and excellent clergymen would scorn such conduct and condemn such doings, but while a large section of their brethren treat us thus it is not difficult to understand how it is that the love of Methodists for the church has undergone some abatement.

But the gravest charge that has been brought against the Wesleyan Methodists is that they have betrayed Protestantism, and the proof is that they have indorsed Mr. Gladstone's policy for the disendowment and disestablishment of the Irish Church. Let us say that, while we are favorable to the abstract principle of a national ecclesiastical establishment, our Protestantism is entirely independent of that principle. According to the teaching of Mr. Wesley, and to our own profoundest convictions, the essence of Protestantism is found in the supremacy of the Bible and in the doctrine of salvation by grace. It is true that for years we have been friendly to the United Church of England and Ireland because we believed it to be the bulwark of Protestantism, but when we find one school of clergymen denying the divine inspiration of the holy Scriptures, and another school trying to subvert the Reformation, we honestly confess that our faith in existing establishments is very much shaken. It is not improbable that the proposed experiment with the Irish Church will soon be tried upon the English Church. If it is to be simply a question of majorities and minorities, a few years will wind up the whole business. If churchmen expect Wesleyan Methodists to prove their Protestantism by defending the church, churchmen must convince the Wesleyan Methodists that the Protestantism of the church is worth defending.

RAGGED SCHOOLS IN NAPLES.

"I had the pleasure, one day, of visiting nearly all the free schools which the wise philanthropy of the Protestant residents of Naples has established in that city. * * * I cannot help offering a very cordial homage to the truth that the missionaries are doing a vast deal of good in Naples, where they are not only spreading the Gospel, but the spelling book, the arithmetic and the geography.

"It is not to be understood from the word missionaries, that this work is done by men especially sent from England or America to perform it. The free Protestant schools in Naples are conducted under the auspices of the Evangelical Aid Committee—composed of members of the English Church, the Swiss Church and the Presbyterian Church; the president of this committee is Dr. Strango, an Englishman, and the treasurer is Mr. Rogers, the American banker. The missionaries in Naples, therefore, are men who have themselves found out their work, and appointed themselves to do it. * * * *

"The schools are no older than the union of Naples with the kingdom of Italy, when toleration of Protestantism was decreed by law; and, from the first, their managers proceeded upon a principle of perfect openness and candor with the parents who wished to send their children to them. They announced that the children would be taught certain branches of learning, and that the whole Bible would be placed in their hands to be studied and understood. In spite of this declaration of the Protestant character of the schools, the parents of the children were so anxious to secure them the benefits of education that they willingly ran the risk of their becoming heretics. They were principally people of the lower classes—laborers, hackmen, fishermen, domestics and very small shopkeepers—but occasionally among them were parents able to send their children to other schools, yet preferring the thorough and conscientious system practiced in these. So the children came, and, thanks to the peaceful, uncombative nature of Italian boys, who get on with much less waylaying and thumping and bullying than boys of Northern blood, they have not been molested by their companions who still live the wild life of the streets, and they have only once suffered through interference of the priests. On complaint to the authorities, the wrong was promptly redressed, and was not again inflicted. Of course, these poor little people, picked up out of the vileness and ignorance of a city that had suffered for ages the most degrading oppression, are by no means regenerate yet, but there seems to be great hope for them. Now, at least, they are taught a reasonable and logical morality—and who can tell what wonders the novel instruction may not work? They learn for the first time that it is a foolish shame to lie and cheat, and it would scarcely be surprising if some of them were finally persuaded that honesty is the best policy—a maxim that few Italians believe."—Howell's Italian Journeyings.

THE USE OF REMEMBERING.—'What's the use of remembering all this?' pettishly cried a boy, after his father, who had been giving him some instructions, left the room.

'I'll tell you what, remembering is of great service sometimes,' said his cousin. 'Let me read to you now. Please hear.'

'My dog dash was once stolen from me,' says Mr. Kidd. 'After being absent thirteen months, he one day entered my office in town with a long string tied round his neck. He had broken away from the fellow who had held him prisoner. Our meeting was a very joyful one. I found out the thief, had him apprehended, and took him before a magistrate. He swore the dog was his, and called witnesses to bear him out. 'Mr. Kidd,' asked the lawyer, addressing me, 'can you give any satisfactory proof of this dog being your property?' Placing my mouth to the dog's ear—first giving him a knowing look—and whispering a little communication known only to us two, Dash immediately reared up on his hind legs, and went through with a series of manœuvres with a stick, guided meanwhile by my eye, which set the whole court in a roar. My evidence needed nothing stronger; the thief stood convicted, Dash was liberated, and among the cheers of the multitude we merrily bounded homeward.'

That dog's remembering was of service to him; it was taken as evidence in a court, and it fairly got the case. Yes, he was set free and the thief was convicted. Well, if remembering his master's instructions served a dog so well, how much more likely it is to be important for a boy to treasure up the instructions of his father? No knowing what straits they may keep him out of.—Child's World.

Breaking Out of the French Revolution.

Civil war broke out openly as soon as the Assembly refused to declare the Catholic religion the church of the nation. The ignorant and superstitious masses of Nimes, Uzez and Montauban showed as much fury against those who had abolished an odious privilege, as the people of Paris had exhibited against its champions. But violence was the law of both parties, and liberty was destined to be enfeebled and wounded in the contest. As soon as the defeat of the motion of Dom Gerle was known in the South, the clergy began to excite the people to send violent protests to the Assembly. In April, 1790, a large meeting was held at Nimes in the church of the White Penitents. They petitioned unanimously in favor of the ancient state of things. This meeting was preceded and followed by exhibitions of Catholic effervescence. Wherever they caught sight of a Protestant the cry was, "Kill him! kill him!" Similar scenes took place at Uzez and in Alsace. In the latter province the Jews were sadly maltreated. Surely the Catholic party was unfortunate in its mode of procedure. It strove to obtain the rights of conscience by petitioning that these rights should be blotted from the constitution of the country; but this inconsistency will surprise no one who understands how manifold are the tortuosities of the human heart. The Assembly ordered procedure against the abettors of the troubles at Nimes, and summoned to its bar (despite the invocation in their favor, by Malouet, of the rights of meeting and discussion) the chief signers of the petition. But the trouble did not cease. The news of the adoption of the Civil Constitution of the clergy intensified the displeasure of the South. In the months of May and June it took at Nimes, all the features of earnest war. The opposition arose not from fanaticism alone, but rather from fanaticism used as a tool by the party of the old regime. This is clear from the declaration of Froment, the chief exciter of these troubles. "One strong passion," said he, "cannot be quenched except by exciting a still stronger one; consequently the republican mania can only be counteracted by calling into play a zeal for religion." The struggle broke out at the municipal elections. The Catholic party at Nimes, always fanatical and determined not to tolerate religious equality before the law, firmly resolved to prevent the election of Protestants. Their rage knew no bounds when they learned of the honor conferred by the National Assembly in April on Rabaut St. Etienne. A placard was put up bearing these insulting words: "The infamous National Assembly has just capped the climax of its iniquities by electing as its president a Protestant." A league was formed. Troops of zealous Catholics, with a special badge, calling themselves the Companies of the Cross, were formed in opposition to the National Guard, which latter was composed of all classes of citizens. Every means was used to work up the feelings. Nocturnal meetings were held in the churches, and violent harangues delivered. Incendiary pamphlets representing religion as proscribed, and the King as in captivity, were spread abroad. In these libels the Protestants were described as venomous serpents, whom numbness alone had hitherto kept from harming, but who, now that they were recalled to life by favors, were engaged in plotting vengeance and death. The struggle broke out June 13th, by an assault of the champions of the cross on the troops of the Guard. The day previous the peasantry had rushed in from the country, but had mostly returned home as soon as they learned that they were desired to defend the counter revolution. The Protestants of the neighborhood had also taken the alarm and flocked to the city. They would also have returned, had they not been violently attacked from the convent of Capuchins. Furious at this assault, they rushed upon the Catholic companies. Finally a parley for peace was entered upon. This was interrupted at the order of the royalist Froment, who was posted at the castle, by an attack with musketry. This traitorous act broke up all hope of peace, and delivered the city to the rage of the justly exasperated Protestants and republicans. More than three hundred Catholics were slain in the city; while in the neighboring country the scale was reversed, and the blood of Protestants was freely shed. Impartial history must admit that the misfortunes at Nimes were the natural fruit of an abominable plot worthy the days of St. Bartholomew. The party which provoked them was not defending the liberties of the church, but rather its odious privileges and intolerance.—Prevsense's Religion and the Reign of Terror.

IF WE examined our own faults, we should have less time to detect, and more inclination to pardon those in others.

A HUNDRED YEARS IN PRISON.—A certain housebreaker was condemned in the latter part of the last century in France, and under peculiar circumstances, to a hundred years in the galley, and, strange to relate, this man recently made his appearance in his own native province at the advanced age of one hundred and twenty years, he having been twenty years old when the sentence which condemned him to such a dreadful punishment was passed. It is difficult to conceive what the feeling must have been with which he returned, as soon as emancipated from the shackles which had enthralled him for a century, to breathe once more the cherished air of the scene of his infancy. Bourg, in the department of Ain, was his native home, but time had so changed the aspect of the whole that he recognized it only by the church of Brou, which was the only thing that had undergone no alteration. He had triumphed over laws, bondage, man, time, everything. Not a relation had he left, not a single being could he hail in acquaintance, yet he was not without experiencing the homage and the respect—the French pay old age. For himself he had forgotten everything connected with his early youth; even all recollection of the crime for which he had suffered was lost, or, if at all remembered, it was a dreary vision confounded with a thousand other dreary visions of days long gone by. His family and connections for several generations are all dead, himself a living proof of the clemency of heaven and the severity of man, regretting, perhaps, the very irons which had been familiar to him, and half wishing himself again among the wretched and suffering beings with whom his fate had been so long associated. Well might he be called the patriarch of burglars.

AN OLD AND TRUE FRIEND.—A gentleman played off a rich joke on his better half the other day. Being somewhat of an epicure, he took it into his head that morning that he would like to have a first-rate dinner. So he addressed his wife a note politely informing her that a gentleman of her acquaintance—an old and true friend—would dine with her that day. As soon as she received it, all hands went to work to get everything in order. Precisely at twelve o'clock she was prepared to receive her guest. The house was as clean as a new pin, a sumptuous dinner was on the table, and she was arrayed in her best attire. A gentle knock was heard, and she started with a palpitating heart to the door. She thought it must be an old friend, perhaps a brother, from the place whence they once moved. On opening the door, she saw her husband, with a smiling countenance.

'Why, my dear,' she said in an anxious tone, 'where is the gentleman of whom you spoke in your note?'

'Why,' replied the husband, complacently, 'here he is.'

'You said a gentleman of my acquaintance, an old and true friend, would dine with us to day.'

'Well,' said he good-humoredly, 'am I not a gentleman of your acquaintance, an old and true friend?'

'Oh!' she cried distressingly, 'is there nobody but you?'

'No.'

'Well, I declare this is too bad,' said his wife in an angry tone.

The husband laughed immoderately, but finally they sat down cosily together, and for once he had a good dinner without having company.

DRAWING FROM ANOTHER'S POND.—In a certain town, we will not say where, a man had a house to sell, but the well had no water. What does he do? He must sell the house, and therefore there must, for the time; at least, be water in the well. He accordingly, in a quiet way—for it, that is, his remedy, leaked out at length—had water brought for the purpose from a neighboring well and put into his own. He sold his house, but the next day the well was dry. A clever trick, certainly, but by no means commendable in a moral point of view. What shall we think, then, of a minister who wished to dispose of his services to a certain church, but who, fearing that his own well might be deemed too shallow, borrowed for the trial day from another's pond? What a splendid sermon! That man's pond can never run dry! And many were ready to give a call at once to this preacher who was so deep. The bargain would have been made, but for certain suspicions, which grow into proofs, that the sermon was drawn for the occasion from a fountain which flowed in a distant land.—Dr. Chaplin.

THE new suspension bridge at Niagara Falls was thrown open to the public on Saturday noon. The bridge is the longest span on the continent.

THE beauty of the mind is more lovely than that of the body.—Socrates.

FARM AND GARDEN.

SHARPENING KNIVES.—The old maxim says, "A workman is known by his tools," which is sufficiently correct for a reliable rule. The first thing of importance to a mechanic, farmer, or any other person who handles edge-tools, is to know how to put the cutting edge in order. Then those who use edge-tools ought to be instructed how to keep their tools sharp. Carving knives, broad knives, eating or case knives, and pocket knives, all need to be touched up occasionally on a fine-gritted grindstone. And when the blades are ground, the basil should not be ground too thin. Excellent tools, and especially knives, are frequently spoiled by grinding the edge so thin that there is not sufficient strength left to hold a good cutting edge. When the blade near the cutting edge is ground too thin, the steel will turn over, thus forming a feather edge, or break out. After the blades have been properly ground on a stone that runs true, the edge will be coarse, and the knife will not cut at all satisfactorily until the edge has been made more perfect by means of a fine-gritted whetstone. A coarse stone is a very unsuitable thing for putting a knife in order. A good oil stone, that will cost fifteen cents, should be employed by every family when putting knives, shears and scissors in order. Such a whetstone will save a vast deal of perplexity. An expert carver will not take the keen edge off his knife, the first slash, by drawing it across bones, but he will keep half the edge sharp by using the heel of the blade to cut among bones.—Hearth and Home.

SHOULD ORCHARDS BE PLOWED?—The most plausible argument that can be advanced against the practice of plowing the ground around fruit trees of any kind is the fact that every tree will send out a system of coronal roots just beneath the surface of the soil, which will again throw out branch rootlets in a horizontal direction, all of which will continue to multiply until the entire surface of the ground is completely occupied with open mouths of hungry rootlets, ready to drink in the first supply of nourishment that is dissolved by the falling showers. It is as much a legitimate habit of a fruit tree to provide a close network of roots, near the surface of the ground, as it is to send other roots downward into the earth. Every fruit tree, most deciduous ornamental and timber trees, as well as evergreens of all kinds, when growing on dry upland, will send down a long tap-root, for the purpose of reaching moisture, to supply the growing branches during a dry period in the growing season. Let the tap-root be removed, and the tree will make but slow growth, because its habit has been interfered with. The same is true touching the upper system of coronal, or secondary roots, near the surface of the ground. These are, what are properly called, the feeders of the parent stem. They should not be mutilated nor removed, as they usually are cut off and torn away by the plow. All vegetation should be kept down around fruit trees as far from the body as the extremity of the longest branches, by hoeing the surface over frequently, or by the application of a few inches in depth of a mulch. Fruit trees may bear well when every coronal root has been removed with the plow; but if those roots had not been removed, the crop of fruit would have been more abundant.—Hearth and Home.

PETROLEUM IN THE CAUCASUS.—One of the most remarkable deposits of petroleum is in the region of the Caucasus mountains. The oil springs have been known and the oil collected there (by skimming) for ages. On the eastern shore of the Caspian twenty thousand such wells, all of them quite shallow, are now skimmed. The wells are often quite close to each other, and a new one does not affect the productiveness of another near it. One sunk in 1863 by the very side of another, which had for centuries produced three thousand four hundred pounds per day, yielded forty thousand pounds per day, without affecting in the least the other. The American method has lately been introduced, and flowing wells have burst forth from a depth of two hundred and fifty feet, which have, until controlled, maintained a jet from forty to sixty feet high. It is calculated that nineteen million pounds are annually produced in the Caucasus region, while two hundred thousand pounds of parafline are now made from asphaltum.—New York Sun.

LAST NUMBER OF THE VOLUME.

When a wheel has turned round three hundred and sixty-four days it would seem to require but little faith to turn it one time more; and yet all the bread we have ever eaten does not lessen the need of the prayer for "daily bread." Of all callings we know of none more like a revolving wheel than this same business of publishing and editing. Its revolutions force the spirit on, no matter what may be its lassitude; if it were designed for punishment we cannot conceive of anything more ingenious; if for a test of resigned industry we know of nothing so thorough. Its motion hardly stops long enough to afford a view of the past, or even to separate past from future. And yet it has a past—a period over which we have come marvelously, mercifully.

The wise man has said that "In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin;" then a newspaper has a great accountability. Arnold, of Rugby, saw in the columns of a London "daily" the reflection of the world's temper and life, and thought there was nothing more fearfully suggestive; there might be read the whole story of its pleasure, its strife, its labor, its sorrow, its glory and its shame. To be sure some of these elements rarely find their way into a Christian Advocate; still it is sufficiently a reflex of the times to make one who reads feel that he has been borne along with the movement of the world in its columns. Indeed the ideal we have of a religious journal will always introduce an unusual measure of the secular into its pages. For we think that all the departments of healthy life should find some expression in a family paper.

When we consider what abundant opportunity it has afforded to do good, and how large the audience is that waits upon its weekly teachings, we cannot but feel with Luther the terrible force of the Saviour's law of speech: "But I say unto you that every idle word that men shall speak they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." All that we can say is we have tried to do good—to make this newspaper a source of light and spiritual comfort to the church of God.

The Presbytorian Church in New Orleans and the Methodist.

A friend who was present reports some items gathered from a sermon of Dr. Palmer's on last Sabbath The doctor stated that at the close of the war they were in debt, for their six churches, some $90,000; that this had been reduced to $28,000, and the whole was now under control. He did not wish to see his own membership any larger, but desired to aid to the utmost the various branches which had gone out from this center. He deprecated the central absorption of money and religious effort, but hoped to see six large Presbyterian churches built in this city during the next twenty years; that is, one at the rate of every three years. He would at once take the streets and go from member to member to accomplish this end.

We greatly admire and rejoice in the prosperity of this powerful arm of the Protestant Church in this city. May it be an hundred times as many more in its strength! and with such men as Dr. Palmer, and Revs. Messrs. Markham, Smith, Mallard, Wayne and Doremus, whatever can be done by toil, sacrifice, intellect and faith will be done, for they have the spirit of their Master in them. We only wish that these successes and good works may provoke our people to an equal zeal.

It occurs to us that one of the advantages of their pew system (along with certain disadvantages) is, the congregation are taught by it that the amount collected for the support of the pastor is not given; it comes as a matter of course.—And when appeals are made for the extension of Sunday schools and churches they are not discounted by the sum paid annually for preaching. The current expenses of the year are more equally distributed, and this leaves the wealthier part of the membership at liberty to aid in these outside directions.

The condition of Methodism in this city is conservative enough, may be too much so. We are out of debt, excepting one or two thousand dollars; but then we make no progress. Some of our best members and most "solid" men are in favor of doing nothing until the cash is in hand—a very sound doctrine—one that very few men act upon in their own affairs; but when will that be—when will any church have more mercy than it can use upon itself? There is always something wanted—a parsonage or an organ, or softer seats or new apparatus for the Sunday school.—Churches, like individuals, wish to be comfortable, and like individuals they are prone to think more of the children at home than of the poor without. We need—that is, the city needs—at this hour four additional large Methodist churches; one, say in the neighborhood of Bayou St. John and Claiborne streets, one out Poydras street, one on the north side of the New Basin, and one near Louisiana avenue and St. Charles streets. Methodism can do a work among the people that no other form of Protestantism can do. If she does not do it, it goes undone. But one thing is wanted, and that is money. Those of our people in this city who have money, and die here, will have no ordinary account to render, not that they have so much, but the Lord has here so much need for what they have. In an able article the New York editor estimates that the Methodist Church of that city would have been far, very far, in advance of its present strength if only eligible lots had been secured for churches at an early day, when the price of property made it comparatively easy to do so. Who is there of our people who will give a good church lot, for the cause of Christ, in either of the sections named? We call upon all to walk abroad and see what the Jesuits and other orders of the Catholic Church are accomplishing in this city—what strongholds these people are raising here who have been driven forth from Europe by their own kind and faith, as intolerable.

An able speech upon the elevation and reform of the masses, in that great commercial center, New York, by Rev. Dr. W. H. Ferris, presiding elder of the New York district, has come to hand after we had written the foregoing paragraphs. It has in it many points adaptable to our own work. To be sure we have not now that wealth of which he speaks, but we once had it; and the prospect now is that we shall soon have it again. Nor do we forget that the Methodist churches here have always had a great deal to do in proportion to their membership; and there are some who constantly respond with commendable liberality. We give a few extracts:

Aggressiveness is one of the essential attributes of Christianity and of Methodism. It is an element of health and life. The church has suffered vastly more from its timidity than from its boldness. God works with us, and there are no impossibilities.

The masses, then, are within reach: Christian effort will save many of them. An effectual door is open, and invites, commands, our utmost efforts. And who so well adapted to this work as ourselves? Our doctrines and organization, our lay-pastorate, extemporized devotions, and our more social forms of worship, all adapt us to this work. Methodism has little pomp and display to repel, but much freeness and warmth to attract. Many see the necessity, the opportunity, that is before us, and are ready to help.

The wealth of New York Methodists, made almost exclusively in this city, has never, to any creditable degree, been concentrated upon local church improvement. The time has come for a change. We have reached a crisis. We must have more churches.

The great practical question is, How are we to evangelize the city? Assuming that we have piety, then we need, 1. Money. 2. Organization 3. Work. With these we can storm the stoutest intrenchments of sin and infidelity, and carry them. And the money, the material, the men, are now with us for this work. Most of our attempts at city mission work have been crippled or foiled for lack of money. Every man who has toiled in this field has felt the pressing want of more means.

1. Men of power must man this work, and they must be supported as the pastors of our city churches are supported. Churches must be built and made attractive. Sites for churches must be procured in advance of the population. We must anticipate the growth of the city and provide for it. The poor must be sought out and clothed and fed, and this cannot be done without cost. Methodism needs at least twenty new church edifices in the city to day, costing from $25,000 to $250,000 each. We need them for the poor and for the rich as well; for a moral decay begins at the two extremes of society. Nothing can be put in the place of money; neither holy lives nor fervent prayers will answer here.

The Jews have expended for synagogues in the upper part of the city, within a single year, half as much as the value of our entire church property gathered in a century.

The venal government of this sadly misgoverned city leased perpetually to the Romish Church on Fifth avenue, for one dollar per annum, property valued at $3,000,000; nearly double in value to all our church property in the city.

Is our religion of less value than Judaism or Romanism? We will not imitate their elaborate synagogues or massive cathedrals. But we must have neat and attractive churches, and more of them. God's house should be the best in the parish. The children of Methodism will be lost to us unless church architecture keep pace with home improvements.

2. We must organize. We need a general organization to man and supervise the city mission work, and to marshal the forces. This we have already in our city Sunday school and missionary society. It is well manned and worked, so far as means will allow. It is all we need, except to increase its scope and power by more money and more laborers. The organization we now need is to make churches out of the masses—self-reliant, self-sustaining churches; not mere reuniting offices in some hall or room fitted for the occasion—not mere chapel arrangements, all the while dependent upon the parent church. This may do for a little, but these spiritual children must be weaned if you would have them healthy and full grown.

Way-side efforts amount to but little. They are a useless expenditure of time and effort. The people understand, and have, since the days of Abraham, that religion must have an altar, and God a habitation among men. The masses want religious homes quite as much as domestic ones. You must localize religion. God's ark must have a resting place among men. Not in halls that echo with God's praise on the Sabbath day, and with the revelry of the thoughtless on week day. Clothe your efforts for the masses with neat, attractive church edifices, having the sacredness of temples exclusively devoted to religion.

THE FIELD IN CHINA.

We publish this week a condensed view of the Catholic missions, taken from a Shanghai paper. It will doubtless startle the Protestant church of this country, or should, to learn the extent to which the Romish priests have already spread their nets over the Mongolian race. In a few months China will be one of the nearest missionary fields from New Orleans, St. Louis, or the Mississippi. Our intercourse with the Chinese, political and commercial, will be more intimate than with any other people, and they will receive from us, to a great extent, their religious character. The condition of an intelligent civilized pagan of the present century is very much that of the Greek and the Roman at the introduction of Christianity, and we may expect to see the same sweep of revival influence which marked the first century after the death of Christ, only the wave will pass over five hundred millions of people, speaking the same tongue, instead of the few millions who then inhabited Asia Minor and the borders of the Mediterranean. The immense influx of Chinese into this Western valley will quicken the work of evangelization. Their idols will vanish before the clear light of a New Testament worship. Their wise men will receive the religion of the West with the science of the West, for they have not learned to draw the infidel distinction between the God of nature and the God of men. Those vast multitudes cannot have learned to read without having acquired the mental development and training which are highly favorable to a reception of the great word. That which to our minds is attractive in the character of Christ will appear equally so to them. That prince of Chinese converts, Lien Seen Sang, of whom Dr. Cunnyngham said that he was the equal, intellectual and spiritual, of any member of the General Conference, was converted by the sermon on the Mount. No one but a divine person could in his opinion have conceived such a discourse. This single instance is enough to convince us of the adaptability of the Gospel to the conversion of China. One highly cultivated mind of that race is in evidence as weighty as was the conversion of the Areopagite of the power of St. Paul's preaching. The Gospel may yet receive its grandest illustrations in the quality and number of these sons of the East. Descendants as they are of those who brought a new halo with them in their search for the babe of Bethlehem, it may be reserved for them to add a new glory to the diadem of the lowly King. O for a mania for missions, as there have been manias for railroads and ocean telegraphs, and life insurance companies, and gold and silver and quicksilver discoveries! Satan is beforehand with the church as with Christ. Quickly mixing the evil with the good, and error with truth, he seeks to occupy in advance the whole of China. The Jesuits, with a thirst for power and gold, and an art for possessing them never as yet surpassed or equaled, are on the ground, strongly entrenched, busily at work, preoccupying the minds of the ignorant with dogmas as fatal and ineradicable as those which they displace. Thus does the industry of the foe force the true Christian to run quickly to the defence and salvation of those who have been bought by the blood of Christ. "For from the rising of the sun, even to the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered to my name, and a pure offering; for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts."

THE METHODIST ALMANAC FOR 1869 Hitchcock & Walden, Cincinnati It gives the times of the rising and the setting sun—that is, provided it rises far enough north. It also gives the machinery of Northern Methodism entire, including a catalogue of books for sale by H. & W.

ACTUALLY COMING.

We are receiving subscribers quite briskly. Some of the preachers have gone to work in good earnest, in the Louisiana, Mississippi, Mobile and Montgomery Conferences. So we are not to be smothered with "resolutions" merely, which are much like a man's seeing his natural face in a glass and then directly forgetting what manner of man he is. When a man stirs the Sampson that is within him, goes out of his study, and determines to dissipate the surrounding darkness of the circuit, if he be a wise man he will hold this ADVOCATE in his right hand. Then we can imagine no one more pleasantly irresistible.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

PICTURES OF "THE BETTER LAND," ETC.—Mr. James H. Hummel, 106 Camp street, advertises two beautiful pictures, to which he especially calls the attention of clergymen.

SOUTHERN AGRICULTURAL DEPOT, No. 9 Perdido street. Messrs. Thomas B. Bodley & Co. advertise largely this week, to which we call special attention, as well as to their circular, sent to our subscribers this week, of the Blymer, Norton & Co. steel composition bell.

MESSRS. GEORGE P. ROWELL & CO., advertising agents, 40 Park Row, New York. We call attention to their card, and also to their advertising circular, containing a list of all the leading daily papers in all the large towns and cities of the United States and Canada.

JAPAN.

It is not often that so original a document comes within reach as the one which we give elsewhere, taken from the Friend of China, a paper published in Shanghai. It evidences the acuteness and general information of the priests of Japan, and gives us a good notion of the kind of battle our Eastern missionaries have to wage in introducing the Gospel.

REV. ASBURY DAVIDSON.

The Texas Christian Advocate says: With a sad heart we publish the tidings of the death of Rev. Asbury Davidson. Only a few days ago we parted with him in Corpus Christi, a veteran of the cross, leaning on his shield and looking forward with confidence to the field before him. He told us that he felt in better health than for a long time past, and that there was yet a "great deal of good hard work in him." He never reached his home, it seems—died ere he reached his own roof-tree. His gray hairs have gone to a grave which will be honored in the memory of all who knew his worth. May the Lord sustain his family under this stroke, and supply the place of the prince in Israel, who has fallen.

MR. EDITOR: Brother Asbury Davidson is no more. Assisted by Brother Dunlap, I have just committed his mortal remains to the grave. On our way from Conference we were exposed to the severest weather, and on reaching the San Antonio river, opposite Helena, we found it impassable for vehicles of any kind. Brother Davidson was left on the west side of the river, to spend the night, with very poor accommodations. I crossed the river in company with Brother E. M. Fly, in order to make arrangements to meet Brother Davidson on the following morning and assist him in crossing the river. On returning, we found him too sick to sit up. We conveyed him to the residence of his nephew, Mr. James Fly, where he had every attention until his death, which occurred on Monday evening last, at half past seven.

A great and good man has fallen at his post, and in the faithful discharge of duty. He died of pneumonia. Your's in Christ,

MISSISSIPPI COLORED CONFERENCE.

HAZLEHURST, January 9, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: I hasten to inform you that Bishop Kavanaugh convened the Mississippi Colored Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at this place, on the 7th instant. Owing to the season of the year, it being midwinter, and the time to move among the colored people, there were not at first so many as is usual. The number continued, however, to increase until we had quite a respectable body of colored preachers. The bishop presided with his usual ability, giving much satisfaction to both white and colored. It consisted of about forty members, the most of whom were well tried and true men, receiving their work with much pleasure, and acquiescing in all the proceedings of the Conference.—This, I am happy to inform you, is decidedly a success, considering the embarrassments under which we have labored. You will receive the proceedings in regular form. With this I close, hoping that Louisiana may do likewise.

Truly and fraternally,

THOMAS TAYLOR, Sup't.

GENERAL LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU.

The death of this distinguished soldier has deeply impressed every good citizen. No recent event has so moved the hearts of the people. A deserved tribute to his worth has been paid by the mayor, the City Council, the courts and the Assembly. In the present unsettled state of political affairs it was a great relief to feel that we had a true man at the head of this district. To part with him in the hour when we most valued his presence is no ordinary trial. Our Christian sympathies are with all the members of his family.

The following order from military headquarters will be read with great interest:

HEADQUARTERS DEP'T OF LOUISIANA,
New Orleans, La., Jan 9, 1869.
General Orders No. 2.

It becomes the painful duty of the brevet major general commanding to announce to the officers and soldiers serving in this command the death of the distinguished patriot and soldier, Lovell H. Rousseau, brevet major general and brigadier general, United States army.

General Rousseau was born in Lincoln county, Kentucky, August 2, 1818. He studied law in the office of his brother, Richard L. Rousseau—now United States minister to Honduras, Central America—and began to practice in 1841, in Green county, Indiana, entering into partnership with James Dozier, a distinguished member of the Kentucky bar.

During the war with Mexico he commanded a company of the second regiment Indiana volunteers, and was highly complimented by Colonel Humphrey Marshall for his gallantry in the repulse of an attack of Mexican cavalry at the battle of Buena Vista.

Upon his return from Mexico he was elected to the lower house of the State Legislature; and at the expiration of his term was elected to the upper house. His readiness in debate, and the accuracy of his judgment, won for him golden opinions from the legislators of the time.

General Rousseau was appointed brigadier general, United States volunteers, October 6, 1861, and was promoted major general, United States volunteers, October 8, 1862, for gallant and distinguished services in the field. He served with great distinction in the battles of Shiloh, Perryville, Stone river, Tullahoma, Chickamauga and Chattanooga, and commanded a very successful raid through Alabama in 1864.

He was elected a member of the thirty-ninth Congress, and was serving in that capacity when appointed a brigadier general in the regular army on the 28th of March, 1867.

Immediately after his appointment he was assigned to the command of the Department of Columbia, on the Pacific coast, consisting of the State of Oregon and the Territories of Idaho and Washington. Whilst exercising this command he was selected by the President of the United States, as commissioner on the part of the United States, to receive the territory of Alaska from the emperor of Russia.

This duty performed, he returned to the command of his department, whence he was subsequently summoned to Washington. On the 28th of July, 1868, he was assigned to the command of the Department of Louisiana, comprising the States of Louisiana and Arkansas, with headquarters at New Orleans, where, during the peculiarly exciting circumstances attending the late presidential election, affairs in this State, both civil and military, were so judiciously and ably administered as to prevent almost entirely the loss of life and property, which would have resulted had the anticipated collision taken place. During the exercise of this last important command, he has suddenly passed from among us.

It is difficult in a military order to properly express our appreciation of the civic and military virtues which adorned this illustrious man. He was frank, open and generous in the extreme. He endeared himself to all who enjoyed the pleasure of his acquaintance.—Highly chivalrous and brave, he loved his country with an ardor and devotion rarely equaled, and never excelled. A proud defender of the Union, and staunch supporter of the Constitution, his example is to be emulated by all who succeed him.

As a proper token of respect in memory of the deceased, the officers of the army on duty in this department will wear the usual badge of mourning for a period of thirty days.

By command of Brevet Major General R. C. Buchanan.

Horace Greeley on Political Economy.

GREELEY'S HISTORY OF THE WAR.

MR. GREELEY purposes to write, during the year 1869, an elementary work on Political Economy, wherein the policy of Protection to Home Industry will be explained and vindicated. This work will first be given to the public through successive issues of the NEW YORK TRIBUNE, and will appear in all its editions—Daily, Semi-Weekly and Weekly. The work will contain the best results of the observations and study of a lifetime, and, as the question of Protection to American Industry concerns our entire people, it will be looked for with great interest. In addition to this work by Mr. Greeley, the TRIBUNE has engaged George Geddes, one of the best and most successful farmers in the country, and other able writers on Agricultural subjects, to write regularly for its columns. The American Institute Farmers' Club will continue to be reported in the SEMI-WEEKLY and WEEKLY TRIBUNE. No farmer who desires to till the soil with profit, and to know the progress constantly made in the science of his calling, can afford to neglect the advantages of a newspaper like the WEEKLY TRIBUNE, especially when it unites with agriculture other features of interest and profit. The WEEKLY TRIBUNE contains a summary of all that appears in the Daily and Semi-Weekly editions, while in addition it is made to address itself to the wants of the great farming class. Reviews of new publications, and of what is new in music and the fine arts; letters from different parts of the world—some of them of rare interest to the farmer, as showing the progress of agriculture in other countries; editorial essays on all topics of home and foreign interest, together with full and carefully printed reports of the markets, will be furnished from week to week, and at a lower price than that of any other newspaper in America. By pursuing this policy the WEEKLY TRIBUNE has attained its present commanding influence and circulation, and we enter upon the new year with an assurance to our readers that no pains and no expense will be spared to give it still greater usefulness and power, and to make it a yet more welcome visitor to every fireside in the land.

GREELEY'S HISTORY OF THE WAR.

The TRIBUNE also proposes to send "The American Conflict," by Horace Greeley, in two volumes of 648 and 782 pages respectively, to clubs, on terms stated below. This history has received from all quarters the highest commendations for accuracy of statement and fulness of detail. It is substantially bound, and must be deemed a valuable addition to any library. These volumes should be placed in every School District library in the land, and each school contains scholars who can, with a few hours of attention, raise a Tribune Club and secure the history. Almost any one who wishes can now obtain it by giving a few hours to procuring subscriptions for the TRIBUNE among his friends and neighbors, and we hope many will be incited to do so. The work will be promptly forwarded, prepaid, by express or by mail, on receipt of the required subscriptions.

TERMS OF THE TRIBUNE.

DAILY TRIBUNE.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

THE BEST IN THE WORLD.

NEW VOLUME JANUARY 1.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN FOR 1869.

The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is the largest, the best, the cheapest and most popular journal in the world, devoted to Invention, Mechanics, Manufactures, Art, Science and General Industry, and contains a vast amount of very interesting and valuable reading matter for all classes.

Among the many important subjects discussed are steam and mechanical engineering in all its branches, chemistry and all its varied processes and discoveries, agriculture and all improved farm and household implements, architecture and building, mining and metal working, fire-arms, manufacturing, hydraulics, railroad improvements, photography and the fine arts, new inventions, scientific sports and games, popular lectures upon scientific and mechanical subjects, articles by able writers, practical workshop and household receipts, and many other things instructive and useful to all classes of readers.

Each number contains from five to ten original engravings of new machines and processes, also an official list of patents granted at the Patent Office, with names of patentees, together with illustrations and editorial notices of the principal inventions. The numbers of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN for one year make up two handsome volumes of four hundred and sixteen pages each, full of choice reading, and illustrated by hundreds of splendid Engravings.

The new volume commences January 1, therefore now is the time to send in subscriptions to begin the volume. Terms: The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is issued every week, in sixteen large quarto pages, at $3 a year; $1 50 for six months. Clubs of ten names, or upwards, $2 50 each per annum.

Specimen numbers sent free.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE MORNING MARCH.

BY ELLEN M. H. GATES.

See the children, marching, marching,
O! how gaily now they tread,
Morning skies above them arching,
Blue, and gold, and rosy red;
Dewdrops sparkle on the grasses,
Bird songs float from every tree,
And the children laugh and chatter,
Pleased with every thing they see.

O, the happy, careless children,
Some have many a mile to go,
On the highlands, in the lowlands,
Storms may beat and winds may blow;
They will drink from many a fountain,
They will knock at many a door,
Love, and joy, and peace, and honor,
Seeking, seeking, evermore.

O, the precious, precious children,
Some will weary by and by,
Long before their sun that shineth
Shall be half way up the sky,
They will say, "O, little playmates,
Leave us now, let go our hands,
We can hear in faintest whispers,
Words you cannot understand.

Leave us here and go without us,
Through to-morrow's golden gate;
With the violets o'er us growing,
We a little while will wait."
So the children kiss each other,
Lips like coral, lips like snow;
Ah! how sad the broken columns,
Some to stay, and some to go.

Blessings on the little children!
Scatter flowers beneath their feet,
Tell to them your gladdest stories,
All your happy songs repeat;
Grown to thoughtful men and women,
Soon this morning march will be Something sweet they left behind them,
The rose-path of memory.

—Little Corporal.

A Child Taken off by an Eagle and Carried Two Miles.

A gentleman named Bowers, from Meigsville, Jackson county, now in town, informs us that, on Christmas eve, about three o'clock in the afternoon, the farm of a Mr. Whiteside, about five miles from Meigsville, was the scene of a most exciting and nearly fatal event. It is briefly this:

Mr. Whiteside was in the little town doing some business; his wife was away at a neighbor's, where a sick child was struggling with cholera infantum, and the only in-door servant they had was out in the barn looking after some cattle, when their child—a bright little boy, just learning to toddle around on its little feet and prattle the name of pa—tumbled or crawled out of its cradle, in which it was left asleep by the servant a few moments before, and managed somehow to get to the door, which was, unfortunately, open at the time, although the girl left in charge of the place swore that she had closed it on going out.

The child tumbled into the front yard, it is supposed, and was crying and sprawling around, when a great gray eagle, seen by the girl as she was leaving the barn, came swooping down, and, fastening its immense and cruel talons in the clothing of the little boy, rose up, apparently with much difficulty, as high as it could, which was not very high, and sailed off across the adjacent woods, just skimming, as the servant says, the tops of the trees. When the servant saw the eagle coming down, as she was leaving the barn, she had a presentment of the strangest kind, and says that she felt that the child was out doors, and that the fierce bird of prey was pouncing down upon it; but when in a moment after she beheld the great tyrant of the air rise above the house top with the little child in its claws, she grew dizzy and fell to the ground. Her weakness, however, did not continue long; the cold air blowing across her face revived her quickly, and jumping on her feet and gazing round wildly, she saw the eagle disappearing over the woods in the direction of the Cumberland river. She was filled with but one impulse—to rescue the little boy. She became as one frantic, for she had a remarkable affection for the child. She rushed forward, bounded over the fence as if she were endowed with the lightness and agility of a deer; dashed into the wood, dark and tangled as it was, not taking time to hunt out footpaths or cow tracks. She instinctively felt that the thieving bird would keep in a straight line, and she kept in a straight line also. With the strength and unthinking courage of a strong man who has become suddenly deranged, she dashed the undergrowth aside, crossed ravines as if she were on the level plain, spurned the fallen trees and jagged rocks as if they were the smoothest and softest moss. The patch of wood was fully a mile and a half through; but the girl made the run to the other edge of it without feeling in the least fatigued. Beyond the wood, and between it and the river, lay a patch of cleared ground, partly marshy and partly corn field, full of old stumps. When she left the wood, and had a clear view, she saw the eagle as if he were inclined to alight with his burden somewhere in the neighborhood of the river.—This gave her new courage and fresh hope, and she ran forward with increased speed. It luckily happened at that time that there was a man hunting in the neighboring marshes, and just at the particular moment, when the eagle reached the ground with his burden, a shot went off, so dangerously and alarmingly near him (for the hunter was behind a clump of bushes, about twenty yards off, and had his back toward the spot where the eagle and the child were,) that he mounted into the air again, but this time without his burden. The pursuing girl was filled with joy, when she beheld the bird rise without the child. But fearing he would return, as he seemed inclined to do, she set up a vigorous shouting as she ran, which attracted the hunter's attention in that direction, who, seeing the eagle quite near him, and a lady running down the slope with streaming hair and garments, and wildly shouting, concluded at once there was something strange and, perhaps, dreadful in his immediate vicinity, and he also set up a vigorous hallooing, and proceeded to reload his gun with much precipitation, forgetting to go after the game which he had just shot.

The eagle became aware of the formidable opposition he would meet if he attempted to recapture his prey, and thinking better of it, he wheeled round and swung himself in one grand swoop across the river and disappeared behind the shelving rock which forms the opposite bank at that point before a shot from the hunter's gun was ready to speed its flight to his bold heart. When the girl came down to the hunter, she fell stiff, and was not able even to indicate what was the matter. While the rough gallant was endeavoring to restore her to consciousness, he heard the scream of a child, and leaving the slowly recovering girl, he went toward the spot where the screaming came from, and beheld a fine, healthy rosy boy, with torn clothes, but otherwise uninjured, endeavoring to rise upon his little feet. The tears streamed down his little innocent cheeks, and his face wore a most hideous expression. He took the baby in his arms and carried it to the girl, who was now sufficiently recovered to comprehend that her beloved charge was safe. She clasped it to her bosom, covered it with kisses and wept with joy.

In the meantime the mother and father of the child had returned home, and finding it empty, with no sign to indicate where the inmates were gone, save a bucket of spilled milk out near the barn, where the girl had dropped it in her flight, they became exceedingly anxious and uneasy; but the return of the servant, the hunter and the wonderful little voyageur, who had the most thrilling adventure that was ever heard of, restored them to tranquility. There was a truly merry and joyous Christmas in that household. Nashville Press, January 1.

A SPONGE—WHAT IS IT?

'What is sponge made of?' said George, gasping, snuffing and winking under his Croton bath. No one near could tell him, and the maid suggested that he 'needn't be askin' such foolish questions, but just keep still and get washt;' and so the matter ended.

Now, listen, Georgie, and I will tell you what a sponge is.

The sponge which washes your face was brought up from the bottom of the ocean, and was part of a living animal. For a long time sponges were supposed to be plants, but later observations have decided them to be animals, and they are placed in the class Protozoa, the class most resembling plants.

When first found in the water their appearance is very different from this which you now see. This is the skeleton only—the part corresponding to our bones. When this was a complete living thing, deep down under the ocean, it was covered all over the outside, and filled in every one of these little holes, with a soft substance something like the white of an egg, and this was like our flesh. It was fastened tightly to a rock, and its color was a dull, bluish black on the upper side and a dirty white below. It was formerly supposed to be a plant, because it was always fast in one place; but for other reasons it is decidedly an animal. All through this mass is a regular circulation, like our blood and food. It has been seen to absorb nutritious matter—that is, to eat, or rather to drink. You see all over its surface orifices or holes; these communicate with each other throughout. Into the largest of these, called pores, the sea water is constantly entering, and out of the small ones, called vents, it is regularly spouted out; and it doubtless finds in the sea water minute animals, which serve it for food and increase its bulk.

And this strange animal produces others like itself. I will tell you how. From the soft part a little globule is seen to float off, and after moving about a while very briskly here and there, as if looking for a place, it fastens itself to some rock. Next, gradually, begins to be seen the more solid skeleton—what we have here—the soft part increases, and so it grows; not very slowly either, for the divers find it at the end of three years large enough to bring away.

To get these sponges from the bottom of the ocean furnishes occupation for a great number of people. One thousand men are busy in the Grecian Archipelago alone; and thousands besides, with many hundred boats, are engaged in the Gulf of Machri, on the Barbary coast, and elsewhere, so that in many villages there, from May to September—the best diving time—only old men, women and children can be found.

The finest kind is brought from the Ægean sea. At daylight there in the summer time, when the weather is pleasant—for it requires smooth water—the boats, each with six or eight men and one pair of oars, will leave the shore and proceed to where the water is eight or ten, or even thirty fathoms deep, for those found in shallow water are very inferior.

Here they stop, and the divers prepare to descend. Each one puts a hoop around his neck, and to this fastens a bag, in which the sponges are put as they are gathered. In very deep water the diver uses a rope with a heavy stone to it. He sinks the stone to the spot he intends to reach, and this holds the rope steady, which he uses to assist himself in coming up again to the surface.

After being busy till noon, they retire to some of those pleasant little nooks which abound on the shores of the archipelago, to prepare what they have gathered fit for sale.

The first thing is to press out the soft part of the animal, and then to bleach the remainder in the sun; so they beat them, and stamp on them, and trample them till there is no more life left. The skeleton part is then washed and spread in the sun till it is quite clean, and grows to be this dull yellowish color; then it is packed in bags and sent to market for sale, to all parts of Asia, Europe and America. Golden Hours.

SCIENTIFIC.

GUN COTTON.

It appears that some decided advance has been made toward placing nitro-glycerine more on an equality with other explosive substances as regards the safety attending its use. But, unfortunately, for the interest of nitro-glycerine, a new and valuable addition to our knowledge of the properties of gun cotton, which has recently been made in the chemical establishment of the War Department at Woolwich, renders it very doubtful whether in the future the explosive liquid, in whatever form it may be presented, is likely to enter into successful competition with that material in any one direction. It has been found that the explosive force of gun cotton may, like that of nitro-glycerine, be developed by the exposure of the substance to the sudden concussion produced by a detonation; and that if exploded by that agency, the suddenness and consequent violence of its action greatly exceed that of its explosion by means of a highly heated body or flame. This is a most important discovery, and one which invests gun cotton with totally new and valuable characteristics. For it follows, as recent experiments have fully demonstrated, that gun cotton, even when freely exposed to air, may be made to explode with destructive violence, apparently not inferior to that of nitro-glycerine, simply by employing for its explosion a fuse to which is attached a small detonating charge. Some remarkable results have been already obtained with this new mode of exploding gun cotton. Large blocks of granite and other very hard rock, and iron plates of some thickness, have been shattered by exploding small charges of gun cotton, which simply rested upon their upper surfaces—an effect which will be sufficiently surprising to those who have hitherto believed, as every one has believed, that unconfined gun cotton was scarcely to be considered explosive at all; that it puffed harmlessly away into the air, not exerting sufficient force upon the body upon which it might be resting to depress a nicely balanced pair of scales, supposing the charge to be fired upon one plate of the scale. Further, long charges or trains of gun cotton, simply placed upon the ground against stockades of great strength, and wholly unconfined, have been exploded by means of detonating fuses placed at the center or at one end of the train, and produced uniformly destructive effects throughout their entire length, the results corresponding to those produced by eight or ten times the amount of gunpowder when applied under the most favorable conditions. Mining and quarrying operations with gun cotton applied in the new manner have furnished results quite equal to those obtained with nytro-glycerine, and have proved conclusively that if gun cotton is exploded by detonation it is unnecessary to confine the charge in the blast-hole by the process of hard tamping, as the explosion of the entire charge takes place too suddenly for its effects to be appreciably diminished by the line of escape presented by the blast-hole. Thus, the most dangerous of all operations connected with mining may be dispensed with when gun cotton fired by the new system is employed.

It will be readily observed that this discovery, which we believe is due to Mr. Brown, of the War Office Chemical Establishment, is likely to be attended with most important results. Not merely is the strength of gun cotton exploded in this way very much greater than that of the same substance fired by simple ignition, but it now operates under conditions which were sufficient under the old system practically to deprive gun cotton of its power. It has been said, and said justly, that if you want gun cotton to exert itself you must coax it into the belief that it has a great deal to do. You must give it bonds to break and physical obstacles to overcome, with no outlet or possibility of escape. But now gun cotton will exert itself, and put forth more than what was believed to be its full strength, whether it see any work to do or not. It will behave as less coy explosives have behaved before it—always with this difference, that it is half a dozen times as powerful as any of its rivals, with the exception of nitro-glycerine, to which in mere power even it is not inferior. This discovery, therefore, can hardly fail to give a considerable impetus to gun cotton, and to lead to its universal adoption for mining purposes as soon as its new properties become generally known. In connection with possible military applications the discovery is invaluable. There can no longer be any doubt what agent should be employed for the breaching of stockades and the like; and the absence of all necessity for the use of strong confining envelopes will have an important bearing upon the employment of gun cotton for torpedoes and all submarine explosive operations, besides greatly simplying mining and breaching operations in the field. We have, in fact, discovered several new advantages to add to those which already had sufficed to recommend gun cotton as an explosive agent in preference to all others.

The conditions that are fulfilled by a detonating fuse in determining the violent explosion of gun cotton, under circumstances which, hitherto, have been altogether unfavorable to such a result, have been made the subject of investigation by Mr. Abel, and we hope at some future time to notice the conclusions at which he has arrived, as they appear to have a very important general bearing upon the conditions which regulate the development of explosive force, not merely from gun cotton and nitro-glycerine, but from explosive compounds and mixtures generally. Meanwhile it is satisfactory to be able to record what has been done, and to add that the subject is now occupying much attention at Woolwich and Chatham, under the intelligent direction of the department to which the discovery is due.—Pall Mall Gazette.

"WHO WILL CARRY ME OVER?"—A few years ago, in a New England village, a little boy lay upon his death-bed. Starting suddenly up, he exclaimed: "Oh! mother, mother, I see such a beautiful country, and so many little children, who are beckoning me to them; but there are high mountains between us, too high for me to climb. Who will carry me over?" After thus expressing himself, he leaned back on his pillow, and for awhile seemed to be in deep thought, when, once more arousing and stretching out his little hands, he cried, as loud as his feeble voice would permit: "Mother, mother, the strong man's come to carry me over the mountain!" He was peacefully asleep. The strong man had indeed come to carry the little one over.

THE number of books at present contained in the principal libraries of Europe is as follows: The library of Paris, said to be the largest in Europe, contains 1,100,000 volumes and 80,000 manuscripts. The bibliotheque de l'Arsenal, 200,000 volumes and 5,800 manuscripts. That of Sainte-Genevieve, 155,000 volumes and 2,000 manuscripts. The bibliotheque Mazarine, 150,000 volumes and 4,000 manuscripts. Sorbonne, 80,000 volumes and 900 manuscripts. Hotel de Ville, 65,000 volumes, making a total in the French libraries of 6,233,000. Great Britain has only 1,772,000 volumes. Italy has 4,150,000. Austria, 2,488,000.—Prussia, 2,040,000. Russia, 852,000 Bavaria, 1,268,500. Belgium, 540,000, making in all Europe about 20,000,000 volumes.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA COLLEGE,
AUBURN, ALABAMA.

The Spring Session will begin on the 20th of January, and close on the 14th of July, 1869.

The educational facilities here furnished to students are equal to those of the best colleges in the country. Young men may take a regular or partial course, but will be required to have at least three studies.

Auburn is situated directly on the Montgomery and West Point Railroad. Its health and social advantages cannot be surpassed.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, Spring session, . . . $48 00
Tuition, Fall session, . . . $2 00

Board in private families, from $15 to $20 per month.

Students in indigent circumstances, by applying as such, will be required to pay in advance only half the price of tuition, and by messing they may greatly reduce the expense of board.

Board, including washing, fuel and room-rent, in gold $67 50
Tuition in English and Latin, in currency 25 00
French, in currency 15 00
Music, in currency 30 00
Use of instrument, in currency 7 50
Incidental fee, to be paid by every pupil, in currency 2 00

Ornamental branches at usual prices.

Traveling ministers of Louisiana Conference charged no tuition in English and Latin.

Every boarder will furnish a pair of blankets, a pair of sheets, a pair of pillow slips, a counterpane or spread, and towels and lights.

For catalogues, containing full particulars, address the President. july26 3m

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwartz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of Instrument $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked plainly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $360.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,
Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING

STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as the means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to command it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.. ....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Henners.

For further information apply for circular to
C. P. CASEY,
aug15 3m Secretary of Faculty.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTItute, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev. William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils much promoted. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social dissipation. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

Ancient Languages	$215 00
Music	50 00

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market continues to exhibit only a moderate degree of animation: A fair business is doing in many branches of the wholesale trade, but without evincing much activity. Our leading staple was in brisk request on Saturday, but on Monday and Tuesday the demand was fair but less active. Sugar and molasses have been in less active request and both have sold at lower prices. We have but few operations to notice in Western produce. The receipts of flour have been liberal, but buyers have stood aloof in the expectation of a decline, and there are no stocks of other leading articles to offer any scope to purchasers for shipment. There are large orders pending here for both wheat and corn, and heavy receipts would meet a ready sale at the highest possible prices consistent with foreign markets.

The river has risen two feet since our last report, and is now eight feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 8th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	12682
Mobile.....	97
Florida.....	1
Texas.....	58
Total,.....	12838

On Saturday, under the influence of favorable accounts from Liverpool and New York, and some speculative feeling, the movement commenced at an advance of fully 1c. per pound—in fact in some instances the sales showed an improvement of 1¼ to 1½c.—but after it was ascertained the previous advance had not been maintained at New York, factors evinced more desire to realize and submitted to concessions of from ¼ to ½c., the closing rates, however, showing a net improvement of about ¾c., low middling being quoted at 25¾ to 26c., and middling at 26¼ to 27c. The sales at the same time were on a liberal scale, comprising fully 6,000 bales. On Monday, owing to the encouraging tenor of the New York and Liverpool dispatches, at the opening factors were disposed to be still more stringent in their pretensions, but finding that the most active buyers had withdrawn, and the few who came forward were unwilling to go on unless at easier rates, they found it necessary to make some concessions, and until toward the close prices exhibited increasing weakness. The five P. M. telegrams then inspired a better feeling, and including 2,000 bales at a late hour, the business summed up 4,900 bales, and the closing rates showed a falling off of about ¼c., low middling being quoted at 25½ to 26c., and middling 26½ to 26¾c. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate demand, mostly for the North, but although the movement was at no time very animated, yet 4,100 bales changed hands at steadier prices, without any quotable variation.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,000 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 477,280 bales, against 282,801 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 140,057 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 64,053 bales to France, of 11,938 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 28,489 to Great Britain.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Low.....	— to —

Good ordinary.....	24½ to 25
Low middling.....	25½ to 26
Middling.....	26½ to 26¾

Sugar.—The demand has somewhat slackened since our last review, but prices remain firm and unchanged. The receipts were mostly sold, however, comprising on Saturday and Monday 1,500 hogsheads. On Tuesday the demand was very good, and 500 hogsheads, all the supplies, were sold.

Molasses.—The demand has somewhat fallen off since our last review, and prices have declined 2c. per gallon. The receipts were pretty much all sold, however. On Tuesday 1,000 barrels, all the supplies, sold readily at the prices paid the day before. Some half barrels choice brought 75c. per gallon.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

ORGAN OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH FOR THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCE

VOLUME XV.—NUMBER 1.
WHOLE NUMBER..... 715.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 23, 1869.

$3 00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.
OFFICE—112 CAMP STREET.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

ASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The Su-ne Court decides that green-ks and certificates of indebted-s are not liable to State taxation. ypher's bill allowing Louisiana eceive her proportion of agricul-l college scrip, provides that the s shall be devoted for ten years ormal and common-school pur-es. The bill carefully guards land against speculators.

nate.—A large number of busi-men throughout the country tion that sales of bonds by the ernment be only made after due e, and sales of gold by auction. enator Sherman, from the Finance mittee, reported a bill legalizing contracts, reserving $140,000,-from custom receipts for pay-t of interest and reduction of principal of the public debt. orizing the exchange of lawful y for new 10 40s, five per cent. bonds to be issued for that se. Also the issue of govern-demand gold notes, not ex-ing the amount of coin in the sury, to be used for the pur-e in New York, when in the ket, of six per cent. securities, the amount expended for this ose not to exceed the amount egal tenders surrendered for bonds.

he bill also authorizes national ks to issue gold notes to the nt of sixty five per cent. of the nnt of bonds which they may sit as security, regardless of nt restriction of the total circu-n to $300,000,000.

House.—Butler introduced a bill arding negro church property in lately rebellious States. It vides that property used for ritable, religious, educational or r like purposes, bought or given the use of congregations or as-iations of colored men, hereto-e held by trustees for the benefit nch associations, such title shall reafter rest in deacons, elders or stees chosen by such associations, are made corporate bodies. h associations shall call meet-s on the 1st of May next, and ry 1st of May thereafter, to ose trustees for the coming year. Wood introduced a bill repealing charter of the National Life rance Company of the United tes, also bills preventing the ing of money on United States tenders, forbidding national ks paying interest on deposits, ting Louisiana to receive ds donated by Congress eral c . A joint resolution against grant-y or lands to railroads was ; the part against granting ney passed; that against granting ds was tabled.

A joint resolution was passed, t persons now holding office in ginia and Texas, except those ose disabilities have been re-ved, who cannot take the test th of July 2, 1862, be removed m office within thirty days from passage of the resolution, and district commander to fill their ces with men who can take the h. This was passed without ision.

The House then went into com-ttee of the whole and adjourned. Bingham's bill provides for the mission of Mississippi when its gislature ratifies the fourteenth endment, shall remove disabilities posed by the fifth section of enth article of the Constitution, declares void the disabilities posed by third section of the nstitution.

The Virginia committee, in a y, accompanied by other Virgin-s and General Schofield, visited ant today. The conversation ed on the business of the com-ttee, and Grant, who showed self familiar with the Underwood nstitution, expressed himself in or of a speedy settlement. The erview was of some duration. e committee afterward visited President.

The President's response to the ate's amnesty questions simply oted the authorities upon which proclamation was based.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 19.—The t reception this season of the ident and his daughter took e to-night; an immense crowd f all the reception rooms and the hall leading thereto.

t was attended by a greater ber of persons than was ever wn to be present at a Presiden-l reception before.

The company included the usual portion of dignitaries and nota-s found at Washington recep-s—Chief Justice Chase, members the cabinet, nearly all the foreign diplomatic corps, Congressmen, ilitary and naval officers, heads of bureaus, etc. The ladies' costumes were exceedingly brilliant.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—A committee of the Colored National Convention called on Grant, who, replying to an address, said:

"I thank the convention, of which you are the representatives, for the confidence they have expressed, and I hope sincerely that the colored people of the nation may receive every protection which the law gives them. They shall have my endeavors to secure such protection. They should prove by their acts—their advancement, prosperity and obedience to the laws—that they are worthy of all the privileges the government has bestowed upon them, and by their future conduct prove themselves deserving of all they now claim."

Grant's interview with the Mississippi Radical delegation is variously reported. He appears to have expressed a desire for the early admission of Mississippi, and that the Southern constitutions should be made to conform with the reconstruction acts; also said he would enforce the laws. It is not known whether Grant alluded to Bingham's bill, or to another which the committee is preparing. Bingham's bill, in addition to the points telegraphed last night, provides that the Legislature shall meet within twenty days after the passage of the act, upon proclamation thereof by the Governor. No person prohibited by the fourteenth amendment shall hold office until their political disabilities are removed. The Radical committee are in high spirits to-day.

RE-ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

BOSTON, Jan. 19.—Sumner has been re-elected Senator from Massachusetts.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Jan. 19.—John Scott has been elected United States Senator.

DETROIT, Jan. 19.—Chandler has been re-elected to the United States Senate.

PARIS, Jan. 19.—The sultan has instructed his embassador to sign the conference. It is thought Greece will accept the terms.

A sharp earthquake is reported from Calcutta.

Napoleon, speaking from the throne, congratulates the members on the strength and harmony of the nation, which was now ready to meet all events.

The army and navy and resources being complete, he favored discussion not touching the Constitution, which was above debate.

He concludes: "All governments are liable to error, fortune declines to smile on all enterprises, but the country knows that there is no thought or act of mine which is not given to the glory of France."

He congratulates the powers on the result of the conference.

MADRID, Jan. 19.—The election returns show unmistakably that an overwhelming majority of the people favor a monarchy. The strength of the republicans in the new Cortes will be only about one hundred.

LONDON, Jan. 19.—The Pall Mall Gazette hopes that Parliament will not ratify the Alabama treaty if the question of recognition of the Confederates as belligerents is to be re-opened.

The Times says: "The Alabama treaty provides that four commissioners shall sit in Washington; if they fail to select one umpire each side shall select one, and in disputed cases one of the two umpires shall be chosen by lot to decide. The commission will select a sovereign to arbitrate points of international law, including the recognition of the South. All claims must be prosecuted within six months, and indemnities be paid eighteen months after the meeting of the commission. One year is allowed for ratification."

The Independence Belge says: "If Greece agrees to the protocol of the conference, Turkey will withdraw her ultimatum; if not, the powers will remain neutral and let events take their course."

MADRID, Jan. 19.—The Cortes will stand monarchists three hundred, republicans thirty-five, revolutionists fifteen.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—In the Senate, Wilson introduced a bill reducing the army, providing, among other things, the abolition of brigadiers during peace.

The Reconstruction Committee heard arguments from Governor Wells and Mr. Baldwin on Virginia.

The House election committee hears Jones vs. Mann to-morrow.

The Virginia committee have presented to the Senate judiciary committee a memorial submitting amendments to the House bill providing for an election in Virginia, now under consideration, modifying the constitution to an extent which they believe would be accepted by the people of Virginia.

In connection, they say the real feeling of the State was expressed when they declared their belief that the freedmen South, in their present uneducated condition, are not prepared for the intelligent exercise of the elective franchise, yet in view of the public opinion expressed in the recent elections, they believe a majority of the people are willing to incorporate it in their fundamental law, as an offering on the altar of peace, hoping for the restoration of union and harmony, on the basis of universal suffrage and universal amnesty. Considering the policy of the government to require in Virginia constitutional recognition of the civil and political equality of all men before the law, they have in the amendments proposed inserted all the provisions looking to that result heretofore deemed proper by Congress, and leave untouched any provisions of the Constitution relative to the subject.

The President to-day withdrew the name of Perry Fuller and nominated W. H. Wisener collector of customs at New Orleans. Also nominated Robert C. Buchanan and Alvin C Gillem brigadier generals, vice Hooker and Rousseau.

The Virginia committee authorize the statement that it is not true that any conference has been had between the committee of nine and the Radical committee. There was an informal talk between members of both committees, but the nine have no objection to the fullest disclosure of the origin, objects and purpose of this talk if the Radicals are willing.

Three hundred men, mostly recruited in the West, have safely landed in Cuba within ten days. The vessel conveying them is nearly ready for another trip.

Wreck of the Steamship Gulf City.

FULL PARTICULARS.

The Wilmington (North Carolina) Morning Star of the 15th gives the following details of the loss of the Gulf City:

The survivers from the wreck of this steamship were, yesterday morning, brought into this port on board the W. P. Clyde, from New York, commanded by D. P. Morgan.

From the mate of the Clyde, and from the unfortunate men themselves, we have learned full particulars. The Gulf City was a steamship that plied between New York and Galveston, Texas. Her captain was James Stewart, whose family lives in Connecticut. Her owners was a New York firm, about whose names some contradiction exists, but the principal name centered upon is Mr. James Mallory. The Gulf City cleared from New York about the 22d of November, and made a prosperous voyage to Galveston, which point she left New Year day. The lapse of time between the two days would intimate that her trip was a delayed one. Her return voyage, as far as Key West, was without incident, and she departed from that place Thursday, the 7th instant. Fair winds and a smooth sea were her portion for a few days, and fate appeared to be in a propitious mood. With Monday came a tolerable brisk gale, and the night was dark and cloudy. Toward eight or nine o'clock it became impossible to control the direction of the vessel, and at eleven o'clock she ran ashore on the shoals at Cape Lookout, and was, in a few hours, dashed to pieces by the breakers.

At two o'clock she was a complete wreck, and the moans of the dying, mingled with the clashing of the broken timber, were so terrible as to create a shudder in the most resolute, and to evoke a prayer from the most hardened. All was confusion, and each moment the gaping sea claimed its victim. The majority there found a watery grave; while others, clinging with desperation to the shattered, floating pieces of the wreck, escaped momentary death, and were thus enabled to offer a few prayers ere their agonized hearts ceased in their pulsations and their bruised bodies sank beneath the stormy waters of the Atlantic.

Of twenty-five human beings, but three remain to tell the sad story and to weep for the fate of their comrades. Among the number who were drowned was a passenger—a gentleman—whose name we could not ascertain. Many left families, and among others the captain.

The three men who were saved are named Patrick McGale, from Jersey City, and Anthony Thomas and Henry McCardle, from New York. When the ship was rent asunder these three men were so fortunate as to cling firmly to a portion of the deck. Their dangerous, uncertain life-guard was nothing save several planks nailed together, and not more than ten feet long and eight feet wide. On this frail craft they were tossed about for forty-eight hours, without food or water, without means to steer their course, without any promise of relief, and totally at the mercy of the treacherous waves. Five, who bore them company, gradually expired, and when the W. P. Clyde passed by, but three half starved men remained to receive the needed succor.

At this time they were floating toward the open sea, and were a dozen miles from the scene of disaster. The officers of the Clyde report the spot as off Cape Lookout, N. W., and distant twelve miles. This opportune relief from drowning or starvation was on Wednesday afternoon last at about two o'clock. When carried on board of the Clyde, the poor sailors were only partially clad, and were rapidly declining under accumulating weakness.—They are now in this city, stopping at the Seaman's Home, and show many signs of the terrible ordeal through which they have gone.

The cargo was principally cotton, and we could not learn with certainty whether or not it was insured.

More Militia Horrors in Arkansas.

UNOFFENDING CITIZENS MURDERED IN COLD BLOOD NEAR MADISON, ARK.

Clayton's loyal bloodhounds are still murdering, plundering and outraging the unfortunate people of Arkansas.

Only a day or two since they fell upon a most peaceable and unoffending citizen by the name of Dillard, as he was returning from his place of business, and, for attempting to escape, murdered him in cold blood. Yesterday a Mr. John Organ was shot dead at Fifteen Mile Bayou, near Madison, where they now have eight or nine hundred head of horses and other property, stolen from citizens of the surrounding country.

At Madison they broke open every house and building in the place, regardless of locks and keys, and the citizens are fleeing in every direction, leaving everything behind.

One hundred and thirty were expected yesterday evening at Hopefield, where they also have a large number of stolen horses.

We heard of two other men who were shot down, a day or two ago, near Madison, but failed to learn their names.

Yesterday the steamer Linton was boarded, near Madison, by a number of officers and privates, who robbed the bar, cursed the officers of the boat, telling them that they were all damned Ku Klux, and ordering them to leave.

As the boat moved off, it was fired into, and the bar-keeper barely escaped with his life.

The citizens are reported as hiding in the woods, and business entirely suspended.

A number of refugees arrived yesterday evening, who were being hunted down like dogs and who had to flee for their lives.

Among the outrages committed by these thieving vagabonds yesterday, was the following, upon three well known and respectable citizens of Hardeman county, Tennessee: Messrs. L. M. Bray, John Thompson and Archibald Mayfield, who have been back of Crowley's Ridge to purchase land.

They reached Mound City, from Marion, in the afternoon, and stepped aboard the ferryboat to come to Memphis. Before the little steamer left, a company of militia, commanded by a man supposed to be white, came aboard and arrested the three gentlemen. In reply to questions, they were informed that they must go back to Madison at once. They were placed under guard and sent back. For nearly half the distance, and especially on reaching muddy places, the prisoners were compelled, at the point of the bayonet, to "double quick," and their ears were regaled with such choice epithets, from their negro custodian as "d—d rebel," and "d—d Ku Klux."

Once in Marion they were taken before Colonel McWray for examination. The white officer who effected the arrest finally arrived and testified. He pronounced Messrs. Bray, Thompson and Mayfield, three men whom he had for some time particularly desired to capture; said they were Ku Klux, and had been inciting resistance. Two or three negro militia, whom the prisoners never saw before, swore to personal knowledge of them for two or three years, and pretended to identify their horses as the property of certain "loyal" colored persons in the county.

Unfortunately for the rascals, they proved entirely too much. The prisoners found no difficulty in establishing that they had been in the State only three weeks, and in that immediate section simply while making the trip to and from the river. Everything sworn to by the white officer and blacks was so clearly shown to be lies that the colonel, though steeped in infamy, was compelled to order the release of the prisoners, who regained the river late in the evening, fortunately in time to be ferried to Memphis.

The above are fair samples of the outrages daily committed by order of Governor Clayton on law-abiding people unfortunate enough to fall into their clutches. These outrages are all in the name of "loyalty"—all designed to strengthen the government and illustrate the beauties of reconstruction as ordered by Congress and executed by carpet baggers and scalawags. And he who cries out against it is denounced by the Radical press of the country as "rebel and traitor" to "the best government the world ever saw." Late reports from parties just from Camden, on the Ouachita, give the following particulars of outrages committed, very recently, by the negro militia appointed by Governor Clayton, the Radical Governor of Arkansas:

"In Ashley county they robbed Mr. Wimberly, a merchant of Petersburg, of all his money, clothing, bed clothing, goods, and of everything that was of any service to him whatever; robbed Mr. Pugh, a merchant of Orion, of all his goods and money; robbed Mr. A. W. Files, a merchant of Hamburg, of all his goods, caught him, and by threats induced him to pay $1,000 in greenbacks and $1,000 in gold, in order to have his life spared and to be turned loose; met some ladies going to a little social dance in the country; robbed them of their bonnets and shawls and made them dance in the road; injured Messrs. Files & Norris, at Marie Saline, to considerable extent, by plundering their warehouse. They are robbing the people of all their corn and provisions, mules and horses, guns and pistols, which they either destroy or appropriate to their own use. They did not spare a man's purse, and by presenting a loaded gun or a navy six, make him shell out the cash. The citizens are in a state of great consternation, and many are leaving their homes. They are now going around among the people in the country, with a document, which they make the citizens sign, binding them to protect the negro militia which they intend organizing in said county; those who refuse to sign they say they intend to burn out. They are composed of Kansas jayhawkers and men from Northern Arkansas. They commit these depredations only in the counties declared under martial law. Neither the lives nor the property of citizens are safe where they are."

At Hamburg the militia took possession and sacked all the stores in the town.

At Marie Saline the militia took possession of the store and warehouse landing of Files & Norris, the major commanding standing at the principal door with drawn sword, and with revolvers in his belt, whilst his minions plundered the premises. They also took possession of goods lying on the landing at the place, belonging to many different persons in the county, and carried whatever they wanted away. Memphis Avalanche, January 8.

DR. W. A. SMITH.

The following, from the St. Louis Advocate, tells us that our honored friend and brother is hard at work to build up the educational interest of the great West. The doctor can and will succeed:

CENTRAL COLLEGE.

I have been occupied (for the most part) in behalf of this institution, in the city of St. Louis, since the session of our Conference in September. I am now about to leave the city. I expect to present the claims of the college through the State generally. During the winter months I shall confine my labors to the towns on the railroads.

I am happy to announce to the friends of this great enterprise, that my success in this city is very highly gratifying indeed. My efforts in the three principal churches have resulted in what I consider an available subscription in interest bearing bonds, as follows: Centenary Church, corner of Fifth and Pine streets, $16,950; First Church, corner of Eighth street and Washington avenue, $14,100; St. John's Church, corner of Ewing avenue and Locust street, $7,500. This subscription is considered a very liberal one. It indicates a very [illegible] and cordial appreciation of the enterprise. In the present unsettled state of the finances of the country, it is probably without a parallel. But the brethren in the city seem (many of them) to realize the [illegible] that the obligation is [illegible] on us, to give our church in years to come, and especially our people, the full benefit of the priceless advantage of thorough mental as well as moral cultivation. So far as they have acted, they have done nobly. Many members and friends of the church are yet to contribute. They will do so in due time.

We have a large amount to raise to realize the great enterprise we propose to accomplish. Let our friends throughout the great State of Missouri come up to the work in the same spirit of liberality, and our final success is certain.

WM. A. SMITH,
President of Central College.

IMPORTANT MILITARY ORDER.

GENERAL MOWER IN COMMAND OF THE DISTRICT.

By the death of General Rousseau, General Buchanan, the next officer in rank, and who previously was in command of the district of Louisiana, succeeded by right of seniority to the command of the department of Louisiana, which includes both this State and Arkansas. To the command of the district thus vacated General Joseph A. Mower, the next ranking officer, was on Tuesday assigned in the order which we publish below, the headquarters of his regiment, the 39th infantry (colored,) being, at the same time transferred to this city. This does not, however, involve the arrival of the regiment itself, which is now distributed in garrisons at the forts below the city, at Fort Pike and at Ship Island. Brevet Major General Frank Wheaton, lieutenant colonel of the regiment, has also been assigned to duty in this city. The order making these changes is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEP'T OF LOUISIANA,
New Orleans, La., Jan. 19, 1869.

Special Orders No. 13.

1. Brevet Major General Frank Wheaton, lieutenant colonel 39th infantry, having reported for duty in this department, is temporarily assigned to duty at these headquarters, to take effect from the 18th instant.

* * * * * * *

3. The limits of the post of New Orleans are restricted so as hereafter to embrace the city of New Orleans.

The post at Sedgwick Hospital will be known as Greenville Barracks.

4. Brevet Major General Joseph A. Mower, colonel 39th infantry, will repair to this city, without delay, and relieve Brevet Major General R. C. Buchanan, U. S. A., in the command of the district of Louisiana.

The headquarters of the 39th Regiment U. S. Infantry will be transferred to the city of New Orleans.

By command of Brevet Major General R. C. Buchanan.

THOS. H. NEILL,
Maj. 20th Inf., Brev. Brig. Gen., U. S. A.,
Acting Assistant Adjutant General.

Official:

NATHANIEL BURBANK,
2d Lt., 37th Inf., Bvt. 1st Lt., U. S. A.,
Acting Assistant Adjutant General.

EXCLUSIVISM AT FLOOD TIME.—The American Presbyterian, perhaps the ablest and most influential "New School" organ, gives an ominous resume of the movement of many leading denominations toward exclusivism and High Churchism, and makes the whole a text of warning, in view of the probable results of the union of the two great Presbyterian bodies. The fear is expressed that it "will turn out in the end one of the most important re-enforcements yet made to the backward movement in the church." The way in which the minor Presbyterian sects are described is not a bad piece of rhetoric. "The smaller bodies of Presbyterians in our country who have reformed and re-reformed, and refined and re-refined upon each other, to distressing minuteness, are little else than an ascending scale up the dreary and barren heights of exclusivism; each little plateau being narrower than the one beneath it, and all ending, some think, very near to heaven—others say, close to the edge of eternal snows."—New York Independent.

MY CROSS.

It is not heavy, agonizing woe,
Bearing me down with hopeless, crushing weight;
No ray of comfort in the gathering gloom,
A heart bereaved—a household desolate.

It is not sickness, with her withering hand,
Keeping me low upon a couch of pain;
Longing each morning for the weary night—
At night, for weary day to come again.

It is not slander, with her evil tongue,
'Tis no presumptuous sin against my God.
Not reputation lost, or friends betrayed;
That such is not my cross I thank my God.

Mine is a daily cross of petty cares,
Of little duties pressing on my heart,
Of little troubles hard to reconcile,
Of inward struggles—overcome in part.

My feet are weary in their daily round,
My heart is weary of its daily care,
My sinful nature often doth rebel—
I pray for grace my daily cross to bear.

It is not heavy, Lord, yet oft I pine;
It is not heavy, but 'tis everywhere—
By day and night each hour my cross I bear;
I dare not lay it down—thou keep'st it there

I dare not lay it down. I only ask
That, taking up my daily cross, I may
Follow my Master humbly, step by step,
Through clouds and darkness, unto perfect day.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—PRAYER.

Of all the modern wonders, the electric telegraph is perhaps the most wonderful. We open the morning papers and we read what Mr. Bright or Gladstone said the day before in the Parliament of England, or what the Emperor Napoleon said to the diplomatic corps who have waited on him to tender the congratulations of the season, or we read what the Sultan at Constantinople has said about the Cretan imbroglio, or the result of an election the day before in California, on the shores of the far-off Pacific. This is truly wonderful. Our fathers could not have believed it possible. It surpasses all previous conceptions, and attempts to communicate thought with speed to the far distant. But here the spiritual and the divine, as everywhere, surpasses the material and the human. Prayer is a much more wonderful and efficient means of communicating and receiving messages than the telegraph. To realize this let us consider the following particulars:

1. Dispatches often go wrong. The operator at one or the other end of the line makes gross mistakes in sending or in reading the message sent. This often results in great loss, great inconvenience or great grief. Sometimes, through the carelessness of operators, our messages are never sent at all. It never happens thus in prayer. God always knows precisely what we mean and desire. He knows the thoughts and intents of the heart. Our messages to the throne of grace never fail, for his ear is not heavy that he cannot hear.

2. Dispatches by the telegraph must be exceedingly brief, or else they are exceedingly expensive. A few carefully counted words are all that most persons think of sending. But in prayer we may "three times a day" or "seven times a day," say all that is in our hearts to say. We may wrestle, like Jacob, till the break of day, or, like Christ, continue all night in prayer—in short, pray without ceasing—and it is all well pleasing to God. The incense that fragrantly rises about his throne is the prayers of the saints.

3. Dispatches cost money—even the briefest, and long dispatches cost great sums. The Secretary of State sent one from Washington to London recently that cost $18,000 in gold. Now if dispatches from the soul to God cost money, some people could never send a long one. Some would not send a dispatch more than once a week, or once a month even, and would be exceedingly brief at that. But we may boldly and freely send the wish of the heart to God on the swift wings of faith. Poor beggars and little children who have no money, and no means of making any, may, without money and without price, send dispatches of prayer from their hearts to God. It shall cost them nothing.

4. Dispatches on the telegraph cannot be sent from anywhere.—The dispatch must first be sent to the office. These offices are scores, hundreds, and even thousands of miles distant from the habitations of millions—often inconvenient, and sometimes impossible. But we can send our thought to God in prayer "from the ends of the earth"—on the sea, on the land, in distant barbarous climes, wherever we may roam, we are in reach of the throne of grace. On the bed of death, in the shipwreck or on the battle-field, whatever our peril, wherever we may be, we may send our quick and ardent thought to God, for he is not far from any one of us. In him we live, and move, and have our being.

5. Dispatches by the telegraph cannot yet be sent everywhere, and perhaps it will be long, if ever they can be. But as God fills immensity, heaven and earth—is with us to the end of the world—we can send a prayer to God for the long absent and most distant. Our friends may be among "Greenland's icy mountains" or coasting along "India's coral strand," or wandering where "Afric's sunny fountains roll down their golden sand"—no matter, we can send a prayer to God for them, and God can send them an answer of safety and salvation. We can, from our closets, prayer meetings and domestic altars, send prayers after all the absent and all the distant, and God can send the peaceful answer down.

6. Dispatches are not always answered. The parties are unwilling, absent or dead. But God always answers. He never says, "Seek ye my face in vain," nor turns any empty away. He says, "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find." What a glorious and blessed arrangement is this that man can communicate with God, and through God send the blessing given in answer to prayer to the ends of the earth, and to them that are afar off on the sea. THE CHURCH IN ALABAMA.

Mr. Editor: If I were to confer with flesh and blood, or consult the impoverished condition of the good people of Alabama, I would not write about money.—But money answereth all things, and the love of it is the root of all evil. We may love it more than God or the poor.

The demand for Bibles is pressing me on all sides. The Parent Society is extending aid to the full extent of its means. We are now actually in need of the means to put at least fifteen additional colporteurs in the field. We have the men and the Bibles, but are not able to pay the colporteurs while distributing the bread of life to the poor. Much is being accomplished in many places. The Montgomery Bible Society has canvassed seven counties, and supplied over twelve hundred destitute white families, and many among the colored people.

The Montgomery Conference gave me a formal Bible meeting at the last session—collected over $100. That Conference is alive to all the interests of the church. This was the only Bible meeting I have heard of being held at our Annual Conference since the war in the South.

I am trying to supply every destitute family in Alabama with the Bible, and if the church would only come up to her duty I could soon accomplish the great work. The Bible cause is not alone in needing help. All our schools and colleges are in straightened circumstances. They need patronage and money. We are keeping a full corps of the ablest professors in the nation at the Southern University, where young men can be as thoroughly and cheaply educated as anywhere in this country. This institution ought to have at least one hundred and fifty students. The East Alabama Male College is a first class institution. Dr. Dowdell, president, has but few equals as a Christian gentleman and educator of youth. The church, I am glad to know, is rallying to its support. There ought also to be one hundred and fifty young men in that college.

The Tuscaloosa Female College is now under the control of Bro. Oliver, and, I believe, is self-sustaining. Under his able and efficient management we have no doubt of its success. But here is Summerfield. I am truly glad to report the Male Institute in so flourishing a condition. Centenary Female College has perhaps as many boarders as any similar institution, but, with the high standard of scholarship and excellent religious culture which young ladies have always received at this time-honored institution, we should have at least as many more.

When will Methodists, and Southern people generally, and especially in Alabama, learn to respect their own intelligence and educational advantages, and cease to send their sons and daughters out of the State to inferior institutions of learning? It is greatly to be feared that they will first break down their own educational interests.

But I have wandered from the subject. We have here at school six young men, all preparing for the ministry, with a view of joining the Mobile Conference. We only receive young men of known worth. These are mainly dependent upon the citizens of Summerfield for board, and Prof. Massey for tuition. As the treasurer of the Preachers' Educational Aid Society, I know that on the 1st of January we had only about $100 to pay the board and tuition of these young ministers. If the church in the Mobile Conference knew our real condition in this respect, I feel sure that our present necessities would be very much relieved.

Something must be done, and that soon, or some of these young men will have to leave. Dr. Mitchell came to me a few days since with the fact that two others had come, and no means to provide for them; but such is the doctor's interesting zeal in the cause of their education that he found homes for them. The brethren about Summerfield are poor, and it is not just for them to educate all the young men for the ministry in the Mobile Conference. Can the church make a more profitable investment than to give a few dollars to educate young men whom God has called to preach? Will not one hundred members of the church in this Conference give $10 each for this good work? If you will, respond to this urgent call. Please send the money to me, and I will acknowledge the receipt of it through the Advocate.

At our last week of prayer we prayed especially that the Lord would send more laborers into his vineyard. Will we prove the sincerity of our supplication by aiding to prepare those young men whom he has called?

The preachers might take up a collection, any Sabbath morning, for this good cause.

S. P. Richardson.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE.

Mr Editor: I have been on the Lowisville circuit for two years past. We have had three camp meetings in two years. I find it the most successful way of fighting the devil. On the Lewisville circuit I found two family altars. I left one hundred. I found five who would pray. I left one hundred and ten. I am anxious to see my old Louisiana friends again.

Yours, R. Parvin.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

David Blacksher was born in the State of Georgia, on the 20th of February, 1795, and removed to Conecuh county, Alabama, in 1818. He was married to Nancy Taylor in 1821. Her influence, both temporal and spiritual, was always for good.

While attending a camp meeting, in 1827, he was happily converted, and became a member of the Methodist Church. He remained a member in good standing until the 17th of October, 1868, when he was called to the church triumphant. His example, as well as precept, was always in favor of religion. He never excused himself from the duties required by the church, but took up all the crosses of the Christian, looking with confidence to the reward promised the faithful.

He removed to Sumter county, Alabama, in 1833, being one of the first settlers. There was neither church nor preacher in that new country; but with characteristic energy he, with a few other pioneers, came together, and soon a church grew up in the wilderness. Rev. William Weir formed them into a society, and for more than thirty-five years did Brother Blacksher remain a faithful member of the Belmont church. Having "received the word" at a camp meeting, he was partial to that mode of worship, and his tent was found on every camp ground in his reach.

Having lost his first wife, he was married some seventeen years since to Miss Martha Taliaferro, of Demopolis, who cordially supported his effort to lead a godly life.

It was a source of great comfort to him that all his children became members of the church of his choice. Prosperity caused him to render thanks and love to the Giver; and misfortune only made him cling more fondly to the cross. His faith seemed to grow as his strength failed, and at the ripe age of seventy-three, when the summons came, it found in him neither alarm nor regret. He said: "More than forty years I have been living for this hour." He passed away as if led by the unseen hand of the great Friend in whom he had trusted.

A.

Died, November 29, 1868, in Rodney, Jefferson county, Mississippi, of chronic diarrhea, James Redfield, aged thirty years.

The father of the deceased was an exhorter in the Methodist Church, and, with his pious Baptist wife, endeavored to raise the children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

Not long after the decease of his father, in Waterproof, Louisiana, James was taken charge of by Captain Robert King, of Tensas parish, and sent to Oakland College, Mississippi, after which he was apprenticed to the trade of carpenter. Two years after his majority he enlisted, and faithfully served during the late war—save when prisoner—as a member of the Rodney Guards. The seeds of disease were implanted in his system while in the army, which finally fructified in his dissolution.

Active, energetic, intelligent, earnest in whatever he undertook, characterized the deceased. Like his father, it is said of him, "He was loved by every one who knew him."

For some time he was N. G. of Rodney Lodge, I. O. O. F., the members of which will testify as to his usefulness and ability.

His vivacity, impulsiveness and generosity too frequently led him from the path of rectitude. But amid all his wanderings the memories of the departed and sainted ones shocked him. This he thought; but it was an awakened conscience which caused him to resolve, and resolve again, to live a better life. For a while he tried to believe the absurdities of Romanism; but in his last illness the cloud was lifted from his mind, and many times has the writer heard him fervently pray for pardon and remission of sins through the merit of Christ, his Saviour, whose laws he had transgressed. He had vainly hoped to be restored to health, that he might lead a different life, and prove to his associates and the world the vitality of pure religion. God, however, willed otherwise, and removed him to another sphere of action. His only hope of salvation, as he expressed shortly before his death, was in the mercy of his Redeemer. May God sanctify this bereavement to the good of his sorrowing sister and other relatives and friends.

MISS HELEN ROGERS.

"Soul springs to soul, and heart unites to heart."

There is perhaps no feeling of our nature so vague, so complicated, so mysterious, as that with which we look upon the cold and stiffened form of a beloved friend. The livid cheek, the marble brow, the pulseless breast, the heavy eyelids drooping over the eyes which once looked so sweetly upon us, the closed lips which will never again utter a kind word, produce in our hearts feelings of deepest gloom and sorrow. On Friday morning, October 1, at two o'clock, I stood by the bedside of my dying friend, Helen, and saw her spirit pass so gently to the "unbounded prospect" that her soft breathing would scarcely have disturbed a frail flower-leaf resting on her bosom. Gladly would I have avoided a scene so impressive and solemn had not duty bid me linger with those whose hearts were so deeply wrung with anguish at the loss of an only daughter, young, gentle and loving. She was not only an affectionate and dutiful child, but a sweet companion for her now heart-broken mother. Little dreamed we, when she visited me last, that we would never meet again till I would be summoned to witness the launching of her frail bark upon the sea of death. Beneath the "listening evening star," with the moonbeams playing around us, we sat, as usual, upon our porch steps, our arms twined around each other. On the morrow we parted, and her familiar words, "Jennie, come soon," still linger sadly in memory's home. Yes, dear departed one, I visit your home as in the happy past, but your vacant chair fills my heart with untold grief.

Typhoid fever, of a violent nature, carried her to an early grave. Could the combined efforts of a kind physician and friends have availed anything she would still be with us. But who can solve the ways of Infinite Wisdom?

So serenely did she speak of death that it seemed disrobed of terror. "Strew my grave with flowers, and plant them on it; I know they will do no good, but I love them," was a request she made shortly before she died. She seemed to think, from the first of her illness, that she would not recover. Her dying gift to me, a ring, which she drew from her finger and asked her mother to give me, will be treasured with sacredness, and will, as it encircles my finger, recall mournfully the association with one who quietly sleeps in the cold grave.

Sweet friend, thou art gone; but often will I visit your newly-made mound, will plant flowers there, and list to the lonely notes of the forest minstrel. You will sleep quietly on—will not heed the silent tears I drop. Jennie.

Orville, November 16, 1868.

Died, in Sunflower county, Mississippi, on the 28th day of November, 1868, Mrs. Rebecca T. Carter.

She was the daughter of Hillard and Olivo Petty, and was born in Franklin county, Tennessee, January 1, 1832. In the year 1843 she came to Carroll county, Mississippi. At the age of eighteen she joined the Baptist Church. In 1853 she was married to W. W. Carter, and in 1855 joined the church of which her husband was a member—the Presbyterian. In 1859 moved to Sunflower county, Mississippi, where she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at a protracted meeting held at McNutt, August 6, 1867, where she rejoiced in God, her saviour. Since that time she has lived a consistent Christian. She was the mother of six children. Only one survives her—a lovely little boy, who often weeps for his mother, and says: "She is gone." Sister Carter was a devoted wife, assisting her husband in all the domestic relations of life. She was a kind mother, instructing her children and training them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. She was confined to her bed about three weeks before her death, and bore her affliction with Christian fortitude. She often expressed a willingness to die, and only regretted leaving her family. For several days before she died she talked but little. Her speech had left her. The time came when she must part, and without a murmur quietly fell asleep in Jesus. The friends and especially the physicians, who attended her during her illness have the sincere thanks of the bereaved husband.

"Thou art gone to the grave, but we will not deplore thee,
Whose God was thy ransom, thy guide and guide;
He gave thee, he took thee, and he will raise thee;
And death has no sting, for the Saviour died."

IN MEMORIAM.

Sarah Malissa Martin, only child of Benjamin F. and Charlotte Martin—whose father died Septe 26, 1863, of gunshot wounds received at Chickamauga, Septe 21, 1863—was born August 1861, and died in Milton, Flo October 5, 1868.

Malissa was a girl of rare promise, possessing a natural disposition amounting almost to religion. Having been her pastor for years of her life, I have looked for her with intense interest, and hoped to see the day when Ma would enter upon the meridian of womanhood. But rare as was the bud of promise, Providence saw fit that it should never bloom.

A few days before her death, having spent the day with her daughter, on leaving for home she spoke of her death, and bade the children good-by with emotion. To her mother she spoke in the way, gave directions concerning her burial, and mentioned the happiness of the children in heaven.

She wished to join the church, but her mother thought her too young; to which she replied: "I am not too young to die!" A few days she joined the church above. J. A. Parker

Public Prayer.—There are strong inducements to infuse didactic, hortatory, and even controversial discussions into public prayer. Several valuable tendencies in an honest and zealous minister, in him, when not on his guard, to bring his prayers with reference to instruction and persuasion. A grave and impressive announcement of a doctrine in the form of devout acknowledgment to God carries with it a sort of sacramental attestation of solemn conviction in the speaker, and is in some respects adapted to produce a correspondent conviction in the hearer. But we observe in some ministers a proneness to assert views of doctrine, and also of practice, which they suppose to be questioned or rejected. This sort of improprieties creeps into the petitions presented for the conversion of impenitent persons; when the minister prays that they may be taught a great variety of particulars, comprehending in his view, the system of saving knowledge and faith; that they may be led through a course of experience, which he delineates in thematic detail—departing, throughout, from the proper sphere of public supplication, except when he introduces each series with the appropriate prefix, "We pray."

Nothing but a defective apprehension of the nature of public prayer can reconcile a devout congregation to these didactic supplications. While in form addressing God, they, in fact, address the people. The people feel the prayers not as the expressions of their own devotion to God, but as a means of persuasion to themselves. The part of the evil thus incurred is the check thrown upon the fervor of devotion in the pious mind; and another is the injury suffered by those who have become so familiar with the impropriety as not to notice it. Princeton Review.

A method of sewing boots and shoes with copper wire, instead of the common thread, has been patented, the advantage being that at a very small increase in expense the strength and durability of the boots are much improved.

MICHAEL ANGELO.

One of the very remarkable men whose career includes the era of the Reformation was the great artist, painter, sculptor, architect and poet, Michael Angelo Buonarotti. He was descended from the Counts of Canova, some of whose family settled in Florence, and filled many offices in the republic. They were, however, not rich, and the father of the great man of whose career we propose to give a sketch was Podesta, or magistrate of Caprese and Chinse.

At the castle of Caprese Michael Angelo was born in the year 1474, but the family afterward returned to Florence. There the boy, when old enough, was placed with a celebrated grammarian, to be educated like other boys of his class. But the taste for art, which his father considered a degrading one, here displayed itself so strongly that one of his fellow-pupils, who was learning the art of painting from the brothers Ghirlandaio, furnished him secretly with materials and models, and at length introduced him to their atelier. At last his father yielded to his wishes, and he became himself the pupil of the Ghirlandaii.

Lorenzo de Medici, who then ruled Florence, had made his palace and gardens a school of art. He provided the finest models, and also rocks of marble, on which students might exercise their talents. Here was that Michael Angelo became sculptor. And it is more than probable that, in the intercourse which he here enjoyed with the most philosophical minds of the time, he took off much of the reverence for the superstitions of the Church of Rome, which was already diminishing in many countries of Europe. But, unfortunately, Lorenzo and his friends, in leaving his path so full of dangerous error, wandered into that of very false so-called philosophy. It was not till long after that a purer teaching is supposed to have had a blessed effect on the mind of the great artist.

Michael Angelo now lived in the palace of the Medici. And the envy which the patronage of Lorenzo excited showed itself at this time in a very unpleasant manner.—While Michael Angelo and some other artists were studying the paintings of Massacio in the chapel of La Carmine, on some slight provocation one of them, named Torrigiano, struck him so violent a blow on the nose that the bone was broken, and the victim disfigured for life.

Still his life in the palace of the Medici was a happy one, and it lasted till after the death of his patron. It might have continued longer had not the son of Lorenzo, Piero de Medici, asked him to make a colossal statue of the snow, which lay deep on the ground. Michael Angelo was so angry with this insult to his talents that he immediately quitted the service of the Medici. After various wanderings, Michael Angelo returned to Florence to find the family of the Medici expelled from their native city, and the reforming monk, Savonarola, at the head of affairs. The severe principles of Savonarola had already caused not only valuable ornaments and rich attire to be consigned to the flames, but had indeed possessed of precious works of art, and even artists themselves, to burn the productions of the finest painters. This, therefore, was no place for an artist, and Michael Angelo went for a time to Rome.

Afterward he executed at Florence, in rivalry with Leonardo da Vinci, the famous cartoon called the Cartoon of Pisa, because it exhibits an incident in a war between that city and Florence. The splendor of this cartoon far surpassed that of its competitor, and now Michael Angelo was destined to feel once more the force of envy. Bacio Bandinelli, a painter, during the tumult of excitement consequent on the return of the Medici, who were recalled to Florence, cut the great cartoon into fragments with a knife brought for the purpose. The unhappy Savonarola had suffered the punishment of death by fire in consequence of his daring exposure of the vices of the Roman clergy by order of that monster of iniquity, Pope Alexander VI.

Now began the connection between Michael Angelo and Pope Julius II. The quarrel and reconciliation between the artist and the fiery and imperative Julius are highly interesting and characteristic. Bramanti, envious of the credit of the Florentine with Julius, induced the pope to withdraw his favor from him. When Michael Angelo went to demand the reason, he was refused admittance to the presence of Julius. He turned away, saying to the chamberlain: "When your master wants me you may tell him that Michael Angelo is absent."

The mode in which these two hot-tempered men were reconciled by means of Loderini, who, during another banishment of the Medici, resided in Florence, is curious. Lodovini gave to Michael Angelo the title of embassador to Julius, and he was obliged to follow him to Bologna. The great works which he executed are too well known, as well as too numerous, to be described here.

The doctrines of the Reformation had made great progress in Italy during the early part of the sixteenth century. One of the most distinguished votaries of purer religious doctrines was Vittoria Colonna, widow of the Marquis of Pescara. She collected around her many other persons distinguished for their hatred of superstition, and at last, like herself, strongly suspected of favoring the new doctrines. Michael Angelo was one of the chosen friends of this virtuous and noble lady. She had a powerful and softening influence over his mind. To her many of his noble sonnets are addressed; and there is no doubt that he, too, had thrown off, in a great measure, though not openly, the bonds of that deadening and corrupting superstition, and that slavery of the soul which the sixteenth century had done so much to loosen, if not to throw aside.

Michael Angelo lived to complete his ninetieth year. He was a most kind master, and nursed his old servant Urbino to the very last. He was a very affectionate brother, and a true and unchanging friend. He died, leaving, as he said, "his soul to God; full of faith, of hope, and of charity."

It is not too much to believe that this pure and noble soul, strengthened by the associations formed with the friends of the Reformation who surrounded Vittoria Colonna, held the true faith, free at least from much of the superstition that his great mind must have abhorred.

Alas! the smoldering fire of Protestantism was quenched in Italy; as well as in France, Spain, and part of Germany, during the terrible period called in history "The Roman Catholic Reaction." This reaction is one of the historical events which make us feel so deeply our own utter incompetence to fathom the designs of the Ruler of the universe. All we know is, that in his good time the truth will shine clearly over all the nations of the earth.—Golden Hours.

EARLY'S TRIBUTE TO LEE.—A striking passage in the recent letter of General Early is its tribute to General Lee. The idea that General Lee was cautious to a fault on the battle-field, and betrayed indecision in leaning upon his subalterns for counsel, has been disseminated much too widely. The strong testimony of General Early on this subject is so admirable that we here reproduce it:

"There is another reason, which to me is a most potent one, and that is because I know that the boldest man in his strategic movements and his tactics on the field of battle in all the army of Northern Virginia, Stonewall Jackson not excepted, was General Robert E. Lee. Yes, under that calm and dignified exterior there beat one of the boldest hearts and dwelt one of the most daring minds that ever inspired the commander of an army. He required no council of war to urge him to do deeds of boldness, and I never heard of a council of war during the whole history of that army under his command. It is true that he often conferred with his corps commanders, and sometimes with subordinates intrusted with special duties, but it was not to catch inspiration from their counsels, but to instill into them a portion of his own daring spirit. General Jackson had his confidence in a pre eminent degree, because he was always ready to second with alacrity the plans of the commanding general; and no one felt the loss of that individual lieutenant more than General Lee himself did.

"To satisfy any one of what I say in regard to General Lee it is only necessary for him to examine the yet unwritten history of that unparalleled campaign to the James, of the operations on the line of defences around Richmond and Petersburg, and of the retreat for more than a hundred miles to Appomattax Court House—a place that will remain forever famous, not as the scene of triumph for the invader with his untold legions, but as the scene of the struggle of that great heart and that great mind which so reluctantly surrendered the small remnant of less than nine thousand of the army of Northern Virginia with arms in their hands."

A PARIS correspondent tells this: Dining at the club one night, somebody said, "Horrible bore—lent X 10,000 francs—have not even got an acknowledgment; and he's gone to Constantinople." "Write to him," said the Baron. "Have done so, and it don't answer—he does not answer." "Then, mon cher, write to him thus: 'Dear M. X, when the Turks and Turkesses leave you a little leisure time, send me the 20,000 francs I lent you.'" "But he only owes me 10,000." "Precisely! he will write and say so, and then there's your acknowledgment."

Theology and Beer in Germany.

A correspondent of the United Presbyterian gives us the following:

The beer hall, coffee garden or coffee house, are with the Germans (to use an Americanism) a decided institution. All public meetings, whatsoever be their character, be they social, charitable, political or religious, take place in these localities. Questions of state, social science, benevolent or missionary enterprises, are discussed by the members of the innumerable vereins, under the inspiration of tobacco and the stimulus of beer.

The Gustavus Adolphus verein, which is a church building association extending throughout Germany—a kind of home missionary society in the interest of Protestantism—held its sessions always in Bonn, in the spacious saloon of one of its numerous restaurants, and over the foaming beer or fragrant cigar, learned divines and grave theological professors leisurely discuss (the Germans never do anything in a hurry) the past history and future prospects of German Protestantism. Intricate problems in mathematics or natural science find their solution in the same way. Their charities grow tenderer under the influence of smoke, and knotty questions in theology or philosophy are dissolved in a cup of coffee or a glass of Rhenish wine.

The exercises of the various associations are, however, always decorously conducted, and anything like intemperate excess rarely known. To these meetings we were frequently invited, and occasionally accepted the invitation; and perhaps a few notes as to the manner in which they were conducted may not fail to interest your readers.

Dr. Lange called one morning and invited us to attend a meeting of a theological exegetical society in connection with the Presbytery of Cologne. It took place, of course, in a coffee house in the Kley Garden, on the bank of the Rhine. We were introduced by the doctor, and took our seat at a long table running the entire length of the hall, and around which were ranged the members of the presbytery. Coffee and cake were served up; the meeting was open, and the discussion commenced.

A brother had been appointed at the preceding meeting to present before the association an exegesis of the seventh chapter of the Apocalypse. The brother, who was a pastor of one of the neighboring churches, presented a lengthy, learned and exhaustive exegesis of the passage assigned him, to which his brethren patiently listened; then the whole matter was thrown open for general discussion. The member, in his discussion of the passage assigned him, had developed some millenarian views. Upon that question the subsequent debate hinged. The anti-millenarians were, however, decidedly in the majority, and, as we conceived it, had the best of the argument—among whom Dr. Lange was prominent.

The debate rapidly crossed from one side of the table to the other, members all the while remaining seated, with the Greek Testament in one hand and a cup of coffee in the other. Sometimes a brother would launch out at considerable length, and then again it would subside into a running debate or sharp passage of words betwixt two ponderous D. Ds. or learned professors; and so it continued without any diminution or animation or interest for a couple of hours, when the hour for concluding the formal business of the association had arrived, and the debate was closed, and another half hour spent in pleasant and social conversation.

The Theological Society amongst the students of divinity held its weekly meetings in one of the rooms of a celebrated restaurant. Room, fuel and light were gratuitously furnished, the proprietor expecting to remunerate himself on the beer consumed. One evening we accepted an invitation to attend. When we got there the exercises had been already introduced. The young theologians were seated on either side of a table, the Prases at their head, flanked by a mug of beer, leisurely puffing a cigar or inhaling the fragrance of the weed through a long and limber shanked pipe; some were participating in and others attentively listening to the discussion, and some were doing neither the one nor the other, but appeared to have given themselves over to reverie and smoke, seeming utterly oblivious to what was transpiring.

The question for discussion was—"Should the Second Epistle of John be understood literally or allegorically?" The majority were in favor of regarding it as a real epistle, addressed to a Christian mother eminent in the church. Nevertheless, the opposite view was sustained with a good deal of animation and ingenuity.

We should have remarked, the student was not only provided with his mug of beer and his inevitable pipe, but his Greek Testament, of which he made a frequent and ready use. The use of the one was continually alternating with that of the other, some of them actually participating in the debate with the pipe between their teeth. The beer mugs were never permitted to stand for a moment empty—a watchful Ganymede stood ever ready to replenish them, and the smoking was not for a moment intermitted. The atmosphere of the room grew gradually obscurer, and the fumes of tobacco grew stronger and stronger, until your correspondent, who is guiltless of the use of the weed, was glad to escape into the open air, with the conviction that he for one must seek his theology in regions less smoky. Clothes and hair were completely saturated with smoke, and the odor of that single meeting haunted us for nearly a week.

WRITE HOME.—There can be no excuse for any young man who never writes home, or whose letters to the old folks there—whose dreams are ever of her son—are few and far between, and not worth much even when obtained. It is sad to think that there are young men who let weeks and months pass away without a letter to their parents or their brothers and sisters, who, when they do write, only send a line or two, with some lame excuse for their not doing more; a line or two saying nothing, just containing some stereotyped statement, or vague utterance, which gives no information. Why, the value of a letter from a young man to the far-off town or village home consists in its little details; its affectionate gossip; its account of any circumstance or incident that may have promise in it of advantage; its story of hopeful struggle, of dawning success; or its references to new-formed friendships, to books read, churches attended, lectures listened to, with a thousand things besides, which may be small in themselves, but which show an interest in the members of the home circle, and manifest the beating of the child's heart within the man's. Young men are not aware what pain they may inflict by apparent neglect; how letters, brief and unfrequent, may give rise to fear and doubt, and occasion anxious days and wakeful nights! Now, don't neglect home. Don't seem indifferent to your own family, as if all your interest were transferred to strangers. Keep the chain of communication bright by use; and write freely and fully, with unrestrained confidence, that it may be felt that there is neither blight on the affections nor error in the life, which is too often the cause of that lapse in filial or fraternal correspondence, which, though the result also at times of mere thoughtlessness, is always unkind and sometimes cruel. Count de Gasparin—"Seventeen to Thirty"

AN AMUSING INCIDENT.—Two Highland men who had never walked beyond the mountains that bounded their Highland home, came to Edinburg in search of employment. As they walked along the streets, viewing with wonder and astonishment the splendid edifices that adorn that part of the city which is called the New Town, they observed several well-dressed persons enter a handsome and imposing structure which they believed to be a Presbyterian, but was really an Episcopal church. They at once determined to join the number, passed the sexton or door-keeper unobserved, and seated themselves in a handsomely cushioned pew in a prominent part of the church. Ere long, to their unutterable surprise, the organ began to send forth its melodious sounds, and at the same time a gentleman in a white gown entered the pulpit. As nothing around them had the slightest resemblance to any thing they had seen before in a place of worship, they became convinced that they must have entered a place of amusement. While they were thus meditating, a gentleman and lady of no ordinary importance presented themselves before the pew, the former making signs to the strangers to withdraw, which were not heeded by them. The aid of the sexton was then invited, but no sooner had he entered the pew and proceeded to take the man next to him by the arm to lead him gently out of the seat, than pointing to his comrade, he exclaimed in a tone loud enough to be heard by all, "Tak Donald; he's a better dancer."

The sequel need scarcely be told. The intruders were unceremoniously ejected from the pew, and wandering down the aisle into the subjected street, through Edinburg, took their solitary way.—Central Presbyterian.

THE Evening Post contains the following advertisement: "For sale cheap, my pew, No. —, Christ church (Mr. Ewer's) It is a very desirable pew, and was in great demand before Protestantism was called a failure."

THE HISTORIC JESUS.

The practical task imposed upon Jesus, in view of what he asserted in his own behalf, was that of dramatizing in the forms of living action two totally dissimilar characters without contradiction and without mutual repugnance; the task of being divine and human at the same time, and of so acting that neither idea should suffer damage from the other. The human was apparent; and the divine was claimed on the evidence of miracles.—How, then, shall Jesus act out the man in perfection, and also act the God in perfection; setting forth all that is simple, pure, lovely and beautiful in the former, and exhibiting all that is grand, glorious and appropriate in the latter, and thus blending both in one progressive and finished history of facts stupendously different, yet completely harmonious? Let a fanatic or an impostor try this experiment—yea, let any merely human being attempt to imitate this feature in the public life of Jesus—and he would instantly disgust the intelligence of the world. Criticism would hurl its shafts upon him at all points, and at once expose the absurd and monstrous pretension. The human would be constantly doing discredit to the superhuman. Impostors there have been in the world from time immemorial; yet we have never read of an impostor who really set himself to the work of playing the game of humanity and divinity at the same time. We challenge all history for the production of any other person who actually imposed upon himself, by his own professions, this practical task.

And yet this is the very thing which Jesus did, and did successfully. Skeptical criticism has never objected to Jesus, so far as we know, on the ground that his deportment in the human sphere would be discreditable to him considered as divine. It urges no fault in the man as an argument against his claims. There is nothing in the man unworthy of the God. Singular extremes here meet and become harmonious. Though the highest assumptions are united with the simplest forms of our humanity, both seem equally natural and normal, and both are worn with equal grace and facility. Jesus spoke and acted as if his own testimony in regard to himself were true; and, moreover, he so spake and acted as to commend this truth to millions upon millions of human minds. We see no occasion to be offended with the testimony when we observe the total exhibition of the person. He could not have done better, if we suppose the testimony to be true; and he certainly could not have done so had it been false. He needed to do what he declared himself to be in order to fulfill as he did the demands of his own position. If there be any truth in the history, Jesus is not a mere man. He is more; and as to the question how much more, what better thing can we do than to trust his own words? The Independent

ST. PAUL'S METHODIST CHURCH.

Notwithstanding the unpleasantness of the weather, quite a fair attendance was present on Friday afternoon, at the Franklin Square Presbyterian church, Rev. J. A. Lefevre, pastor, to witness the ceremonies attendant on the corner-stone laying of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church South, now in course of erection on Fayette street, east of Republican street. The Franklin Square church was kindly tendered by the pastor and elders for religious services appropriate to the occasion, the season rendering it almost impossible that they could be held at the site of the new church. The exercises began with a hymn by the choir, followed by a fervent prayer by Rev. J. A. Lefevre. Rev. Dr. Huston, who has charge of St. Paul's congregation, then gave a sketch of the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Baltimore, dating from the separation at Staunton, Virginia, in the Conference of 1861. He traced the trials and tribulations of the church during the dark days of the late war, when, he said, worshipers of God were almost hunted down in the secluded places they had sought to worship. He congratulated the people on the increase of church membership, which necessitated the erection of this new temple. He was followed in a brief but most effective address by the Rev. Dr. W. E. Mussey, of the Central Methodist Episcopal church.

The officers and a number of members of Arcana Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons were present to perform the ceremony of laying the corner-stone, which was done by Rev. Dr. McCron, grand chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Maryland. The design of the church gives promise that it will be one of the handsomest church edifices in the city. The front will be one of the gothic style of architecture, with two towers, and will be built entirely of concrete stone from the works of the Baltimore Concrete Stone Company. The base will be in imitation of red sand stone of rustic style, and the upper portion will be conglomerate, with alternate blocks of drab and dark granite color. The concrete stone already put up has all the specific gravity of granite, and is so manufactured that it is capable of sustaining quite as great a pressure as the best of natural sand stones. The texture of the concrete stone is as fine as that of marble, and it is much harder to break, while it cannot be affected by frost. This will be the first public building in the city with a concrete stone front, and it will doubtless attract the attention of those who desire to build, as the cost is far below that of any other fine stone. The front will be pushed forward as rapidly as the weather will permit, and will probably be completed early in the spring.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND AND THE WESLEYANS.—The earnest and highly sugared attempt of the High Church party in the Church of England, under the lead of Dr. Pusey, to win over the great body of Wesleyan Methodists to the support of the establishment, shows at once how heavily the pressure is felt of advancing public opinion, and the tenacity with which Anglicanism clings to its fancied title of exclusive legitimacy. They do not intimate the least intention of receiving the Wesleyan preachers as Christian ministers, but only propose to employ them as lay evangelists until they consent to admit their irregularity by accepting *re*ordination at the hands of some bishop. The discussion of the subject has called out an able pamphlet by Rev. Dr. J. H. Riggs, Wesleyan, who goes right to the foundation both of the controversy and of the High Church assumption. He shows how Wesley himself wholly changed the views which he entertained in early life. After reading Lord King's book on the Primary Church, he entirely renounced the High Church views, and boldly trampled, one after another, on all the principles involved in the divine right of episcopacy, until he had consecrated with his own hand an episcopate for America, and provided for the registration of his own chapels as "dissenting" places of worship. The present generation of Wesleyan preachers will never so much as seriously consider a proposal to plunge their united and powerful organization into the confusion and uncertainty which now envelop the Church of England. The London Weekly Review, a Presbyterian paper, says of them:

"They have their own church government, in almost all respects Presbyterian—defective only in not completing its Presbyterianism by the introduction into conference of lay representation—and they find it so much better, as well as believe it so much more scriptural, that they do not dream of returning to episcopacy. They have a vast power for good in the country, and they have a great future before them; and they would be fools indeed if they even distantly considered—which they do not—the question of reunion with a divided and, through its divisions, insecure establishment."

THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH. The following statistics relative to the progress and condition of this church in the United States during the past year have been compiled from the latest reports published in 1868: Dioceses 39, bishops 49, clergy 2,736, parishes 2,412, ordinations 206, candidates for holy orders 331, baptisms 35,702, confirmations 21,958, communicants 149,692, membership 1,100,000, marriages 9,945, burials 15,346, contributions $4,457,888 28, Sunday school scholars 104,040.

A DELUDED citizen of Portland, Maine, becoming impressed with an idea that the world is soon to be visited by a second deluge, has applied his whole property ($6,000) to the building of an ark of refuge. The boat will be fifty feet long, fifteen feet wide, flat-bottomed, square-sterned, round bows, with a house a little aft of amidships. He is sole planner and builder, and intends, when it is completed, to furnish it with necessary provisions and calmly await the rising of the waters.

FOUR GREAT HINDRANCES TO PRAYER. 1. Too much outward business uncommanded by God. 2. Too little subduing of the body. 3. Too little privacy. 4. Too great slothfulness.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

The fine iron steamer Mexico, Captain Gordon, is advertised for Belize, British Honduras, by R. A. Perdreauville. This is represented to be a first class sea going steamer. We shall take occasion to go down and see her cabins, etc., and report more particularly for the benefit of our friends. See advertisement for terms. Apply to No. 59 Poydras street, or to Messrs. J. P. Harrison & Sons, No. 52 Union street.

See the card of Messrs. Garthwaite, Lewis & Stuart, Nos. 31 and 33 Camp street. They have a large and excellent stock of clothing.

Financial Condition of the South.

Most of the planters are out of debt. The war and the bankrupt law swept away negroes, houses and debts. During this past year they have worked through without advances, and have made good crops at very low rates of labor. The crops of cotton, sugar and corn have been large—probably as fine, to the acre planted, as were ever made in the South. The prices of both cotton and sugar have been high. The amount of money from cotton alone will be $250,000,000, and the sugar crop will probably yield $16,000,000 more. The old temptation to buy more negroes or lands no longer troubles the planter. All the crevices made by the war were tolerably well filled two years ago, so that now all that remains to do is to pay about $50,000,000 for moneys advanced in 1866 and 1867 by the merchant, which leaves the snug balance of $200,000,000 in hand.

Now what will they do with this? Will they waste it in extravagance or bury it in the cellar? We trust they will do neither, but put it in Southern manufacturing companies, in Southern railroads or in building or buying ships, that the South may reap the immense wealth which lies in the portage of her grand productions. But before all these, we hope they will repair their churches and school houses, and reorganize and man their colleges, and send their boys and girls to school, that the South may continue to yield as noble men and women in the future as in the past.

CATHOLIC PRIESTS AT WAR WITH THE CITY SCHOOLS.

The Morning Star is, we suppose, the organ of Archbishop Odin and the Catholic clergy of this city, as it is published by a company of which the Rev. "Fathers" are the principal directors. In its issue of the 10th it has an editorial headed the "School Squabble," in which the position of the Catholic church and clergy, upon the school question, is squarely stated as follows:

"We are no friend of the common school system. We are its unrelenting opponent to every extremity and under every circumstance. What side, therefore, shall we take in the little family feud that has broken out very recently in the common school camp?"

Whatever hesitancy the writer may affect in this first sentence, there is no difficulty in seeing which side he does take. He finds it to his purpose to side with Governor Warmoth.

"The Governor says that incompetent teachers are sometimes employed through political influences. * * * Is the charge true or false? We leave the answer of this question entirely to the parties interested. We can only say that such conduct as that denounced by the Governor would be perfectly natural. We do not remember to have heard the charge before, though we have heard much more serious ones, and it may be that New Orleans has been so peculiarly blessed with public spirited school directors as to have enjoyed an action on their part free from any taint of personal or private motive."

He not only does not leave the answer to "the parties," but directly proceeds to denounce the whole public school system as a political "engine."

"The much vaunted plea of popular education is a mere subterfuge. There is no real, pure, charitable desire to educate the poor for the sake of education. The object really but secretly aimed at is to place another engine of power in the hands of the controlling class. Education is the plea; religious or political effect is the motive."

What those "much more serious" charges are, which the writer has heard against the School Board, we are left to gather from the indirect statement that "A school director could listen complacently to the application of a lady ill suited to the desk, though quite an ornament to the parlor, but a mother would look elsewhere for her little girl's model and preceptress." We take it for granted that the directors themselves are fathers, and are likely to feel as much solicitude in placing proper models before their daughters as nuns or priests could feel, who have no "little girls" to send to school. It occurs to us that no lady is fit to be a teacher of girls who is not "an ornament to the parlor," and that there can be no greater mistake than to subject a child to the daily sight and contemplation of a recluse in the hope of forming and developing its mind and heart in any healthy, practical way. We believe that the directors of our schools are gentlemen who have reputable families, and as such may be trusted to select ladies of high repute as instructors for our children—ladies who are fully competent both to teach them and to command their respect—an "ornament" and a "preceptress." If we may judge by the excellent character of the schools themselves, it would be difficult to find a more competent directory than the present one. It was first to prevent a positive legal check to the Radical violence which attempted to place negroes upon the school forms with white children. And until this time with untiring vigilance it has resisted foes without, and foes within, not the least of whom have been these very Catholic priests and their rings.

It required no great insight to detect these ecclesiastics, even before they unmasked. They were friends of the public schools, but were opposed to the reading of the Scriptures in them. Well, the Scriptures were held in abeyance out of respect to a tender conscience! Next they were friends, but the text books and histories used were by Protestant writers, and would [illegible] justice to Catholic truth. Now, [illegible] complaint is, they are "political engines"—with other dark insinuations of "more serious charges;" which we suppose is about as far as they dare go in indorsing the calumnies of Governor Warmoth. It has been a year since one of these "Fathers" said that he was "glad the negroes were in power, for it would break up the public schools." It seems now that he only uttered a little in advance the sentiment of this Catholic organ: "We are no friend to the common school system. We are its unrelenting opponent to every extremity, and under every circumstance." Let this stand in italics, that the State of Louisiana may know where to find the Roman priests. They avow themselves the enemies eternal of her public schools. So much for warming a viper. And why are these men so much opposed to the education of the masses?—those "learned professors who," as the Star says, "frequently speak Latin and Greek better than French, who are more at home in logic and ethics than many 'practical educators' are in spelling and parsing." Why are they not willing that the poor should have a little learning as well as themselves? The reader will have to go deeper into this question than we now can find room to answer. We would only point him to the banners of the Spanish populace, flashing in the streets of Madrid, emblazoned with the words "Free Schools," "Down with the Jesuits," "Religious Liberty."

All good citizens are interested in the education of the children of this republic. But a small part of them belong to any church, and it is for the State to educate them. But these Roman ecclesiastics wish to introduce the atmosphere of Italy and Spain and Mexico into this land, to shroud the masses in the dark folds of mental night and natural superstition—the one they call education, the other religion. This they hope in part to secure by breaking up the public schools; they are, therefore, their "unrelenting opponents." Four-fifths of them are foreigners, unnaturalized foreigners, as yet unable to speak English correctly, and they have barely landed in the country before they seek to break up its institutions.

Let the State distinctly understand from whom this "unrelenting" opposition to her best interest comes. During the last twenty years she has given increasingly large grants of money to these people. Every sort of corporation and charity they could trump up has been put upon the list of "General Appropriations for the State." Various kinds of "asylums," the "Good Shepherd Home," the "Conference of St. Joseph of St. Vincent de Paul," the "House of Mt. Carmel," the "House of Five Wounds," the "Home of the Holy Family," and many other ingenious varieties of charity, have been wrung in to the tune of from $1,000 to $5,000 and $6,000 annually. We give the amounts appropriated to these Catholic institutions:

In 1846-47 (two years)	$12,000
In 1848-49 (two years)	29,000
In 1850	14,000
In 1852	19,000
In 1854	19,000
In 1855	20,000
In 1857	32,000
In 1859	23,000
(The war.)
In 1865	35,000
In 1866	30,250
In 1867	56,500
In 1868	27,000

In this list there are several years wanting, but the appropriations were not wanting—we only had not time to perfect the statement. Since the war, in these past four years, while the State and all its citizens have been in the greatest financial straits, these "unrelenting opponents" have received from the State Treasury over $150,000!—Now they are ready to turn and rend her. It is high time that these "enemies" of the public schools should be left to their own resources, as well as to their own policy.

A MOVEMENT is already in progress to found a new Episcopal denomination on an evangelical basis. The evangelical bishops will be urgently invited to lead the movement.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW, JANUARY, 1869. Baltimore: A. T. Bledsoe. 8vo, pp. 248.

The contents of this quarterly are as follows: The Great Error of the Eighteenth Century; The Nature and Laws of Light; Waterloo; Napoleon and Wellington; The Life and Writings of John Wilson; The Study of Sanskrit; The Early History of Maryland; The Progress of Astronomy; The Seven Years' War; The Sumpter and Alabama; Admiral Semmes; Northern Geographies; Notices of Books.

The "error of the eighteenth century," in the men of France as well as of America, was the conceit that "they were appointed to transform society and regenerate the human race." This is the idea that now possesses Wendell Phillips, only he, et id omne genus, go a step farther and think that they have in great part already done it. O the transcendant reflection that the Puritans came to this country! that they brought their minister with them—according to the painting in the Rotunda. Only think of that! Robinson, they call him. Only it happens that he did not come, and was not in the "Mayflower," and, therefore, the painting in the capitol is only as true as some other paintings, and will not do for a text. Still these people think that they are the great offspring of a great stock. How great, the present condition of public affairs can testify. The article upon "Christopher North," that "bright star of a magnificent constellation of writers," satisfies the wish, that all have, to be better acquainted with the author of the Noctis Ambrosianæ. It solves the doubt whether they were really written by one mind, as also who was the editor of Blackwood. When we mention the contemporaries of Wilson—Brewster, William Hamilton, Lockhart, Dr. Quincey, Hogg, Jameson and Jeffrey—it at once suggests the sparkling body of this delightful paper.

The treatise upon "Light," upon its fundamental laws, its transmission, velocity, etc., presents the truths of its great problems, so far as ascertained, with great distinctness, and show how they have been ascertained.

"The Progress of Astronomy" can help one to preach for a week; in fact it is a great sermon on a great text—the glory of God as discovered and enlarged by this sublime science. Here are stated the results of the labors and genius of Thales, of Pythagoras, of Copernicus, of Galileo, of Tycho Brache, of Kepler, and of Newton—and what a pleiad are these seven sons of light! Their patience, their modesty, their endurance were scarcely surpassed by their genius. One single sentence from Kepler is as grand as was ever uttered by uninspired man. It was upon the occasion of working out the great truths of an eliptic orbit, the equal areas described in equal times by the radius Vector, and that the squares of the periodic times of any two planets are always to each other as the cubes of their mean distances from the sun. When he saw how these discoveries enlarged the boundaries of the universe to the thoughts of men, he exclaims: "I will triumph over mankind, in the honest confession that I have stolen the golden vase of the Egyptians, to build up a tabernacle for my God, far away from the confines of Egypt. The die is cast; the book is written to be read, either now or by posterity. I care not which. I can afford to wait a century for a reader, since God himself has waited six thousand years for an observer."

We have not space to speak of the many other good things in this well freighted quarterly. Every scholar ought to have it.

THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW, JANUARY, 1869.—Contents: New American Histories, by Peck and Draper; India as a Mission Field; John Tauler and his Theology; The Metropolis of the Pacific; The Negro in Ancient History; Geological Evidences of the Antiquity of Man; Foreign Religious and Foreign Literary Intelligence; Synopsis of the Quarterlies; The Quarterly Book Table.

We miss in this number an article from the pen of the editor. His book table would compensate in part for the deficiency, if one did not expect both. It required something to relieve the "Peck and Draper" article, though possibly the reviewer himself had a dreary theme, if we may judge from such specimens as this rapturous burst from Dr. Peck's book: "American liberty—what language can express the glow of rapture with which we contemplate it! We feel the thrill of its life and the throb of its joy, as it courses through our veins. Liberty to think and utter our thoughts; liberty to write and print and read, and no fear of servile police, or loathsome cells, or murderous injustice," etc. This is, indeed, a fine frenzy. But it has not been very long since the "liberty to write and print" would depend very much on what you wrote. The doctor will not affirm that during the war a man could speak against the policy of the government party, and have no fear of "servile police." That real freedom of speech which the opposition have in England, even during a war, did not exist, in '63, in this country. We once saw a good looking bishop, in St. Peters, at Rome, standing up before a coarse scene-painting which represented the last saint in the calendar, San Pedro Claver, bringing a negro boy to life somewhere in Brazil. The Jesuit kissed as he gazed upon the miserable daub, and tears coursed freely down his cheeks! We suppose that Dr. Peck sees St. Liberty doing something of the same sort here, and his enthusiasm quite overpowers him. The reviewer has the one idea of the Northern mind, that somehow they themselves are the flower of intelligence, patriotism, humanity and religion. "The great mass of the colonists," he tells us, "especially those of the Northern States, were thoroughly imbued with the principles of religious liberty." How "thoroughly" we may judge from another fact, which he also tells, viz: that "two hundred years ago, in New England, if a man's religious opinions were not esteemed orthodox his right to vote was denied as stoutly as is the Georgia negro's to-day." This kind of "religious liberty," and Dr. Peck's notion of "American liberty," go very well together.—They will please excuse us if we look on the painting with dry eyes for the present—at least until we see something that resembles constitutional liberty.

THE SUGAR REGIONS.

We had a most charming evidence of the "rehabilitation" of the Lafourche country presented to us on yesterday—a barrel of fine sugar and half a barrel of No. 1 syrup, from the plantation of Mr. J. W. Beasley, of Assumption parish. We set it all down to the account of brotherly love and—quarterage.—Turkeys, oranges, and now sugar and syrup! A few more such turns in the wheel and we shall be at the top. We hope that Dr. Chapman will hurry down to take possession of his Thibodeaux circuit, so full of "all pleasant things."

THE PAPAL COUNCIL.—The Armenian Patriarch accepts the invitation of the pope to attend Ecumenical Council at Rome. The Greek Patriarch of Constantinople, of course, under Russian influence, refuses. The Anglican bishops have written an answer with a keen pen. After referring to what the Church of England has done in disseminating the holy Scriptures, they add:

"Thou, our most holy Lord; thou, the Vicar of Christ, the Bishop of Bishops, the Supreme Judge of the Faith, and Arbiter of all controversies; thou, the Head of the Church, the light of the nations, let us humbly ask thee, canst thou show us even a single copy of the original Hebrew Old Testament printed in thine own city, Rome. 'The Mother and Mistress of all Churches?' No, not one. One edition of the New Testament in Greek, printed there the other day—about four hundred years after the invention of printing—from the celebrated Vatican MS., we have now gratefully hailed, after long and anxious delay. But we apprehend that the flock committed to the pastoral care has still to wait for an edition from the Roman press, in their own tongue, of the Old or New Testament."

OUR INTERCOURSE WITH JAPAN.

About 1545 a Portuguese adventurer, in company with some Chinese, was driven by foul weather into one of the Japan Islands, kindly treated, and hospitably [illegible] back. Missionaries soon followed, and St. Francis Xavier visited Japan in 1549, dying soon after on the Chinese coast. It happened, unfortunately, that at that time Portugal was united to Spain, and Taoko Same, at that time regarded by the Japanese as the greatest character in their history, having unfortunately inquired of a Spanish traveler how it was that his king had managed to possess himself of half the world, was indiscreetly answered: "He sends priests to win the people; his troops then are sent to join the native Christians, and the conquest is easy." This answer, it is said, produced a great impression, and, in 1587, an edict was issued for the banishment of the missionaries. Ten years later it is said that twenty three missionaries were put to death in one day, and a few years later many of the Japanese converts were killed, their churches and schools destroyed, and their [illegible] declared infamous and rebellious. In 1639 the Portuguese were finally expelled, and their trade transferred to the Dutch, who had been [illegible] were considered their enemies, but under many restrictions. Nor were these difficulties removed for more than two hundred years. In 1854, however, a new treaty was negotiated at Simoda, between the United States government and the Japanese, by Mr. Townsend Harris, and in the following year the same gentleman succeeded in reaching Yeddo and concluding a still more favorable treaty; and in August of the same year the Earl of Elgin, British embassador, concluded a treaty between Great Britain and Japan. About this time, however, the reigning Tycoon died of [illegible] lepsy, aged thirty-six, and was succeeded by a young man of great intelligence and liberality. The war in this country has, since then, done much to prevent the extension of commercial and social intercourse between the Japanese and the citizens of the United States which might have been expected. No doubt, now, with our line of steamers from San Francisco and the Sandwich Islands, our country will have natural advantages over others in the way of trade, and intercourse and knowledge of the habits, customs and opinions of the natives. Indeed, it would seem as if Japan were to form a natural connecting link between the Old World and the New. In point of population, the country is variously estimated to contain from fifteen million to fifty million inhabitants. The manners and customs, especially of the ladies, are declared to be most refined, and the men of the higher grades of society carry the point of honor to a degree of refinement unknown elsewhere. Indeed, a recent English writer well says: "They carry notions of honor to the verge of fanaticism. They are haughty, vindictive and licentious. Bar brawlers, buckhilers and bravoes are held in the most supreme contempt, and they are open-handed, hospitable and faithful as friends to death." St. Francis Xavier declared, three hundred years ago, that the virtue and probity they surpassed all nations he had ever seen. The agriculture of the Japanese is conducted with skill and diligence, hardly a foot of ground is left uncultivated to the tops of the mountains. Manure is carefully collected and used in the production of abundant harvests. They dwarf and enlarge all vegetable products with great care and success. Manufactures are carried to a perfection that must surpass those of the other parts of the world. The lacquer in wood with great skill and imitate not only the goods of Eastern nations, but Colt's revolvers and Sharp's revolvers. Steam engines are built at Nagasaki, and a screw steamer has been successfully navigated to Yeddo in two days, entirely by native engineers and seamen. The Japanese are [illegible] good surgeons, because their religions prejudices prevent free dissection, but as physicians they know much that they can teach us, and are deficient in many points in which they can learn from us, so that there is beyond doubt the basis for a mutually profitable interchange of knowledge.—Philadelphia Ledger.

AN UNEXPLORED WORLD.—The proposal of Dr. Newmayer to cross Australian continent from east to west will probably ultimately be accepted. There still remains more than half of Australia unexplored, and although it is possible that it is merely an arid desert, yet still it is likely that it will be found to have resources of great value. The cost of the proposed expedition would be £7,000 a year for three years, half of which would be subscribed by the home government, and the remainder divided among the colonies. The expedition would be provided with ton camels, twenty-five horses, baggage wagons, camp equipage, field telegraph, boat, balloon and all kinds of scientific instruments. The progress of the party would, of course, be very slow, and they do not hope to accomplish the proposed journey in less than three years. It is intended, however, that the country on either side of the line of march shall be thoroughly explored; from time to time messengers will be dispatched to the coast with news and letters. The scientific results of an elaborate exploration, such as this, would no doubt be very valuable. The theory of an interior desert is now generally looked upon as unsound; it is known that natives range as far, at least, as the center of the continent, and it is hoped that the unknown portion of Australia will prove as valuable for grazing purposes as that already occupied.

A NIGHT OF HORROR.

The most extraordinary event connected with the recent political disturbances has never been fully written out. This was the immediate circumstance attending the death of Pablo Fillion, and until his wife took the stand in the recent St. Bernard investigation, the extraordinary details have been (in spite of efforts made at the time) beyond the command of the reporters.

The exact manner in which the high-spirited and determined Fillion met his death is destined to have its place in history. And as such we give below the statements made by his surviving wife, of what was the most dramatic and tragic situation of any of the recent disturbances. The evidence was taken down before Judge Thornton, Mr. Henry Castellanos acting as prosecuting attorney for the State:

Mme. Pablo Fillion sworn.—The last time I saw my husband alive was on the 25th of October. He was then at our house in the parish of St. Bernard. On that night a crowd of some four hundred negroes had come up the road. They had approached very slowly, and finally stopped in front of our residence. One of them cried "halt," and they all halted.

They were armed with all kinds of knives, pitchforks, hoes, bayonets, etc. Having halted, four of them made a great noise by knocking violently at the door. There being no answer, those that knocked returned again to the road. My husband was at the time in the rear of the house, and upon entreaties being used, said he would do nothing if they did not trouble him.

After the four men had withdrawn to the road, a volley of at least four hundred shots was fired at the house. Whereupon my husband ran to the balcony and fired at the crowd. He returned to reload his gun. While he was loading the negroes again fired. My husband the second time fired upon them. This interchange of volleys was five times repeated. At the end of that time I ran to the window to see if they were going away. I then discovered that they had possession of a load of hay. I saw them come in front of the steps of the house, pile up the hay and set fire to it.—I went to my husband and told him they had set fire to our house. He thereupon went round and fired another musket shot. After this he returned and ordered me to go away and save the children, who were six in number. There was present also my sister, a white boy and a colored girl. Each one of our party took a child and went toward the woods by the back way.

That was the last time I saw my husband. The negro Brown, now in court, halted me in going out of the gate toward the field. He was then crouching by the fence. When I refused to halt, he shot at me. I then stopped, and coming up, the man threw himself upon me. I begged his pardon, when he interrogated me, and I asked him to save my life and that of my poor children.

He cursed me, and said, D—n you, I have pity on the baby in your arms, but none on you." Continuing to beg for mercy, he finally told me to go.

After I had started to run, he commenced calling to the crowd in the road. He now cursed me again, and four of the men shot at me. I continued to run until they overtook me. I then called my sister to come back, and that we would die together. I went on my knees, with my children around me, as my sister came up. One of the men dealt her a blow upon the head. She fell down, and Philogene Augustine ran to her and put his hand in her pockets. She now sat up and begged them not to fire again at her. Five shots were thereupon fired.

Philogene and [illegible] mandell [illegible] band's [illegible]

They [illegible] worst [illegible] and over. I finally begged them to kill me there. They said they were not ready to kill me yet.

In crossing a picket fence, Philogene jumped over to where I was, and cursed me until I again fell upon my knees. I was unable to move through excess of terror. He ordered me to hasten to the house, where the money was concealed, because the flames were fast gaining ground. He hurried me on—the negro girl who was with me clinging to my dress. Subsequently, as I stated that the girl knew where the money was, they dragged her off by the arms, and released me. My sister was then sitting alongside of the road bleeding from her wound, and under the charge of a negro guard. I finally persuaded her to attempt to make her escape with me, and this we did, although the negro fired his gun at us.

Witness, after some adventures, met with four white men, and was taken to Mr. Arlaba's residence. The witness identified all of the negro men who have been sent for trial to the Criminal Court.

It will be recollected that these latter were brought to the city on Thursday, and incarcerated in the parish prison.—New Orleans Times.

OBITUARIES.

JOHN D. HAYES died December 9, 1868, of disease of the throat, aged thirty-five years, seven months and six days.

He was a kind son, a warm and generous friend, an indulgent and devoted brother, possessed by nature with great energy and a strong will. There may be some numbered among the acquaintances of the deceased who think of him only as when clothed with the garb of humanity. We would remind such that earth is not our resting place.

To those of his friends who retain a pleasing recollection of his manly and chivalrous deeds, his warm and generous friendship, we would say, let us look above to that bright realm, and with patience await the time when we shall be reunited, in a land where suffering and parting are unknown, sainted, while we tarry, with a holy confidence in the bright assurance he gave that Christ is an all-sufficient Saviour.

Horace Greeley on Political Economy.

GREELEY'S HISTORY OF THE WAR.

MR. GREELEY purposes to write, during the year 1869, an elementary work on Political Economy, wherein the policy of Protection to Home Industry will be explained and vindicated. This work will first be given to the public through successive issues of the NEW YORK TRIBUNE, and will appear in all its editions—Daily, Semi-Weekly and Weekly. The work will contain the best results of the observations and study of a lifetime, and, as the question of Protection to American Industry concerns our entire people, it will be looked for with great interest. In addition to this work by Mr. Greeley, the TRIBUNE has engaged George Geddes, one of the best and most successful farmers in the country, and other able writers on Agricultural subjects, to write regularly for its columns. The American Institute Farmers' Club will continue to be reported in the SEMI-WEEKLY and WEEKLY TRIBUNE. No farmer who desires to till the soil with profit, and to know the progress constantly made in the science of his calling, can afford to neglect the advantages of a newspaper like the WEEKLY TRIBUNE, especially when it unites with agriculture other features of interest and profit. The WEEKLY TRIBUNE contains a summary of all that appears in the Daily and Semi-Weekly editions, while in addition it is made to address itself to the wants of the great farming class. Reviews of new publications, and of what is new in music and the fine arts; letters from different parts of the world—some of them of rare interest to the farmer, as showing the progress of agriculture in other countries; editorial essays on all topics of home and foreign interest, together with full and carefully printed reports of the markets, will be furnished from week to week, and at a lower price than that of any other newspaper in America. By pursuing this policy the WEEKLY TRIBUNE has attained its present commanding influence and circulation, and we enter upon the new year with an assurance to our readers that no pains and no expense will be spared to give it still greater usefulness and power, and to make it a yet more welcome visitor to every fireside in the land.

GREELEY'S HISTORY OF THE WAR.

The TRIBUNE also proposes to send "The American Conflict," by Horace Greeley, in two volumes of 648 and 782 pages respectively, to clubs, on terms stated below. This history has received from all quarters the highest commendations for accuracy of statement and fullness of detail. It is substantially bound, and must be deemed a valuable addition to any library. These volumes should be placed in every School District library in the land, and each school contains scholars who can, with a few hours of attention, raise a Tribune Club and secure the history. Almost any one who wishes can now obtain it by giving a few hours to procuring subscriptions for the TRIBUNE among his friends and neighbors, and we hope many will be incited to do so. The work will be promptly forwarded, prepaid, by express or by mail, on receipt of the required subscriptions.

GET THE BEST ORGANS

At Prices of Inferior Work.

THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN COMPANY

Respectfully announce that they have adopted and will rigidly adhere to the policy of printing in their price lists and circulars their very lowest prices, which are therefore alike to all, and subject to no discount. This system secures every purchaser against an exorbitant price, and saves necessity for bartering.

They solicit comparison of the prices in their new catalogue (just issued) with those of inferior organs; with careful examination and comparison of capacity, quality and workmanship of different instruments. The Company's perfected machinery, accumulated facilities and experienced workmen, together with the important improvements patented and controlled by them, enable them to produce the best work at the greatest economy of cost, and consequently to offer their well-known Organs, winners of the Paris Exposition Medal and seventy-five other first premiums, which are acknowledged standard of excellence in their department, at prices as low or even less than those demanded for inferior organs.

The following are examples of our reduced scale of prices:

Four-octave Organ, solid black walnut case, (style No. 1,) price,	$50 00
Five-octave Double Reed Organ, five stops, with Tremulant. Solid black walnut case, carved and panelled (style C.) Price,	125 00
Five octave Double Reed Cabinet Organ, five stops, with the new Mason & Hamlin Improved Vox Humana, which excels every other attachment of this class in the beauty and variety of its effects, the ease with which it is used, and its freedom from liability to get out of order. Solid walnut case, carved and panelled (new style, No. 21.) This is the finest Organ of its size and capacity which can be made. Price,	470 00

Many other styles at proportionate prices. A new illustrated catalogue of styles and price list; also circular, with illustrated descriptions of improvements introduced by the Company this season, will be sent free to any applicant. THE CHILD'S CORNER.

SNOW.

BY LUELLA CLARK.

Out of the wladow, little May
Looks on a drear December day,
Watching the snow flakes dropping down
Over the busy, smoky town;
Watches them falling, soft and slow,
Over the dusty pavement below—
Over the quickly-passing people,
Gateway and tower and lonely steeple;
Over the chimneys black and grim;
She looks to the sky, so cloudy and dim,
Wondering where is the strange, for height
Whence come these frosty flakes of light.
Fall they from the moon or distant star?
From limitless fields of azure afar?
Are they the ghosts of vanished flowers—
Lilies and roses of summer bowers,
Crocuses starry and jonquils sweet?
Do they, at last, as phantoms meet,
Wandering lost in the upper air,
Drifting downward white and fair,
Seeking their old-time haunts below,
Blossoming new in beautiful snow?

Whence it may come, and what it may be,
When the soft-falling snow we see,
Let us be sure 'tis a gift from Him
Who, whether the sky be cloudless or dim,
Thinks of us kindly, and for that reason
Sendeth the seedtime and rain in their season,
Sendeth the flowers and the fruits in their time,
The peerless-pure snow and the gray-bearded rime.
Good, good are His gifts, and most blessed His will—
Let love rule our deeds while that will we fulfill.

THE INDIAN CHIEF.

Judge W——, who was one of the earliest settlers in the western part of New York, established himself at Whitestown, about four miles from Utica; the whole country around him being at that time an unbroken forest, inhabited by savage tribes, who had been for ages the sole possessors of the soil.

Judge W——, feeling how much he was at their mercy in his lonely position, was anxious to keep on good terms with them, and secure their good will in return. Many of the chiefs, hearing of his friendly disposition, had been to visit him, carrying presents in acknowledgment of the gifts he had sent them; but he was much troubled that one old chief of the Senaca tribe, possessing great influence among his people, had never either visited him or sent him any sign of welcome since his settlement in that region. After long consideration, the judge resolved to seek an interview with the sachem in his own wigwam, and by this mark of attention secure his friendship, on which, perhaps, his safety might depend. His family consisted of a widowed daughter and her only child, a fine boy of four years of age; so taking them with him, he set off to pay a visit to the old chief. He found him seated at the door of his tent, enjoying the balmy air of a fine summer morning, and was received by him with grave courtesy and kindness.

Judge W—— presented his daughter and her little son to the aged chief, and desirous to make a favorable impression on him, said they had come to live in his country; that they were anxious to dwell on terms of amity and good fellowship with the Indians, and be useful to them by introducing among them the arts of civilization. The chief listened to his words, and then said:

"Brother, you ask much and promise much; what pledge can you give of your faith?"

"The honor of a man who never knew deception," was the reply.

"The white man's word may be good to the white man, yet it is but wind when spoken to the Indian," said the sachem.

"I put my life in your hands by coming hither," said the judge; "is not this an evidence of my good intentions? I have placed my confidence in the Indian, and I will not believe that he will abuse or betray the trust I have reposed in him."

"So much is well," replied the chief; "the Indian repays confidence with confidence; if you will trust him, he will trust you. But I must have a pledge. Leave this boy with me in my wigwam, and I will bring him back to you in three days with my answer."

If an arrow had pierced the bosom of the mother she could not have felt a sharper pang than that which the Indian's proposal caused her. She flew toward her boy, who stood beside the sachem, looking into his face with pleased and innocent wonder, and snatching him in her arms, would have rushed away with him. A gloomy frown overspread the sachem's brow and he remained silent. But Judge W—— knew that perhaps the very lives of himself and family depended upon the action of that moment, and following his daughter as she was retreating with her child into the forest, he said hastily:

"Stay, stay, my daughter; bring back the boy, I beseech you. I would not risk a hair of his head, for he is not more dear to you than to me—but my child, he must remain with the chief; God will watch over him, and he will be as safe in the sachem's wigwam as in your arms beneath our own roof."

She yielded, and her darling boy was left; but who can describe the agony of the mother during the ensuing days. Every night she awoke from her sleep, seeming to hear the screams of her child calling upon its mother for help. How slowly and drearily passed the hours! But at last the third day came. The morning waned away, and the afternoon far advanced, yet the sachem came not. There was a gloom over the whole house, and the mother, pale and silent, walked her room in despair. Judge W——, filled with anxious doubts and fears, went every moment to the door, looking through the opening in the forest toward the sachem's abode.

At last, just as the rays of the setting sun were thrown upon the tops of the tall trees around, the eagle feathers of the chieftain were seen dancing above the bushes in the distance. He advanced rapidly, and the little boy was at his side. He was gayly attired as a young chief, his feet dressed in the moccasins, a fine beaver skin thrown over his shoulders, and eagles' feathers stuck in his hair. He was in joyous spirits, and so proud of his honors that he seemed two inches taller than before. He was soon clasped in his mother's arms, and in that brief moment of joy she seemed to pass from death to life.

"The white man has conquered," said the sachem; "hereafter let us be friends. You have trusted the Indian; he will repay you with confidence and friendship."

He was true to his word, and Judge W—— lived many years, laying there the foundation of that flourishing and prosperous community, which has now spread over a wide extent of country.—United Presbyterian.

FARM AND GARDEN.

THE NEXT PLANTING SEASON.

The planters of Alabama are in a better condition than they were at the beginning of any previous year since the war; and this in the face of an adverse season and short crops.

Have they inquired why this is so?

The question is worthy of their most serious consideration before they make their final arrangements for the next season.

It was estimated that in the season of 1867, $6,000,000 were paid by the planters of the counties in this part of the State alone to the farmers of the Northwest for corn, meat, lard and flour—at least two-thirds of the entire value of the cotton grown in the same counties.

Nor was this direct money drain, this throwing away of the profits of the cotton growing, the only effect of the previous policy of our people of making all cotton and no corn.

The cotton crop of 1867 was mortgaged for the bread and meal and corn used in producing it, and, under these mortgages, was in great part forced into market at from ten to twelve and fifteen cents a pound, when, but for these obligations, made necessary by our dependence on other sections for plantation supplies, it would have been held for twenty-five cents, and the difference would have been that between a handsome profit and a heavy loss.

These facts are known to every planter; and if a single one of that class is foolish enough, in the face of them, to hereafter neglect corn and meat, he will deserve bankruptcy.

Cotton now commands a remunerative price. The planters' balances are on the right side. They have money in their pockets and are not in debt to commission merchants or money lenders. They are independent for this year, at least. If they shall not be independent next year, the fault will be their own.

The danger is that the present high price of cotton will tempt planters to neglect corn. They may conclude that with cotton at twenty-five cents a pound and corn at $1 a bushel, it will pay better to raise the former and buy the latter; but we beg them to remember their past experience—cotton ten cents, corn $2 50, crops mortgaged, forced sales, heavy losses; and they may be sure that a neglect of corn will be followed by these consequences, just as surely as effect follows cause.

But, while unthinking, unreasoning planters will plant more cotton and less corn this year than they did last, we believe the more thoughtful will reverse this. Last year cotton was ten cents a pound net, and the more intelligent planters increased the area of their cotton fields, just as shrewd speculators buy as the bottom has been reached. They believed that the mass of the planters would put in less cotton and more corn, and therefore that the cotton crop would be shorter and the price better, and the corn crop larger and the price less.—They reasoned well. And by the same process of reasoning, they will now reach the conclusion that it is wise to reverse their action of a year ago. Cotton brings now a remunerative price, and therefore the unthinking will plant more cotton and less corn, and next fall cotton growers will have short profits, if they escape losses, and well filled corn cribs will bring the money.

We do not believe there was ever, before the war even, as much surplus money in Alabama as there will be when the crop of last year shall have been entirely disposed of. In fact, before the abolition of slavery there was never any surplus in the State. Every dollar made and not spent at Northern watering places or paid for luxuries of Northern production, was invested in negroes, that more cotton might be made and more negroes bought, and so on in an unending cycle. The cotton crop of last year will bring nearly as much money to Alabama as did that of 1859; and as no negroes can now be bought, every dollar, after paying the expenses of the year, is a real surplus in the pockets of the planter, to be used in beautifying and adorning his home, in increasing his business, in manufactures or internal improvements, or hoarded, as he will.

For the present, this vast surplus is hoarded, for those in whose hands it is do not know what to do with it themselves, and are afraid of the securities borrowers can offer; but this will only be for a time. After a while, planters will either invest their surplus money, or lend it to those who will use it in manufactures, railroads or other profitable and legitimate business; and this employment of the accumulating capital of the country will increase the population, build up towns, develope new sources of wealth, and directly and indirectly benefit every citizen engaged in any honest pursuit.—Selma Times

Important to Cotton Planters.

THE COTTON WORM.

This scourge seems to increase from year to year. It is expected with the regularity of the season. Its early appearance in considerable numbers is fatal to the crop. Its appearance at any time cuts short, to a greater or less extent, the crop. A thousand methods have been devised for protection against it. So far, everything done to prevent its appearance or to check its ravages has been in vain. There is danger that in a few years it will destroy the cultivation of cotton altogether.

A few weeks ago we published a statement from a Texas paper that the egg was deposited in the stalk of the plant, where it remained until the proper season, protected against its enemies, then to appear upon its mission of destruction, and that to gather up closely and burn the dry stalks in the fall and winter would necessarily destroy them.

We saw, some days ago, in the counting room of Messrs. Harder & Robinson, proof of the correctness of this theory. There were the dry stalks. On the surface was the scar left when the eggs were deposited. Inside, in the pith of the stalks, were the eggs in some places and in others worms had already emerged from the egg, and were feeding upon the soft part of the stalk surrounding them.

We presume any planter can have abundant proof of the theory in question. He has only to look for it in the stalk in his cotton field.

This matter appears to us worthy of attention. If the egg is deposited in the stalk and thus preserved and warmed into life and sustained through the winter, fire is the remedy beyond question.—Selma Times.

In connection with this important matter, and as well worthy the attention of planters, we mention a discovery made by A. Hopkins, Esq., of this city. Hearing of the circumstances mentioned above, he instituted a close examination of a large number of cotton stalks on his plantation, but found neither eggs nor worms. Bethinking him that possibly the small bolls remaining on the stalks might disclose the presence of eggs or worms, he commenced examining them. And he was right, for on opening a number he found worms, some killed by the frost and some alive. They were found in the bolls, in which the cotton was black. Mr. Hopkins pronounces them the genuine caterpillar. This is a discovery well worth considering, for it may solve the reason of the regular appearance of the caterpillar for the last five or six years. Let our planters examine for themselves, and they will find no doubt that the old bolls in their fields contain the next year's crop of worms. The only remedy is fire. It is a job, and a large one, of course, to burn the stalks, but better that than leave the cotton to be eaten up by the worms.—Tallahassee Floridian.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE CONSUMPTION OF SUGAR.

Our name sugar is probably derived from the Bengaleo word shukkur, a term by which it is still known in India. Although Europe did not possess this agreeable condiment to any extent anterior to the discovery of the West Indies, the Chinese were acquainted with the process of manufacturing it from the sugar cane above two thousand years ago. In small quantities Chinese sugar found its way into ancient Europe, where it was valued as a medicine. It is not certain at what time the plant was brought into the Western countries, nor by whom the acquisition was made, but we find that early in the tenth century the cane was cultivated in Persia, whence it was undoubtedly carried into Messopotamia, thence to Syria, and by the Saracens introduced into Egypt, Sicily and Spain. Sugar cane is commonly supposed to be indigenous to America, yet it has never been found growing wild on this continent. More probably it was not a native of the New World, but was early introduced by the Portugese discoverers, who perceived that the climate of this country was peculiarly adapted for its culture, and in time it became so flourishing that sugar was reshipped as a supply for England and France.

The consumption of sugar now varies very much in different countries, and also fluctuates very much with the rise and fall of prices. In 1860, in Great Britain, the average consumption of sugar was thirty-four pounds for each inhabitant.—The use of sugar in England was probably much above that average, or that of Scotland and Ireland must have increased very rapidly, because we find that in 1856 the consumption of England was thirty-four pounds, Scotland twenty-one pounds, and Ireland eight and a half pounds—or about twenty-eight pounds average for Great Britain. Sugar is not much used in France, the average consumption for each inhabitant being only eleven and one third pounds—exactly one-third of the average of Great Britain.—In Belgium, though coffee is usually drunk without sweetening, twenty-one pounds of that sugar is disposed of yearly for each inhabitant. Germans generally either do not care for sweets, or are too poor to buy much of them, as the German States generally only average seven and one-third pounds for each inhabitant. Among the peasantry of Russia sugar must be an unknown luxury, or at least its use by the people must be confined to holy days and festivals, for the consumption per head is but two pounds a year.—Next to the British, the people of the United States use more sugar than any other nation in the world; and if the consumption of molasses and sirup were added to that of sugar in the respective countries, it would be found that the free use of saccharine food was far greater among us than with our transatlantic friends. In 1864 we consumed 32,582,000 gallons of foreign and domestic cane molasses, 20,000,000 gallons of sugar refinery sirups, 9,000 000 gallons of maple sirups, and 16,000,000 gallons of sorghum. In all, our consumption, therefore, amounted to 73,582,000 gallons, or fully two and a half gallons for every man, woman and child in the United States. This amount looks less extraordinary when we find that the consumption of sugar in that year had declined to twenty-one pounds per head. On the other hand, it must be remembered that of both sugar and syrup there was an absolute dearth in the South, the greatest sugar State not producing nearly enough for her own wants, and the reduced consumption must be ascribed quite as much to the non-cultivation of the sugar plantations of Louisiana as to the high prices limiting its use in Northern families. The great demand for sirups, however, has been maintained since the close of the war, and is likely to continue. The quantity of sugar used in the United States in 1864 was only 280,500 tons, but in the following year it had risen to 412,000 tons, or forty-seven per cent. increase for twelve months; and yet the consumption of foreign and domestic molasses, and refinery and maple sirups was as much in 1865 as in the preceding year, and the yield of the sorghum plant had increased from 16,000,000 to 25,000,000 gallons. If the use of sweets is any sign of refinement, cultivation or abundance of the necessaries and luxuries of life, these statistics show the United States to be as far ahead of the most advanced nations of Europe, as England is ahead of France, Germany and Ireland.—Scientific American.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.
ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or self as a member, shall pay into the Treasury membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$5
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of.....$
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of.....$
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of.....$

which payment constitutes him or her a member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on any policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA COLLEGE,

AUBURN, ALABAMA.

The Spring Session will begin on the 20th of January, and close on the 14th of July, 1869.

The educational facilities here furnished to students are equal to those of the best colleges in the country. Young men may take a regular or partial course, but will be required to have at least three studies.

Auburn is situated directly on the Montgomery and West Point Railroad. Its health and social advantages cannot be surpassed.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, Spring session,	$48.00
Tuition, Fall session,	32.00

Board in private families, from $15 to $20 per month.

Students in indigent circumstances, by applying as such, will be required to pay in advance only half the price of tuition, and by messing they may greatly reduce the expense of board.

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL

Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J H Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwartz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of Instrument, $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,
sl p5 tf President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT

Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $360.

PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all surpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. Meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at private family.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social dissipation. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has shown a fair degree of animation since our last issue, but by no means as much activity in the wholesale trade as might reasonably be expected at this period of the year, and from the satisfactory prices realized by planters for their principal crops. Sugar and molasses have been in active demand, and the receipts have met a ready sale from the landing at full prices. The principal feature in Western produce is a more active movement in corn, the receipts on Sunday and Monday having been to a fair extent, and meeting a ready sale from the levee at satisfactory prices. This is the first time for several weeks that the West has sent us a sufficient amount to bring out buyers for export. We hope it will now go to work in earnest and send forward whatever surplus it has for sale. Western dealers should consider that New Orleans is not a mere retail market, which can be supplied by such insignificant shipments as they have made us this season; but that we are prepared to take all they can offer, should it be even tenfold more than they have hitherto forwarded. There has been talk enough about this grain trade, and we hope that the parties interested at the West will now go to work. The movement in other departments of Western produce has been confined to the usual jobbing business.

The weather has been clear and cool.

The river has risen one foot six inches since our last report, and is now four feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 15th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	12530
Lake.....	15
Arkansas.....	955
Mobile.....	164
Texas.....	183
Total.....	13876

On Saturday the movement commenced with the prospect of sales to a fair extent, but discouraging telegrams from New York soon checked the demand, and for the rest of the day prices ruled in favor of buyers, without exhibiting a quotable decline, while the entire transactions summed up only 3,000 bales. On Monday still later and more unfavorable accounts from both Liverpool and New York increased the previous depression and but very few buyers coming forward, factors were compelled to make liberal concessions in order to realize, variously giving way ¼c., ½c., ¾c. and 1c. per pound; but even these reductions failed to stimulate the demand, and the business was confined to 1,700 bales, prices closing so unsettled that quotations were to a great extent nominal at a net reduction of ½ to ¾c. On Tuesday the market opened with a very limited inquiry and continued dull and drooping throughout the day, while factors were unable to realize unless by making further concessions of ¼c. and in some cases of ½c. per pound. The sales comprised 2,100 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 6,800 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 504,554 bales, against 303,703 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 115,710 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 44,490 bales to France, of 6,642 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 54,183 to Great Britain.

Sugar.—The demand has continued good since our last review, and the supplies have again brought fuller prices. On Saturday and Monday 1,500 hogsheads, all the receipts, sold at 8½ to 9¼c. per pound for inferior; 10¼ to 10¾c. for common; 11 to 12c. for fair; 12¼ to 12½c. for fully fair; 12¾ to 13c. for prime; 13¼ to 13½c. for choice; 11 to 14½c. for seconds; 14 to 14¾c. for yellow clarified, and 15 to 15¾c. for white. On Tuesday the demand was very good.

Molasses.—The demand has been good.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

To the Members of the Montgomery Conference.

Dear Brethren: In behalf of the Committee on Bible Cause, I beg leave to call your attention to a resolution contained in the report of said committee, and adopted by you, requiring each pastor, immediately on his arrival at his new field of labor, to ascertain all the destitution of the people in regard to the Scriptures, and report the number of destitute families to your next session.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

ORGAN OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH FOR THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES

VOLUME XV.—NUMBER 2.
WHOLE NUMBER..... 716.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JANUARY 30, 1869.

$3 00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.
OFFICE—112 CAMP STREET.

MISSISSIPPI COLORED CONFERE.

UNION CHURCH, MISS., Jan. 13, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: The Mississippi Colored Conference has just closed a very interesting session. I have been requested to ask the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to publish the proceedings, which I enclose to you. After the close of the session Bishop Kavanaugh was taken very sick. I left him on Monday, at noon, very much improved.

I am, your's in Christ,

JOHN B. BOWEN.

The first session of the Mississippi Colored Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South met according to appointment, at the Methodist church, in the town of Hazlehurst, Mississippi, on Thursday morning, at ten o'clock, January 7, 1869, Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh in the chair, who opened the Conference by reading the Scripture, singing and prayer.

Rev. John B. Bowen was nominated and elected secretary.

The following members were present: Rev. Thomas Taylor, superintendent of the colored work, Rev. John B. Bowen, John D. Willis, R. G. Armstrong, Stephen Johnson, Joseph Carr and William Price.

Brother Taylor addressed the Conference briefly in regard to organizing the Conference. Brothers Bowen and Johnson responded, reporting quite a number of preachers who were expected to be present at the Conference—other preachers, who addressed the Conference, giving information from different parts of the territory.

Rev. Dr. John W. Stannon, agent of the Southwestern Bible Society, announced to the Conference that he would furnish Bibles and Testaments to colored Sunday schools gratuitously, and Bibles at half price.

On motion a court of three was appointed, consisting of Brothers J. Bowen, S. Johnson and Wm. Price, examine into and report upon the qualification of applicants for membership into the Conference.

Afternoon session opened by Rev. Jones with religious services.

William Hall, a lay delegate from Fayette district, was introduced to the Conference.

Brothers J. Carr and William B. Hines were appointed a committee on public worship.

Conference fixed the hour of nine o'clock A. M. for meeting, and one o'clock P. M. for adjournment.

On motion Conference adjourned with the benediction.

JANUARY 8, 1869.

Conference met at nine o'clock. Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair. Religious service by Rev. G. C. Armstrong.

The minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved.

It was moved and seconded that the Conference be styled The Mississippi Colored Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The name of Frank Ambrose, in the Yazoo district, was presented as an ordained deacon for admission into full connection in Conference, and elected.

Resolutions one, two and three, offered by S. Johnson, were adopted:

Resolved, That applicants, who are obtained and recommended as suitable persons to travel and preach the Gospel, be admitted to full membership.

Resolved, That all applicants, who shall be elected to orders at this Conference, be admitted to full membership.

Resolved, That applicants, who are ordained and come well recommended, be received on trial, whether present or absent.

Question 2 was taken up—Who are admitted into full connection? Answer. From the Yazoo district: Frank Ambrose, an ordained deacon; Ruben Pope, an ordained deacon; Samuel Harris, an ordained deacon; John W. Dunn, an ordained deacon. Brandon district: Robert Coleman, an ordained deacon.

Question 1—Who are admitted on trial? Answer. From the Yazoo district: Daniel McGaw, Handy Murdock, Bartley Wilson and Bartley Turner.

Question 2—Who are admitted on trial and elected to deacon's orders? Answer. Brookhaven district: Frank Funchess, elected to deacon's orders and to membership. Brandon district: John H. Hollis, elected to deacon's orders and to membership; Isaac Martin, elected to deacon's orders and to membership. Brother Geo. Howard was introduced to the Conference as a lay delegate, and took his seat. Yazoo district: Isaac Warren, elected to membership; Charles Lewis, a deacon, admitted.

Brother Taylor offered the following:

Resolved, That the Conference unite and co-operate with the Kentucky and Memphis Colored Conferences in the publication of a religious newspaper, devoted to the interest of the colored people, at some central point.

Resolved, That a Conference missionary society be organized.

Resolved, That Brother L. R. Redding be appointed a committee on the constitution of a Conference missionary society.

Brothers Pearce and Hollis were added to the committee.

Resolved, That it is proposed, on the part of this Conference and others that may be and have been organized, to aid in raising a school of high grade for colored people.

Resolved, That the Conference request the bishops, at their next annual meeting, to indicate a course of study for the colored Conferences.

Brother J. D. Johnson and William T. Pearce came and took their seats.

Question 2—Who are admitted into full connection? Answer: Brookhaven district: Launon Carlisle, elected to membership and to deacon's orders; A. J. Thompson, elected to membership and to deacon's orders; Harry Hargraves, elected to membership and to deacon's orders; John Dorsey, elected to membership and to deacon's orders; Lewis Hays, elected to membership and to deacon's orders; Isaac Brown, elected to membership and to deacon's orders; Geo. Hennington, admitted on trial; David Funchess, admitted on trial; Robert Amacker, admitted on trial; Frederick Newell, admitted on trial; Isham Burwell, admitted on trial; Charles Thigpen, admitted on trial; James McNeil, admitted on trial.

Conference adjourned with benediction.

JANUARY 9, 1869.

Conference met at nine o'clock A. M. Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair. Religious service by L. R. Redding.

A communication from Rev. W. W. Drake, presiding elder of the Greenville district, was read. He reports the religious interests of the church in his district. He also presented the names of the preachers: Charles Lewis and Henry Garner, (the former ordained by Bishop Paine, in Natchez, 1867,) who ask for work in the bounds of their district.

Report of committee on the constitution of missionary society was read and adopted.

Resolved, That this Conference proceed at once to the organization of a missionary society.

For this purpose Conference resolved itself into a missionary society. Constitution signed, and the following officers and managers elected: W. B. Hines, president; J. H. Stokes, vice president; John Dorsey, vice president; Frank Ambrose, vice president; Robert Amacker, vice president; John B. Bowen, secretary and treasurer. Managers: J. Carr, George Thompson and William Hall; and the president, vice presidents and secretary are official members of the board.

Samuel Francis made application for admission on trial. Having been reported by several brethren, his case was laid over. W. T. Pearce was elected to deacon's orders. Certificates of election of Rev. J. D. Cudd and J. D. Johnson to elder's orders, by the Mississippi Conference, read and referred to the bishop.

Chrystal Springs was selected as the place for holding the next Conference.

Resolutions of thanks to the bishop, Elder Taylor and the citizens of Hazlehurst were adopted by a unanimous rising vote:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Conference are due and hereby tendered to Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh, for his kindness and urbanity in attending, organizing and presiding over our Conference; and that we appreciate the self-denial and Christian charity which prompted Elder Taylor in the labor of love among us. In behalf of the colored people of the South we thank him heartily.

Resolved, That we thank the citizens of Hazlehurst for the hospitality they have extended to the members of this body, in receiving and taking care of us during the present session. May God bless and prosper them.

Resolved, That we are under obligations to the members of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, at Hazlehurst, for the use of their houses of worship, and we tender our brethren our hearty thanks for their kindness.

Brothers L. R. Redding, W. B. Hines, J. D. Johnson and W. T. Pearce were made members of this body by a unanimous vote.

Brother Taylor introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee be appointed, to report at our next Conference, to ascertain the number of churches and other property, and value of said property, within the bounds of this Conference—the presiding elders constituting the committee.

Conference adjourned with benediction.

JANUARY 9, 1869.

Conference met at four o'clock P. M. Religious service by J. B. Bowen. On motion, Brother George Hennington was elected to deacon's orders. The Conference granted the presiding elders the privilege to employ Brother Samuel Thomas. A committee of three was appointed to examine the preachers on the first year.

JANUARY 9, 1869.

Conference met at seven o'clock P. M. Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair. A committee was raised for the purpose of collecting money for the publication of the minutes of this Conference, and to purchase a permanent book of record. Amount raised, $12 45. Committee: L. R. Redding, J. B. Bowen and J. D. Johnson.

Conference adjourned with the benediction.

Resolved, That the secretary of this body be instructed to record the minutes of this Conference in permanent form, and that he furnish an abstract of the proceedings and a list of the appointments to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and that he cause the minutes to be published in pamphlet form.

CONSTITUTION OF THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

ARTICLE I.—NAME.

The organization shall be known as the Mississippi Colored Annual Conference Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

ARTICLE II.—ORGANIZATION.

SECTION 1. The officers of the society shall consist of a president, two vice presidents, and a secretary and treasurer, who shall be elected annually, and who shall exercise the prerogatives and perform the duties incident to said offices in similar organizations.

SECTION 2. A board of managers, consisting of not less than five nor more than thirteen, (one-third of whom, at least, shall be laymen,) shall be elected or appointed at the annual meeting, to serve until the next, and who shall perform the duties of boards of managers in similar institutions.

ARTICLE III.

At the assembling of each Annual Conference the board of managers shall make arrangements for an anniversary meeting of the society, to which shall be submitted the annual missionary report, to be read by some suitable person appointed for that purpose. Speakers also shall be appointed by the board, and a collection for missionary purposes taken up.

ARTICLE IV.—MEMBERSHIP.

SECTION 1. Any and every member of the Conference may become a member of the society by subscribing to the constitution, and may remain a member on payment of $1 annually at the annual meeting.

SECTION 2. Any person may become a life member by paying $20 at one time.

ARTICLE V.

The object of this organization is to spread scriptural holiness among the colored people in these lands, and to this end we earnestly invoke the co-operation and assistance of similar associations.

ARTICLE VI.

This constitution may be amended at any annual meeting, by proposition in writing, signed by two members, and adopted by two-thirds of the members present.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The revolutionary news from Cuba, published in the Times some days ago, is partially if not fully confirmed by late telegraphic dispatches from Havana. The insurgent troops, reported as having arrived at Villa Clara, undoubtedly consist of the column under Cespedes, then reported as within ten days' march of that town, where they expected to receive large reinforcements. The return of Balmaseda to Havana still further confirms the growing strength of the rebellion, which will, now that it has reached within striking distance of the railroads, spread with far greater rapidity than heretofore. The disturbances in Havana must have been much more serious than the brief dispatches in relation to them would seem to indicate. The fact that Cabanas and Numero Cuarto were attacked would seem to indicate the existence of a respectably numerous organized force in the field. The soforts line the opposite side of the bay from Havana, and fully command it with their guns. They look almost impregnable from the front, and the reported action was probably brought on by an attempt to surprise or take them from the rear, an attempt which, if successful, would have been fatal to the power of Spain in Cuba.

This blow at the citadel of Spanish power, taken in connection with Dulce's proclamation, the entire suspension of business in the city, the affair at the theater, growing, no doubt, out of the reception of the news that Cespedes had reached Villa Clara, one of the most important strategic points to the insurgents, is exceedingly suggestive. Important events are evidently on the eve of transpiring in Cuba, which, unless present indications are at fault, will materially influence the destiny of the island.—New Orleans Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The President's first State dinner of the season took place at six o'clock this evening. The persons present were the Secretary of State, Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. McCulloch; the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Wells; the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Browning; the Postmaster General and Mrs. Randall; the Attorney General and Mrs. Evarts; Senator Bayard, Senator Buckalew, Senator Davis, Senator Dixon and Mrs. Dixon, Senator Doolittle and Mrs. Doolittle, Senator Henderson and Mrs. Henderson, Senator Hendricks and Mrs. Hendricks, Senator McCreevy, Senator Morton and Mrs. Morton, Senators Ross, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vicker, Whyte and Fowler.

General Grant authorizes the statement that he has not in any way, in conversations or otherwise, made known his preference for the persons to fill his cabinet. He has uniformly indicated that he would take no action on the subject until after he shall receive official notification of his election, which notification cannot reach him for about a month from this date. There is the same authority for saying that General Grant has not intimated an opinion as to what course should be taken by the Senate relative to nominations made by Mr. Johnson, nor what offices should be left in abeyance until after the 4th of March.

Sheridan reports the destruction of sixty Indian lodges at the junction of Salt Fork and Elm Creeks. Three soldiers wounded, one mortally. The number of Indians killed is unknown.

General Hancock was before the Military Committee of the House to-day, and was questioned regarding the new military bill.

A Washington special to the New York Tribune says: General Grant is strongly opposed to the pending Alabama claims treaty. The following is his position, nearly in his own words: The treaty is unjust to the United States, because it assumes to measure the injury inflicted upon this country by the money value of the ships actually destroyed; whereas the chief damage to our commerce was in our ships being driven from the seas by Anglo-rebel pirates.

In addition to this the sympathy extended by the English government to the South prolonged the war at least a year, and for all the lives lost and money expended, for this time, England is directly responsible. The treaty proposes to settle all these things by the payment of the paltry value of a few ships.

The following is the outline of Kellogg's new railroad bill: Be it enacted that for the purpose of providing and operating a connected line of railroad and telegraph from or near the city of New Orleans, on the most eligible route through the States of Louisiana and Texas, to a point on the Rio Grande, at or near Rio Grande city or Roma, in the direction of San Blas, on the Pacific ocean, and to connect at its western terminus with similar lines through Mexico, San Blas, and the city of Mexico, the Central Transit Company of Louisiana, and the central transit companies organized by charters from each State, are hereby authorized to consolidate under the title of the Pacific Central Transit Company, and are granted the right of way through any public lands not otherwise disposed of; with every ten miles of road completed, bonds to the amount of a quarter of a million of dollars, with interest, guaranteed by the United States for thirty years, will issue.

A REVELATION OF CRUELTY.—The Paris correspondent of the London Star writes:

"A curious trial has taken place at Bordeaux. As you are aware, the education of the rising generation is either in the hands of government or in those of the Jesuit fathers. Flogging in public colleges, private schools, or any educational establishment is contrary to law. The reverend fathers of the Order of Jesus direct the Ecole de Tivoli. A lady called to see her son a fortnight since. She was told he was en retraite for bad conduct. Much grieved, the lady went home, to return the next day, when she was refused admittance on a similar plea. A third time the mother returned, but on this occasion accompanied by a friend. The same reply to her inquiries was made as on the preceding occasions. 'I am a magistrate,' remarked the gentleman, 'and in the name of the law I require to see young Segeral.' The argument was unanswerable. They were taken to the infirmary, where the boy, black with bruises, and his back covered with weals, was in bed.

"The trial gives the most curious insight into the methods of persuasion used by the Jesuit fathers. The boy had been imprisoned in a black hole, where was neither seat nor furniture of any kind, except one single utensil; the floor of bitumen. At ten o'clock at night Father Commire entered, cat-o'-nine-tails in hand, and beat the boy till, exasperated with pain, he escaped by the open door to the dormitory; there a couple of gentle fathers caught him, and whilst one held his hand over his mouth to prevent his screams being heard, the other pushed him on a bed further to stifle his cries, whilst Father Commire continued his interrupted avocation—which amusement has cost them twelve pounds, and the loss of that boy, and it is to be hoped of every pupil in their establishment."

WHEN Whately, Archbishop of Dublin, was near his end, 'It is a great mercy,' said a clerical friend who sat beside him, 'it is a great mercy, my lord, that, though your body be weak, your intellect is vigorous still.' 'Don't talk to me any more about my intellect,' cried the dying prelate; 'there is nothing now for me except Christ.'

THE African Methodist Episcopal Church has twenty-eight members in the South Carolina House of Representatives and one in the Senate; in North Carolina, one in the House and two in the Senate; in Florida, thirteen in the House and five in the Senate. The majority of the expelled representatives in Georgia were of the same church.

BLESSING IN DISGUISE.

Mine eyes were stiffened with the last night's tears,
And my brow ached too heavily to weep,
Oppress'd with sorrow past and future fears,
Too weary to awake—too sad to sleep.

With listless hand I drew away the blind
To look where lay the morning dull and gray;
I heard no whisper of the cold night wind,
I saw no gleam to chase the gloom away.

Spread like a morning veil on every hill
Hung cheerless mist, through which the dark dawn crept;
The rain-drops on the trees lay cold and still,
Like tears of one who in his sleep hath wept.

Sadly I turned and laid me down again
Till sorrow's leaden trance my sense did steal,
As those who, lulled by very strength of pain,
Forget their pain awhile and cease to feel.

So passed the hours away, and I awoke;
But while I slept the world had traveled on;
The damp mist rolled away, the morning broke,
And, pouring radiance forth, up rose the sun.

The purple hills were tinged with living light,
The grass was waving in the morning breeze,
Like sparkling gems the rain-drops of the night
In rainbow showers were glittering from the trees.

Then my heart melted too, and the deep gloom
Passed like the dreary morning mist away;
The sun shone warm and bright into my room,
And I rose up from my dull trance to pray.

O God, most merciful! 'tis ever so;
While thankless man feels but the present pain,
And lies steeped in the weariness of woe,
Thy step is drawing near to heal again.

Then teach us, Lord, to bow beneath the rod,
Even for the chastisement to love thee more;
To trust the mercy of the loving God,
And in the very blow His hand adore.

So shall we walk through our life's chequer'd day,
Safe from its noontide heat, its evening blight,
Till the last hour of our gloom shall pass away,
And leave us to awake in endless light.

—Good Words.

Necessities of the Foreign Mission Field

Mr. Editor: For generations the church has been praying that the world might be opened to missionary effort. That prayer has been answered. What will the church now do? Will it arise in its strength, and go up to possess the whole land in its length and breadth, or will it remain at ease, and pray the Lord to carry on the good work, which he has so graciously begun, by converting the heathen without troubling his people to do more than look on and rejoice? While the heathen world was inaccessible—while its gates were locked against us, and we had no power to force them—there seemed to be some excuse for doing little or nothing for its conversion; but now that God has broken down the last barrier, and removed all obstructions out of our way, what will we do? Never before, in the history of the church, has the world been so "white to the harvest" as at the present moment. The time to reap has come, and the church should now thrust in her sickle. To doubt or delay is treason. The crisis is upon her. God of the nations, strengthen thy people! Inspire them with zeal and courage to meet the awful responsibilities of the hour!

Not only have the barriers been removed, and the highways of the nations opened to all, but the improved methods of communication have brought the most distant peoples into neighborship with us. China is practically nearer us now than England was fifty years ago. So soon as the great Pacific railroad is completed New York will be within less than thirty days of Hongkong. Missionaries can now be sent to the most remote regions with much less expense to the church, with less fatigue and danger to themselves, than a few years ago a journey could be made through our Western Territories. God has not only opened "the gates of the world" to his church, but he has brought the "world" to the very threshold of his church.

The time to reap has come.—Hitherto it has been a season of preparation—seed-time. Now the harvest is ripe. "Explorations have been made, centers of influence selected, languages mastered, the Scriptures given to the people in their own tongue, a Christian literature created, a knowledge acquired of the manners and customs of different people, also the peculiarities of climates," etc.; "in short," as one has said, "the skirmish line has done its work; it is time for the grand army to advance and take possession in the name of its great Leader."

"The world is the field." Let us take our stand by the cross on Calvary. Let us look the dying Son of God full in the face, and then look over the world for which he shed his precious blood. What do we see? Eighteen centuries, with their generations of sinning, suffering millions have rolled away since he said, "It is finished," and yet not more than one-fourth of the world acknowledges him as its Redeemer!

There are perhaps eight hundred and fifty millions of souls in the world who either know nothing of Christ or reject him as a Saviour. Among these millions the churches of Protestant Christendom have not three thousand missionaries! There are to-day as many heathen in the world as there were eighteen hundred years ago! There are many more Christians, but the natural increase of the race has kept up with the conversions, and the actual number of the heathen has not been lessened!

These statements are not made merely to create a sensation, but to impress any who may read them with some just notion of the vast work before the church. The millions without the Gospel must be reached. They are now accessible, and the church must be up and doing. Our church, alas! is doing almost nothing in this great work. Only two men to represent us in the whole heathen world! Shame! shame! if this be true another twelve month. Brethren of the ministry, rouse yourselves! You are to blame in this matter. If your people do not give more to foreign missions it is your fault. You do not ask them—you do not instruct them. Some of you never preach on the duty of sending the Gospel to the heathen, or, if you do, there is no point in the sermon—no practical application. The world is reproaching us, and what answer can we make? It is said, "The Southern Methodist Church is doing nothing for foreign missions." If we cannot answer a sneering world, what can we say to the great Master for having neglected our duty to the heathen?

It is said the crops have been good in the South the past year. Some estimate the cotton, sugar, etc., at $800,000,000. Shall the Lord not receive his portion of this bountiful harvest—not the "gleanings," but the "first fruits?" We shall look for large missionary collections this year.

Abingdon, Va., Jan. 13, 1869.

Bishops of the Northern Methodist Church Congratulating Gen. Grant.

General: As our fathers congratulated Washington on his accession to the presidency, so would we congratulate you. Interest, duty and gratitude combined to induce the nation to call you to the chief magistracy. The qualities which you have displayed in the field are those which are specially demanded in the cabinet, and the glory which crowns your arms will, we trust, be succeeded by the higher glory that will crown your counsels. The principles which have triumphed in your election, executed with the calm wisdom and undeviating steadiness which marked your military movements, must result in the restoration of the States to their proper relations, to its proper channels, rights to all citizens, peace to all our borders, and the public credit and the national honor to their proper eminence in all the markets and courts of the world.

The letter is signed by T. A. Morris, E. S. Janes, L. Scott, M. Simpson, E. R. Ames, D. W. Clark, E. Thomson and C. Kingsley.

Dr. Hall's Church, on Fifth avenue, has just contributed $19,000 for home missions. How many a needy church will their gift aid in strengthening its stakes! The church sustains half a dozen missions in the city.

THE APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

Mr. Editor: I propose, with your permission, to place before your readers a suggestion or two that may be useful on the question of apostolic succession, especially to that large class who have no time to read books, or have no access to books treating, in extenso, upon this much written on and much talked of subject.

The first point I wish to make is this: No man has a right to preach, nor is a preacher in the scriptural sense, unless he is called of God. This appears from several considerations. Preachers of the Gospel are called "embassadors for Christ." No man ever assumes the office of an embassador in human governments, and if he did his assumption would be a nullity, and all his acts nullities. So it must be in the divine government. In human governments the embassador appointed by the supreme authority of the government he represents must be a citizen, native or naturalized. No alien, no foreigner, would be appointed. So in the divine government. God saith to the wicked: "What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldst take my covenant in thy mouth?" The sinner cannot be an "embassador of the kingdom of spiritual life," for he is "dead in trespasses and sins." He cannot be a preacher of the "Gospel of reconciliation," for he is "an enemy." He cannot so much as "see the kingdom of God" unless he is "born again—born of the spirit." In human governments none but the supreme authority has the right to appoint a citizen to the office of an embassador. So in the divine government. The apostles are the highest human authority in the church, and they did not presume to arrogate to themselves this peculiar prerogative of God; but when the place from which Judas, by transgression, fell was to be filled, they prayed and said: "Thou, Lord, which knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen; and the lot fell upon Matthias, and he was numbered with the eleven apostles."

Again, preachers of the Gospel are called "ministers" or servants. A servant among men is one that belongs to his master, by purchase for life, or for hire for a stipulated time, and he can only do such work as his master appoints. He may not undertake a labor or department of business different from that to which he has been assigned. So in the divine government. Christians are not their own. They have been bought with a price, even the precious blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. But because servants, they have no right, every one, to be ministers. Some are chosen to one office and some to another—"some pastors and some teachers." No man takes this honor upon himself, but is called of God, as was Aaron.

Let us now proceed to consider what are the qualifications of the ministers of the Gospel, the bishops or elders and deacons. In the First Epistle to Timothy the Holy Ghost saith, through the Apostle Paul: "A bishop must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach; not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre, but patient; not a brawler, not coveteus; one that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil. Moreover, he must have a good report of them which are without, lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil. Likewise must the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre, holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless." If, then, these are qualifications which bishops and deacons must have in order to be bishops and deacons—if they have not these qualifications—then it follows as an inevitable logical sequence that without these qualifications they are not bishops and deacons at all. I know it has been said that an individual may be a bad man in his private character, but in his official character a valid bishop, and all his official acts valid. It has been attempted to bolster up this sophism by instancing the case of a judge, who perhaps may be lewd and profane, but an able judge, and his decisions legal and of binding force. We submit this as unanalogous and not pertinent to the point under consideration. Suppose the law says the judge must be twenty-one years old, must be a citizen, but it is in proof he is not twenty-one, it is in proof that he is not a citizen, but an alien—then, lacking that which the law says he must be in order to be a judge, it is obvious, in contemplation of law, he is no judge at all. If any one claims to be a bishop or a deacon, who lacks these qualifications which the Holy Ghost says he must have in order to be a bishop or a deacon, it is manifest he is not a scriptural bishop at all, and if not scriptural, then, in the Christian system, nothing but a hypocrite and an intruder.

Those who hold to the necessity of an unbroken apostolic succession of ordinations from one bishop to another insist that none but bishops can confer ministerial orders. But if the most authentic history—the same, indeed, that informs us that there have been bishops at all—tells us these bishops, at least multitudes of them, were grossly immoral, then it is in proof that these so-called bishops were never scriptural bishops—that is, not bishops at all. If, then, they were not bishops, but in fact bad men, they had no right to confer ministerial orders, and all they did in this direction was invalid and a nullity. This seems to me to dispose of the high pretensions of these who rest their exclusive right to preach and administer the sacraments of the church upon an unbroken succession of episcopal ordinations. Unless they can prove these men were what the Holy Ghost says they must be in order to be bishops, they cannot, on their line of argument, prove that they have ever been scripturally ordained, or have any ministerial rights at all.

We apprehend that it is no successful reply to the foregoing view to say that the apostle merely means that bishops and deacons then in office and officiating ought to have the moral characteristics designated in the epistles to Timothy and Titus. St. Paul was manifestly giving Timothy, as an evangelist, and his substitute at Ephesus, directions how to proceed in ordaining men to the order of deacons and bishops—what sort of men to choose out of those professing to be called to preach—what qualifications they must have in order to be made deacons and bishops. The deacons, said the apostle, "must be blameless," and have various qualifications which he specifies. He must be proved in the exercise of these, and if he is found faithful he purchases to himself a good degree, and, having the requisite qualifications, made become a bishop. No man lacking these qualifications could have been made a bishop in apostolic times, for the simple reason that he was destitute of that which a bishop must be. If in more modern times men have been ordained bishops who have been destitute of these essential moral qualifications, then they were not scriptural bishops—not bishops at all.

A recent meeting of the Christian Knowledge Society in London was exceedingly turbulent, and has been characterized as "a perfect beer-garden," where some of the clergy acted like "an uneducated mob." The question raised was whether the £2,000 granted to Natal should be administered by the officers of the society or by the Bishop of Capetown, who has been taking measures to consecrate a rival bishop to Colenso. The noisy High Church party, supporting the Bishop of Capetown, were finally beaten by a vote of seven hundred and sixty-five to six hundred and seventy-four.

He who would pass the declining years of his life with honor and comfort, should, when young, consider that he may one day become old, and remember when he is old that he has once been young.

THE VERMILLION COUNTRY.

Opelousas, La., Jan. 12, 1869.

Mr. Editor: "In the Saddle Again" suggests the propriety of my saying something of Vermillionville, for I have only three thousand miles to travel this year in order to fill this station. The vast importance of this especial point is the only consideration that could lead me to do the labor and make the sacrifice involved in filling this work.

I think Vermillionville is destined to be the most important town in southwestern Louisiana. It is in the most fertile high prairie of this entire section, and it is to be the point where the railroad will branch, one line going west and the other north. That this road is to be built very soon there is no doubt, and the citizens of St. Landry are determined to extend the northern line as far as Opelousas as soon as they see the line being constructed west. This railroad, of course, will benefit the whole country, but Vermillionville, being the place of the road's intersection, will be more benefitted than any other point. This being the case, it is of great importance that we be there, ready to invite, encourage and receive the Protestant emigration that will speedily flow to that point. Here let me say to those seeking new homes, that this is the most promising and inviting portion of this Eden, and the sooner you come the better. General Price said, the other day, that "the cars would be running to Vermillionville in six months from the 24th of March." Lands are now cheap, but as soon as it is known that this road is to be built they will advance. Come on! We will serve you with the Gospel to the best of our ability. We need a man with one, two or more thousands of dollars to build up a good high school. It is the best opening I have ever known for a sterling man to do good and make money. Pray that our Father in heaven may, through us, regain this Paradise from its Romish superstitions.

A jeweller in Waldenburg, in Saxony—say the German papers—has Luther's wife's wedding ring under repair. It is worth a good deal to the world in general, besides its value in the eyes of the jeweller's customer. In ancient times it was the custom to engrave a motto or legend on the inside of the circlet. Such inscriptions were called "posies," and Shakspeare is full of allusions to them. Some were mere jingling doggerel; some were pretty enough to deserve remembrance even in these days for their sentiment and neatness. "Love me and leave me not" was a favorite "posy;" so was "Godde above increase oure love." "This little ryngo my heart doth bringe" is another specimen; and yet another is, "Godde alone mayde us two one." The ring which the Saxon jeweller is refurbishing is one of the "posy" sort; but the inscription is in simple Latin prose, and runs thus: "D. Martino Luthero Catherina V Bora, 13 Junii, 1525."

The new bridge proposed between New York and Brooklyn will be the mightiest structure of its kind in the world, and one of the greatest achievements of mechanical science. The two main cables will be suspended from towers which are 263 feet above high tide, being 42 feet higher than Bunker Hill Monument, and lacking but 21 feet of the altitude of Trinity steeple. It will cross East river with a single span of 1,600 feet, and 133 feet above high tide. In its total length, 3,862 feet, it will be surpassed only by the Victoria bridge of Montreal, which is 6,600 feet long, but lies near the water and rests on 24 solid abutments. The span of the Niagara suspension bridge, 821 feet, is but about half that of the Brooklyn bridge. The largest span of the Menai tubular bridge is but 459 feet, and it lacks 220 feet of the length and 27 feet of the height of the East River bridge. The Wheeling bridge over the Ohio, which blew down in 1854, had a span of 1,010 feet. The Common Council of Brooklyn have voted to take $3,000,000 of its stock, and the Council of New York voted last week to subscribe $1,500,000. The whole expense is estimated at $8,000,000 in currency.

LETTER FROM BISHOP MARVIN.

Since Conference I have visited Stockton, San Francisco, San Jose and Colusa, where I have held meetings. Besides this I have preached in Yuba City, Marysville and Knight's Landing; once in each place. I have seen and heard from several of the preachers. The result of my observation is encouraging beyond my hopes. At most of the places I have visited there have been evident manifestations of the presence of God. Everywhere congregations have been good, generally crowded, and a serious interest in the word of God has been apparent. At San Jose five united with the church while I remained, besides one by letter.—The meeting was continued after I left, with what results I have not heard.

Last Sunday I dedicated the new church at Colusa. It is a substantial brick structure, neat and sufficiently commodious, I doubt not, for the wants of the community for several years to come. The congregation was large, a good many of the men having to stand up. I never saw men stand equal to them. There was a baptismal service, a long sermon, the subscription and collection, and the dedication, consuming near three hours, through all of which they stood like statues.

There was a debt of six hundred and thirty-one dollars on the house. Seven hundred and fifty dollars were subscribed on the spot to pay it. The subscription was made with admirable spirit. A generous tone of sentiment pervaded the community, which was truly gratifying. I never witnessed an occasion of the sort that passed off more pleasantly. Best of all, two men joined the church, who I trust will glorify God on earth, and be glorified by him in heaven.

My great desire is to see the church holy. Large accessions to the church will amount to nothing unless they be "of such as shall be saved." The ambition to be a great church is a carnal sentiment. The motive that actuated Wesley was of a very different character. The desire that consumed him was "to spread scriptural holiness over the land." Such ambition would well become an apostle or an angel. I believe most, if not all of the preachers on this coast realize it in some good measure. Yet it behooves us each one to examine himself and see if he is in that close communion with God which fits a man to do his work. We must save ourselves as well as those that hear us. Even St. Paul had apprehensions as to his personal safety. He knew that, even after having preached to others, unless he kept his body under, he would himself become a castaway. But I am persuaded better things of the brethren of these Conferences, even things that accompany salvation. I believe that they fear God and work righteousness, and that God will honor them in the great work of saving souls. But their efficiency will hinge greatly on the spiritual condition of the church. A carnal, prayerless, careless, whisky-drinking church will neutralize the labors of the most efficient ministry on earth. The first thing is to strive to lead the members of the church, one and all, to embrace "the fullness of the blessings of the Gospel of Christ." The example of a holy membership gives to the preacher a solemn and effective emphasis that is irresistible.

Brethren of the church, let me plead with you to leave off everything that can grieve the Holy Spirit and endanger your own souls. Suffer the word of exhortation. If you are not already in the practice of family prayer, begin without delay. Worship God with your household morning and evening. Establish social meetings in your own neighborhood. Do not wait for the preacher to hold all the social meetings. Hold them among yourselves. Even if you feel yourself to be a little awkward, go forward if no one else does, and get your neighbors together for prayer, and then lead them. There ought to be a great many more of these subordinate meetings than the preachers can attend. In the meantime let the preachers do all they can in this way, and encourage the people in the work.

From all I can gather, our beloved church is prosperous beyond all former precedent in the older States. I trust it is not for nothing that we have been chastened. "To the upright there ariseth light in the darkness." God is causing his face to shine upon us. Let us get still nearer to him in holy love. Let us be "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Let us be much in prayer. Our strength is in the Lord our God.

Sometimes I feel my own responsibility to be a crushing weight, under which I am bowed down to the earth. What am I that I should bear this load—"the care of all the churches?" But of late I have been able to lay this burden upon that gracious God who invites me to cast all my cares upon him. I will strive to do all my duty and "leave the event with God." Duty is mine—consequences are with him.

THE DANGER IN GREECE.

The mischief of this Greek affair is, that at first sight everybody concerned appears to be more or less in the right. The Greeks have for months been assisting their insurgent countrymen in Crete, by every means in their power, short of declaring open war against Turkey, and Englishmen cannot wonder at and can hardly blame their conduct. We should most certainly assist any English-speaking race, whom we considered oppressed by a brutal Asiatic Mussulman power, and if that power was so strong as to make war excessively inconvenient, we should assist them with as much secrecy as the national temperament would permit us to maintain. The Greeks—rightly or wrongly—regard the Turks as our forefathers regarded the Spaniards, as enemies of the human race, to be injured and weakened, and, when expedient, slaughtered everywhere, on any excuse, and without any particular legal or international sanction. There was "no peace south of the line" between Spaniards and Englishmen, and outside the embassies there is no peace anywhere between the Greek and the Turk. The Greek thinks himself a Christian and a European, with a capacity for future civilization, and he thinks truly, though he tells lies as readily as his forefathers did when their civilization was the hope of mankind; and he thinks the Turk a dangerous barbarian, who ought to be driven out of Europe, and he thinks truly, though the Turk has received a whitewash of external civilization such as his forefathers would have despised. Unless we blame Cavour for plotting to rescue Tuscany from the German, we cannot blame the Greek for forwarding as many muskets as he can beg, and as much gunpowder as he can get anybody to trust him with on very bad security, into Crete. Still less can we blame the Turk. Crete is his by every law, except the divine one, which prohibits slavery; he knows pretty accurately what is going on, and he has a distinct right, under the public law of Europe, to declare war on Greece and to occupy Athens, if he can. Foreign interference with him is interference simply, for which any State strong enough to run risks would send the interfering embassador his passports. Whether the Sultan has or has not secret assurances from Napoleon, eager to accept the exclusive protectorate resigned by Lord Stanley, or from Austria, anxious to maintain him against the Romans, does not make any difference in his moral right, which is as unmistakable as our right would be were the Americans aiding the Australians to rise in open revolt. If the Sultan, unassisted, has still resolved on war, he is acting a part which the ordinary manliness of sovereigns would have dictated a year ago. We have as little blame for him as for the government of King George.

And, so far as we can see, just as little attaches to the powers who are trying by diplomatic coercion to prevent the outbreak of actual hostilities. It is no business of theirs to prevent Greece from assisting Crete, or Turkey from punishing Greece; but it is their business to provide that Russia shall not assume the protectorate of all Christian subjects of the Sultan, and with it the reversion of Constantinople, the one sovereign geographical position on the globe, the one spot on which a monarchy dangerous to mankind may by possibility be reared. Yet that Russia will assume this attitude, if war breaks out, is as certain as that Russians think baptism essential to salvation. No dispatches forwarded from St. Petersburg, no assurances, however solemn, no financial obstacles, however great, would, in such an event, be sufficient to impede Russian action. If the Turks march into Greece, and begin depopulating, burning and ravishing after their fashion, Russia, from Odessa to Archangel, will rise in a fury, such as even the Romanoffs would be powerless to restrain. The Czar must protect the orthodox faith or lose his throne, and he would protect it at any hazard, and Europe would be once more reduced to its old alternatives, to hold Turkey back while she has a right to advance, to fight Russia, or to let Russia appear the one power in Europe friendly to the enemies of the Sultan, the one power on whose aid, in the last resort, the Christians of Turkey can implicitly rely. Either alternative involves a catastrophe, more especially in the existing situation of Europe, with Prussia watching France, and France menacing Prussia, and England doubtful of her true interest, and Austria wild with fear lest Roumania and Transylvania should come to terms, and every power armed to the teeth, and at once expecting and dreading war. Who can wonder that diplomatists should deem any means, however unusual, justifiable, if only they may prevent the first shot—should menace Turkey, or summon fleets into the harbor of Piræus?

But suppose it does occur—what then? It is more than conceivable, it is perfectly possible—well informed men say it is most probable—that Turkey will not hold back, that the Sultan has reached the limit of patience, and that unless Greece yields, Omar Pasha will march. It is more than probable, it is certain, that if the question is left to the Greeks, they will fight; that they will not cease from assisting Crete, that they, aware of popular Russian feeling, aware of the plots by which the throne of the Sultan is honeycombed, aware of the intense reluctance of Europe to witness any extension of Ottoman power, will risk all in the hope that the general overturn will end at last in the destruction of a foe whom, on good grounds or bad grounds, they hate as priests hate heretics, or heretics priests. What are we to do, then? Up to that point Lord Clarendon's course is clear. He will maintain peace if he can, with as little of committal as he can, but with little or much will, as far as may be, help to keep the peace. It is only when it is clear that peace cannot be kept, that the hour has arrived, that the spark in the magazine is past treading out, that the difficulties of the British government will become serious, very serious, as serious as they have ever been in any crisis of her history. It is nothing less than another Crimean war in which he may be asked to join, a Crimean war, with the old allies, but not with the old foes, a Crimean war, with North Germany as the Czar's possible ally, limiting or baffling the efforts of France at every step. We cannot imagine a prospect more hopelessly disheartening, not only to those who, like ourselves, believe the Ottomans past hope, or help, or regeneration, but to those who, in spite of experience, still cling to them as the one tribe in southeastern Europe with visible capacity to repress.

In that phrase, "a second Crimean war," there lies, as it seems to us, the germs of a sound radical Eastern policy—a policy which will work, as the policy of defending Turkey will no longer do. That policy is to await the inevitable hour when Germany, relieved of her momentary difficulty, will forbid further Russian advance. Let this country determine that under no circumstances will it enter on a second Crimean war, and its course becomes thenceforward, though painful, at least sufficiently clear.—There will then be, should war after all break out between Greece and Turkey, but two practical dangers for Great [illegible] may win the game [illegible] to menace Constantinople, that is, beat or tribute [illegible] is clearly intent on defending Turkey. In that event we can defend Constantinople without defending Turks, and with all Germany for an ally instead of Napoleon. The Germans are just now driven, as it were by force, into an unnatural alliance with the Czars, but they will no more allow Russia to possess herself of the Dardanelles or of the mouths of the Danube than of Berlin or Vienna. Russia will scarcely fight Germany alone, and Germany plus England would be an overmatch for any conceivable continental league, so visible an overmatch that it is difficult to imagine a statesman adventuring the experiment. Or—it is conceivable, though improbable—France may, single-handed, defeat Russia, and claim from the grateful Turks not the remainder of their suzerainty on the south shore of the Mediterranean, a change of no moment to Great Britain, but Egypt, the key of our Indian house. Then, also, the course of Great Britain will be clear, and she will have two allies, the German people intent on working out their unity, and the one armed friend who never fails us, or betrays us, or interferes with us, or asks to share the spoils, the great military monarchy which we remember for one day once a year as the Indian Empire. The explosion has not yet occurred, and when it occurs it may be the duty of all patriotic Englishmen to support the policy in which the cabinet may resolve; but of all statesmen in Europe Lord Clarendon is the one most likely to forget that with the rise of Germany, the alliance of France and England ceased to be indispensable to the security of Constantinople.—London Spectator.

THE ALPINE HUNTER.—An Alpine hunter, ascending Mont Blanc, in passing over the Mer de Glace, lost his hold and slipped into one of those frightful crevasses by which the Sea of Ice is cleft to its foundations. By catching himself, in his swift descent against the points of rocks and projecting spurs of ice, he broke his fall, so that he reached the bottom alive, but only to face death in a more terrible form. On either hand the icy walls rose up to heaven, above which he saw only a strip of blue sky. At his feet trickled a little stream formed from the slowly melting glacier. There was but one possible chance of escape—to follow this rivulet, which might lead to some unknown crevice or passage. In silence and terror he picked his way, down, down the mountain side, till his further advance was stopped by a giant cliff that rose up before him, while the river rolled darkly below. He heard the roaring of the waters which seemed to wait for him. What should he do? Death was beside him and behind him, and, he might fear, before him. There was no time for reflection or delay. He paused but an instant, and plunged into the stream. One minute of breathless suspense—a sense of darkness and coldness, and yet of swift motion, as if he were gliding through the shades below, and then a light began to glimmer faintly in the waters, and the next instant he was amid the green fields, and the flowers, and the summer sunshine of the vale of Chamouny.

So it is when believers die. They come to the bank of the river, and it is cold and dark. Nature shrinks from the fatal plunge. Yet, one chilling moment, and all fear is left behind, and the Christian is amid the fields of the Paradise of God.

WHY CHRISTIANS SLEEP.

The church of Christ has always wasted much of its working power because its members slumbered. The three disciples slept when Jesus prayed in the garden; and they have had imitators in every age. Mr. Spurgeon gives some reasons for this spirit of slumber:

First, we are inclined to slumber from the evil of our nature. This invests our sin with a double guilt. Master, deliver us from the guilt and then from the power of sin. All the while we are thus asleep about divine things, we are wide awake, like the rest of the world, about other things. I have sometimes remarked the way in which men will speak out in the shop most distinctly, and mumble in the prayer meeting. I have sometimes thought I have seen persons who at the sound of a shilling seemed to open their ears and start up, be just as much the opposite way when it came to doing things for Christ—first and foremost for this world, and last for the world to come—toiling like the ants to gain this world's dross, but idle as a butterfly in regard to divine things. And this is so sad, because it proves that it is not want of power to be active, but want of will.

Next, it is very easy to send a man to sleep if you give him the chloroform of bad doctrine. That has sent half our Baptist churches to sleep. They have been taught that man is not responsible to God. They have been taught clear fate, and nothing better; and they have gone to sleep. And who indeed can take a dose of that without slumbering?

Then, the sultry sun of prosperity sends many to sleep. You are prospering too much. God seems to be too favorable to you in providence, and then the soul begins to sleep. Fullness of bread is a strong temptation to a Christian. It has been asserted in High Church papers that our youth, our young men and women, are dissatisfied with our services and system, and they are going to ritualism. I do not believe it. My observation goes to show it is not the case. It is the power of wealth which comes to them. I admire that prayer of Mr. Whitefield's for a young man who had come into possession of a large property, that God would give him grace to persevere under such a trial.

Then in some people it is the intoxication of pride. Get proud of your spiritual condition, and that will soon send you to sleep. In others it is the want of a heart which is at the bottom of everything they do. They never were intense, they never were earnest, and consequently they have such little zeal that that zeal soon [illegible]. This is the age of the enchanted ground. He that can go through this age and not sleep must have something more than mortal about him. God must be with him, keeping him awake. You cannot be long in the soporific air of this particular time without feeling that in spiritual things you grow lax, for it is a lax age—lax in doctrine, lax in principle, lax in morals, lax in everything—and only God can come in and help the pilgrim to keep awake in this enchanted ground.

M. MILLIAT, in France, introduces into the stomach glass tubes of small caliber, connected with a strong battery, and containing the electrodes necessary for producing brilliant galvanic light. Tumors or ulcers in the abdomen can thus be observed through the skin, and the interior lit up as when the feeble light of a candle renders the finger translucent.

Street Sketches in Seville, Spain.

ANDALUSIAN MINSTRELSY AND DANCING.

One of the sights of Seville is the fruit market of the Incarnacion. It is an oblong square, covering more ground than Covent Garden, and, with the exception of one broad stone thoroughfare, dividing it into two halves, and an open paved way running right round it, is completely covered with lofty whitewashed brick sheds, cool and airy, through which you may take a delightful stroll, inhaling fragrant odors, and surrounded by a wealth of color that would exhaust an artist's palette. From the beams and rafters above you hang long strings of onions, their glittering coats of a bright reddish brown, festoons of scarlet and emerald pepper pods, huge cocoanuts in their rhinocerontic outer shells, gourds of all shapes and hues, mighty cucumbers and choice melons in nets, hung up to ripen.

To the right and left of your path are the stalls, small inclosures like cattle pens; in the center of each squats its proprietor, hedged in on all sides by piles of fruit. Great bags of chestnuts are poured out prodigally at his feet; round his head are clustered enormous bunches of grapes, hanging from the woodwork of his stall; pyramids of muskmelons encompass him round about; deep baskets, overflowing with pomegranates, tinted like the falling leaf, yellow and rosy apples, pimento, and delicate, milk-white onions, from the front bulwark of his stronghold; and close behind him, shielded by his body from the raids of adventurous, prowling por dios senores and boys, is a large osier pannier, half filled with soft hay, into which he throws, with a lofty and careless air, the coins you give him in exchange for his tempting commodities. A clumsy pair of scales dangle hard by, in which he weighs the ponderous melons and gleaming onion—the smaller fruits are sold by number; these and the peppers by weight.

Of all the splendid objects displayed in his store, the only ones that fulfill their outward promise are the pomegranates, onions and chestnuts; the rest are fair outside and disappointment within. Those golden grapes, glowing with the hot kiss of the autumn sun, are little but skin and stones, the former being about as thick and tough as a kid glove. Those prodigious melons, dark green, turned up with delicate yellow, are as insipid as weak sugar and water. Those peaches, big as cricket balls, are as hard and ungrateful to the palate; as projectiles in time of war, they might be useful; as comestibles they are naught. Those lordly gilded apples, flecked with pink and crimson bars, are so many gaily clothed globes of pith. Spanish fruit, which, with ever so little care and cultivation, should be, by reason of the soil and climate, some of the finest in the world, is merely a delusion and a snare; it grows in accordance with the fanciful decrees of dame nature run wild, and like many other untended products of this hapless country, hath a seemly exterior, et voila tout.

Lingering along the approaches to the market, and wistfully snuffing the highly-scented heaps lining their road, come companies of patient, ear-twitching donkeys, laden with bags of chestnuts and pimento packed in matting, and carelessly hallooed along by a being who looked a much more ferocious beast than any of his convoy. He wears a short jacket of goat skin, the hair or wool outside, ragged breeches reaching to the middle of his thigh, and kept together by a sash, once red, in which is stuck a murderous snickersnee. His beard mixes with the tawny hair on his naked breast, blackened by the fierce sun; his hand is swathed in a handkerchief brown with grease and dirt; and his feet are protected by toeless sandals, fastened round the ankles with leathern thongs. Beggars afflicted with the most revolting infirmities dog your steps as you saunter through the arcades, and do their best—as indeed they do in every part of Spain—to spoil your appetite. At the rate of a curate to every 100 beggars, Rothschild or Erlanger would, after a short residence in this Peninsula, be reduced to competition with their beneficiaires. Walk once round the Puerta del Sol at Madrid, and you shall be importuned at least three hundred times for alms. Traverse the short distance between the Plaza de la Libertad and the cathedral at Seville, and your heart shall be made sick with more harrowing appeals and awful manifestations of deformity and disease than the experience of a lifetime in England or France could afford you. Besides the genuine unfortunates that possess only too terrible claims to your compassion, there are hundreds of idle vagabonds of either sex whose mendicancy is a blot upon public decency. Many decently dressed and comely girls will solicit alms from you, and if they meet with a refusal, will change their piteous whine to a whisper of infamous import. Men, comfortably clad and bearing themselves like gentlemen, extend their hands haughtily to you as you pass them, and rebuke your niggardliness with a scowl of offended dignity when you utter the shibboleth: "Perdone Usted por Dios, hermano." Of Spain's many curses, surely her beggars are among the very worst.—Seville Correspondence of the London Telegraph.

A CANDIDATE FOR IMPRISONMENT.—A recent London paper has this story among its police reports: "At the Kendal Town Hall, Jonathan Holden, a quaint-looking old man, was charged before Mr. John Whitwell with drunkenness. The following colloquy ensued:

"Magistrate's clerk—Well, what do you say to that, eh?

"Prisoner—Oh, I say the same as you says. I was muzzy; that's true enu'.

"Constable—The prisoner was mortal drunk anyhow, and making a great row, which ——

"Prisoner—No, I wasn't; I only had two glasses of ale. (Addressing the bench—I shall be very glad if you will give me three months, Mr. Whitwell. (Laughter.) You'll do me a great kindness, and if you will I shall be very much obliged. (Loud laughter.)

"Magistrate—Well, we must first see whether you deserve three months.

"Prisoner—Oh, there's no doot o' that. (Laughter.) I want to be locked up anyhow, for I am tired o' wandering about, living on kicks and curses, and sleeping o'nights on door steps and in pig sties.—(Great laughter.)

"Magistrate—I am afraid you ask too much. I cannot give you more than two months.

"Clerk—You can't give so much, as he's not charged with being riotous.

"Prisoner—Oh, yes, you can, Mr. Whitwell; do give me three months; I want three months particular. (Laughter.) I'm vara near starved and hungered to death. They won't ha' me' i' the workhouse; they won't ha' me anywhere. (Much laughter.)

"Magistrate—No, I cannot send you to jail for so long a time as that; the law will not allow me.

"Prisoner—Oh, never mind the law. You can just make a little one as'll do for meself. (Great laughter.) If you don't, I'll go and do something which I'll make you send me for six months, and then I'll be happier nor I've been for many a day. (Much laughter.)

"Magistrate—No, I cannot commit you for more than seven days, and that only subject to your not paying a fine of five shillings.

"Prisoner—Can't pay, so I'll go, I suppose. I'm off. Good by, sir, and God bless you. Only seven days!"

THE TEXAS AND NEW ORLEANS RAILROAD.—We learn from the Houston Telegraph, of the 5th, that General Price and Colonel Price, representatives of the firm of Price, Chouteau & Co., are in that city for the purpose of securing a lease of the Texas end of the Texas and New Orleans Railroad. The Telegraph says:

They dispatched to the Governor of Texas, as the representative of the State interest, that Price, Chouteau & Co. offer to lease the Texas end of the line on the same terms and time as they have already leased the Opelousas end; that they will construct the road at once, taking the whole upon their own hands, subject to all the encumbrances hanging over the road. If litigation is impending and inevitable between the State, the Gentry interest, and the first and second mortgages, Price, Chouteau & Co. are willing that any or all the parties at interest shall, after their legal interests are defined, then consolidate. And they will then negotiate with such parties to admit a perfect and fair consolidation to the extent of their declared and defined interest; said parties, on their part, recognizing the interest of Price, Chouteau & Co., to the extent of actual expenditures upon the work.

This is an extraordinary offer, acting President Governor that ing the Gentry interest, has, by telegraph to Governor Pease, signified his concurrence in this arrangement. The interests of all parties are fully and amply protected in this proposition. Any ring combinations that will thwart, or attempt to thwart, this first vital hope for a Texas connection with New Orleans, will have to render a terrible accountability to the people of this State.

GREAT activity continues to be shown in the preparations for the Papal Ecumenical Council at Rome. Citations have been issued for eight new councillors, one being summoned from America, one from Spain, two from France and four from Germany. An invitation was sent to Dr. Newman, of England, but he has desired to be excused on the ground of his age and bad health.

The proceedings of this Conference we publish at length in this week's paper, and we have printed extra copies of this number, that we might furnish the members of the Conference with its minutes. They will please send for them, and we will forward a copy.

SOUTHERN MANUFACTURES.

We clip the following item:

A NEW ENGLANDER'S OPINION ON SOUTHERN MANUFACTURES.—The Nashville Banner publishes extracts from a letter from Amos A. Lawrence, of Massachusetts, in which that eminent New England manufacturer extols the advantages of the South, particularly Tennessee, for carrying on cotton manufacturing. Mr. Lawrence takes a practical view of the subject, and urges the working of smaller farms and the employment of the extra capital in manufacturing and mining.

We understand that a "Louisiana Cotton Manufacturing Company" has been formed in this city, comprising some of the most solid merchants of New Orleans. All such movements we hail as the beginning of the true prosperity of the South. The success of the Messrs. Wesson, in their factory on the Jackson Railroad, is something to be proud of. They have triumphed over many obstacles and much secret and powerful Northern opposition, and are producing goods at cheaper rates than Eastern mills. These gentlemen have had a strong and well organized New England combination to meet in the New York market. Surely there is not a planter [illegible] would hesitate to give preference to goods made here, if offered at the same rates and of the same quality.

A SPECIAL DISPATCH to the Mobile Register says that Captain F. W. King, of Mobile, has just completed a contract for a section of the Chattanooga Railroad between Mobile and New Orleans. It is strange that we are compelled to get this information from abroad when the contract was made here.—Crescent.

THE Presbyterian knows a church where the choir is paid $2,000, and the contribution to domestic missions does not amount to $100.

ATTENTION TO STRANGERS.

One who has not tried it can scarcely imagine how much is involved in the transition from country to city life. Thousands have perished in making it. Thousands, who might have been saved, have perished for lack of attention and Christian sympathy. The difference between living where we are known by everybody and know everybody, and where we know nobody, is almost as great as that between America and China. There seems to be in the streets of a large city a general getting away from one, as if everybody dreaded conversation, or else a shake and an inquiry that evidently contemplates no answer. Its visiting is equally rapid, hollow and unsatisfactory. As for rolling out the old carriage and driving slowly to a neighbor's, with the prospect of a whole day of rational enjoyment, including dinner, such a thing would only be attempted or thought of by a madman; while friendship and every other genial sentiment of country life appears to have been frozen in the very souls of city people. If to these contrasts we add that further disappointment which a stranger must feel who finds that even in the church the brethren are to each other somewhat as "a heathen man and publican," it completes the chilling process which Christians encounter when first they come to live in New Orleans.

This want of sociability does not of necessity belong to places where men are congregated by the thousand, but it certainly inheres to this place. The causes, in part, are the severe application to business which is necessary during the winter months, the constant motion, in the summer, of a population subject to epidemics, and the difficulty of keeping up with a residence which changes, it may be, with every year. At any rate, so it is; but little attention is paid to those who come to reside among us. A visitor from another State represented to us, the other day, that he had met here with gentlemen members of the church who invited him to their club rooms, to go to the opera, or to take a drink, but not one had invited him to attend preaching, to visit either class or prayer meeting. It is always refreshing to find one bringing with him from the country a desire for enjoying those church social privileges which a city specially presents, for we are glad to say that both class and prayer meetings may be found here well attended. Unfortunately, however, it too frequently happens that the brother who at home is among the most exemplary, when once here feels quite at liberty to see sights and go to places where a city Methodist of ordinary standing would not think of venturing.

It is a great mistake to move to the city and then wander about for a twelve-month before presenting a church letter; the meanwhile going everywhere, and becoming generally unhinged—almost forgetting the duties and obligations of a Methodist. Thousands have in this gradual way turned wholly aside, and have been lost, who might have been saved had they never come into the maelstrom of this pleasure-loving place. And, on the other hand, of those lost some might have been rescued if those of us who live here had been mindful of the Saviour's care for the "stranger." The youth who come here annually, seeking their fortunes, are especially exposed. They are bewildered with the various and new forms that [illegible] and its recreations—and become an easy prey to the designing. The steps are natural—the opera, the drinking saloon, the billiard room, the theater, the card table, and then to the house of the courtesan—"the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death"—steps, alas! often as swift as they are easy of descent. Coming from the quiet of the country and the wholesome restraints of the family, wholly inexperienced in men, what but a miracle can save a youth from associations and habits pregnant with mischief. Yet young men cannot avoid going out into the world. Their poverty impels them, or they seek the knowledge or the practice of a profession which can only be learned in the great marts of commerce. In some instances the risks must be run. The mother, with an instinctively wiser solicitude than his father, sees her boy leaving home to enter upon the conflict of life as if he were going into a battle, and when he disappears down the road she begins the prayer which will continue night and day until he returns in safety. Precious and powerful sympathy! it is all needed. Every prayer at the family altar, and all the prevailing influence of both father and mother with Jacob's God, will be demanded to protect that youth.

But has not God provided some additional safeguard for the innocent? Is there no shelter to be found in the association of holy men and Christian families for these young men? If there is not, we see but little distinctive worth in a church organization. If the church means only that which goes on in a building set apart to worship on a Sabbath day, the music and order and preaching, and the company who support the performance—then is it, indeed, but a poor refuge for the erring or the inexperienced.—This we will not believe. The church of the Saviour is that body of believers who find delight in each other's company, because they each delight in him. They seek after the friends of their Lord, and every man ceases to be a stranger to them the instant they discover that he knows the Master. That cold, excluding nature, common to men, gives way before the warmth of true Christian love, and the welfare of the children of godly parents becomes only less important, with a true Methodist, than that of his own sons and daughters.

To visit and fold, to entertain and assist those who have but just come among us, will doubtless require much time and pains; but, then, what is the use of life? If it will keep the feeble from straying off, if it will attach the strong more firmly to the church of God, this is the very employment offered which it was intended should fit us for heaven. The sublimest word we shall ever hear uttered—if we ever do hear it—will be, "I was an hungry and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger and ye took me in."

NEW CITY CHARTER.

We have had sight of this bill, now before the Legislature.

1. It divides the city into four districts.

2. It puts the entire administration of the affairs of the city in the hands of one mayor and six administrators, to hold office four years, to be elected by the people.

3. Each administrator to be assigned by the mayor to control of a department. Department of Finance includes all receiving and disbursing of moneys—the old treasurer. Department of Commerce controls the building of wharves, levees, city railroads, fire department, etc. Department of Assessments controls the assessment of all property, and all matters pertaining to public education. Department of Improvements controls water works, streets, sidewalks, public buildings, hospitals, drainage, lighting the city, etc. Department of Police seems to have nothing specific to supervise—that being in the hands of the Legislature. Department of Public Accounts audits, issues warrants, etc.

4. Salaries: mayor, $7,500; each administrator, $6,000; city attorney, $6,000; surveyor, $5,000.

5. Four recorders, to be appointed by the Council. Salary, $3,600 each.

6. Each administrator gives a bond of $100,000, to be approved by judge of Second District Court.

7. No administrator to be interested in any contracts, directly or indirectly.

8. All contracts given out to the lowest bidder, at public auction, unless otherwise ordered by the Council.

9. Clerks and subordinates to be recommended by heads of departments, but elected by Council. Council may remove any clerk.

10. Council establishes public schools, and appoints officers and teachers; provides for their organization and distribution.

11. The commissioners of the consolidated debt to be the mayor, the head of Finance, and head of Public Accounts.

12. Salaries of all officers and employees to be exempt from seizure for debt.

13. Qualifications of voters the same as for election of representatives of General Assembly.

The mayor has no vote in Council, excepting in case of a tie. The administrators are divided in two classes, so that one-half will be elected every two years. There are no checks, that we can see, in this system of government, nor can there be any legislation. Executive officers have no time to legislate; but if any, it is in the hands of the administrators. The wisdom of dividing these two functions of government is not recognized by this charter. It consolidates. By it four heads can control all the money and all the affairs of the city.

What time would the head of any department have for the consideration of the affairs of any other department? How much time, for instance, could the administrator of Finance give to the matters pertaining to public schools? None, of course; so that it practically gives to each head absolute control, without legislation of his department.

This is a huge experiment. It implies seven men of great honesty in a community of large confidence.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SERMONS ON THE FAILURE OF PROTESTANTISM AND ON CATHOLICITY. By the Rev. Ferdinand C. Ewer, S. T. D., rector of Christ Church, New York. Appleton & Co. 1869. 12mo, pp. 168.

'Published by request'—as most things are which are specially prepared for publication. This is a ritualistic manifesto of much more than ordinary significance. We notice that it has been distributed widely, and that a good many small fry are already furbishing and flourishing themselves upon the strength of this elaborate tract. The Iberia Journal gave notice, a week since, that a reverend divine in that village would give 'an expose of the doctrine of development and a concise history of Methodism'—'at daily evening prayer'—and also lecture on the 'unity of the church and the grievous evils resulting from the sin of schism,' etc. If the gentleman would give an introductory 'expose' of his Brazilian development, and 'the grievous evils resulting therefrom,' it would not lessen the interest of the course.—This by the way. The Protestant Churchman, the Southern Churchman and other low church authorities, are outraged that such a document should have emanated from an Episcopal clergyman; but it occurs to us that the disclaimer of one or two newspapers, though organs of that church, does not sufficiently meet the fact that such positions and views are held and uttered in undisturbed security by one in good standing as a minister. If Protestant Episcopalians are, indeed, what they profess to be, has not the time fully come to prove it by eliminating from their church these Romish teachers who have discovered themselves while standing at her altars? The Protestant Episcopal Church is no longer one in any true sense of unity; it is already distinguishable into two widely diverging parts—the Protestant Episcopal and the Roman Episcopal. Of this latter part the Rev. Ferdinand C. Ewer is the advanced exponent. Hear him, on page 28: 'As Protestantism is mere incipient rationalism, the first duty of Catholicity is to throttle it.' On page 17 he exclaims: 'Protestantism gives us back our fathers, our children, our husbands, that are lost in the forests of skepticism!' The noticeable difference between 'the church' and the 'Protestant sects' are the 'internal structure of our houses of worship,' the 'three orders of the ministry' and 'the fact that we have no revivals,' etc. The New Testament,' he says, 'is full of warnings against subtle attacks that were to be made in subsequent times upon Christianity'—'of such nature to deceive the very elect. It is our distinct charge that Protestantism is one of the latter class of attacks.' 'Revivals' are his special abhorrence. He cites the testimony of a Presbyterian minister, of Belfast, who 'frankly says' that in Ulster 'the morality of the Presbyterian people has been ruined by the revival.' 'Distinguished revival preachers' 'are now drunkards, thieves and immoral livers'—'one now lying in prison, charged with being concerned in a late cowardly and barbarous murder;' 'since the revival began there has been a large increase in the number of illegitimate children' 'But, then, I do not,' says Mr. Ewer, 'intend to dwell upon the searing effect of Protestant revivals.' We should think it rather too harrowing; but suppose that the church he represents has the least possible amount of this sin to answer for. 'Protestantism should be avoided by every one who loves his brother man and the cause of our blessed Saviour. Its houses of worship should never be entered by the sons and daughters of the church.' We conclude these quotations in the language of the author: 'But enough has been said to show how Protestantism is logically destructive of Christianity; think how it has sapped the foundations of Christianity. * * * It is an awful and most dangerous heresy.'

Yet this divine is the pastor of Christ Church, New York, and in good standing in the Protestant Episcopal Church! Mr. Ewer and Mr. Mackonochie ought to be put in a Franciscan sack and deposited in the Vatican, as fine specimens of the natural outgrowth of those Romanizing germs in the English prayer book. He despairs of Methodism entirely—'Methodism is doomed'—it has 'moved too far down the slope ever to get back.' His idea of the true church is some equidistant point between the Greek, the Roman and the Anglican churches proper. He thinks there is a drawing together of orthodoxy going on, as of heresy. The end of Protestantism will be Unitarianism, and the end of Unitarianism infidelity. We get some clue to the process by which he arrives at this sage conclusion: 'The reaction has always begun in Boston. If you would know which way the storm is going to blow, look at the straws in Boston.' Very profound, all this; but the whole world was once far gone after Arius. Arianism was the most extensive and formidable heresy that ever divided the Christian church. It flourished for three hundred years in the highest places of power, in the East and in the West, and was the religion of vast tracts of Christendom. When Plymouth Rock was a mere pebble, and there was no Episcopal, Presbyterian or Methodist church, or Methodist revivals—long before Henry the Eighth lived, murdered his wives and started his church—'Catholicity' had ended in Arianism.

'The failure of Protestantism to control the masses' is assumed as the starting point of this diatribe of the rector of Christ church.—Protestantism has not failed to control Prussia, Great Britain, the United States; to break the concordat of Austria with the pope and the bolts of the Inquisition in Spain and Italy. She has translated the Scriptures into two hundred of the living languages of earth, and has placed a Bible in every land, in the tongue of the people who inhabit it. She girds the world with her missionary stations, and has led the way in every enterprise for the good of men, from the days of Martin Luther until now. If this be failure, may Protestantism repeat it a thousand times!

GREAT BRITAIN. A record of travel in English-speaking countries during 1866, 1867. By Charles Westworth Dilke. With maps and illustrations. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. 12mo, pp. 561.

This is the very entertaining and instructive narrative of a journey made quite round the world by an Englishman, who was all the while in sound of the English tongue. Beginning in the Atlantic States, he moves out West, via Utah, to the Pacific, thence to China, the East Indies, thence by the overland route to Cairo, France and home. A very neat trip—one which will in ten years be undertaken as readily as we now attempt England and the continent. Everywhere he meets with "Alfred's laws and Chaucer's tongue." The part of the work which most interested us was that descriptive of the missionary fields of Polynesia. For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

JESUS OF NAZARETH. His Life and Teachings, founded on the four Gospels, and illustrated by reference to the manners, customs, religious beliefs and political institutions of his times. By Lyman Abbot. With designs by Doré, De Laroche, Fern and others. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. Small 8vo, pp. 520.

The publishers have made this book everything that one could desire in the way of covers, pressework, etc. It is gotten up magnificently. The engravings are well executed, and the designs are by the best artists. The attempt of Mr. L. Abbot, however, to reproduce the life of Christ with such analysis, comment and suggestion as would enhance that inimitable dramatic presentation of it in the four Gospels, is a failure. We find nothing, absolutely nothing, but page after page of the most common place dissertation, unrelieved by anything new or original. For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

We have a very different result, lying somewhat in the same line of interest, in the SEEKERS AFTER GOD. By the Rev. F. W. Farrar, M. A., F. R. S. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. McMillan & Co., publishers. 1869.

The moral and political condition of the world at the birth of Christ, and the atmosphere in which Christianity "was forced to work," is brought out in this able estimate of the three great philosophers and moralists of that period, Seneca, Marcus Aurelius and Epictitus. All the influences supposed to be involved in the development of the youth of Seneca are finely estimated—the methods of education then in use, and the state of Roman society. The author does not gloss over the character of the tutor and apologist of Nero. While admitting the severe critique, by Lord Macaulay, of a philosopher "whose business it was to declaim in praise of poverty, with two millions sterling out at usury; to meditate epigrammatic conceits about the evils of luxury in gardens which moved the envy of sovereigns; to celebrate the divine beauty of virtue with the same pen which had just before written a defense of the murder of a mother by a son"—still his words, "I accept the terms, I do not shrink from the decision," were courageous and noble, and were justified in the hour of trial. Nothing could surpass the constancy of his death. "The fact is," says the author, "with all his faults he yet lived a nobler and a better life, he had lottier aims, he was braver, more self-denying—nay, even more consistent—than the majority of professing Christians." There is no such balancing of life and theory necessary in the case of the other two great characters, "the best and holiest characters, with the single exception of Socrates, presented to us in the records of antiquity." We would convey to the reader, if possible, the very high admiration which the genius and power of the author has thrown around his brilliant subject. All that language and the richest literary resources can furnish, either from the past or present, he has at command and employs. For sale by James Gresham, No. 92 Camp street.

We have received from the Rev. Robert J. Harp, 112 Camp street:

THE NILE TRIBUTARIES OF ABYSSINIA, AND THE SWORD HUNTERS OF THE HAMRAN ARABS. By Sir Samuel W. Baker, M. A., F. R. G. S. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1868. 12mo, pp. 387.

This work is finely illustrated, and accompanied with maps. It is an account of the explorations which the discoverer of the Albert Lake made while on his way to the sources of the White Nile. He spent a year in Abyssinia, learning the language of the Arabs, by way of preparation, and explored the great confluents of that region. His power of description is the very best, and he has a field of richest focident to paint—hunting the hippopotamus, the lion and the elephant, and the rhinoceros, in company with the greatest hunters of the world, four of whom could bring down the fierce African elephant and the Lybian lion with no other weapon than a sword. To those who have read Mr. Baker's "Albert N'Yanza," it is only necessary to say that this work completes his survey of the Great Basin of the Nile. We shall make several extracts from this narrative of recent scientific exploration.—For young people such a book as this is fully as entrancing as the most sensational novel, and infinitely more instructive. Fathers should have within reach of their boys and girls books of fact, recounting the achievements of explorers and the discoveries of science, gotten up, as these are, in attractive style, and that alone would go far toward correcting the sickly and vicious taste which too many of the young people of this day have for extravagant fiction.

The old folio pulpit Bible, with its original binding and brass mountings, used by old Samuel Wesley during his whole incumbency as rector of Epworth, and by his sons John and Charles, while acting as his curates, is now offered for sale.

MARRIED.

On the 31st of December, in Yazoo county, Mississippi, by the Rev. John W. Jones, Mr. J. C. J. Reynolds and Mrs. Harriet J. Perkins. On the 12th of January, Mr. Joseph A. Turner and Miss Mary S. Rodgers. On the 14th, Mr. John D. Makin and Miss Catharine C. Lyons.

At the bride's residence, in Hazlehurst, Mississippi, on the 20th of January, 1869 by the Rev. E. G. Cook, E. W. Carpenter, Esq., to Miss E Ella Shaffer.

OBITUARIES.

Dr. W. C. Auen was born in the State of New York in 1825, and died at Centerville, in Catahoula parish, Louisiana, October 24, 1868. He emigrated to the South when young, was married to Abbee Morris in 1853, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1854. He was an excellent man. Of a modest, retiring disposition, he did not pass for what he was really worth, except with those who were intimately associated with him. These loved him dearly. He was a good physician and a noble citizen—an ornament to the community in which he lived. As a business man he had by his liberality and fair dealing made a multitude of friends. As a father he was firm and judicious, as a husband just and affectionate. But his crowning virtue was his unflinching adherence to his religion. Christianity was with him no Sunday garment, to be worn or laid aside at pleasure. It was the controlling principle that guided him in everyday life, and made him a light to others. Society has an interest in the life of such a man, and when he dies it sustains a loss—a grievous loss. That divine faith that made him a blessing to society did not fail in his last moments. For him death had no sting. It was a victory—a glorious victory. He left an affectionate wife and seven interesting children. O, Father of the fatherless and friend of the widow, guide, protect and comfort these stricken ones!

E. W. Yancey.

Rebecca Adeline Forsythe, daughter of James M. and Lucinda Baker, was born in Catahoula parish, Louisiana, December 3, 1818; married James Forsythe, Esq., January 8, 1868, and died at the residence of her father, in Catahoula, November 22, 1868.

Sister Forsythe was naturally of a gentle, quiet and amiable disposition, which gained for her the friendship of all who knew her. She lost her mother in infancy. Having been taught, in childhood, by her pious grandmother the necessity of being religious, she became early in life a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and remained faithful to it until death. At a protracted meeting held at Centerville, more than a year before her death, she made a public profession of conversion, and from that time lived in the enjoyment of that happiness known to those only who have the "witness in themselves." In her last illness she was resigned to the will of God, feeling the blessed assurance that she would soon be "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." She leaves behind her a devoted husband and many sorrowing friends and relations, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. Her goodly walk gives evidence to them that "their loss is her eternal gain."

"Hope! 'tis beyond the bounds of time,
When what we now deplore
Shall rise in full, immortal prime,
And bloom to fade no more."

THE BEAUTIES AND MYSTERIES OF NATURE.

The times are pregnant with startling events; old isms, theories and fallacies are fast disappearing beneath the gigantic wheels of progression and human development. Change is written, with the iron finger of time, upon all matter, seen and unseen, material and spiritual. The mighty, omnipotent power that fashioned the stupendous orbs that revolve in the immensity of space, created all things in wisdom and purity. The majestic ocean, the deep blue sea, the beautiful earth and all things therein contained, were planned and created by virtue of that universal law of harmony, whose power holds sway over all. Intelligence is manifested in all created things, both great and small—the tiny insect, the beautiful butterfly, and God like man, are each endowed, according to their kind, with that instinct or intelligence ordained by him who doeth all things well."

Wisdom, justice and love are the three great standard-bearers whose sanctimous hands note out to each individuality the measure of divine, universal law, designed by that mighty mind who fashioned alike noble man in his own image and all lesser created things. The beauties and wonders of nature never cease to the progressive human mind. Eternal progression is written with the unerring finger of Deity upon all. The theme of human life is laden with the sweet incense of all who, like angels of mercy and goodness, are ever busy, ever ready to devise means for the alleviation of human woe and the prolongation of life. The unceasing march of individual and national progress is name due to the bold and fearless thinkers and actors upon the stage of mundane life. The stern exigencies that confront and impede the gigantic minds of all countries cannot awe or swerve them in the path of duty and power. Disease and death now hold carnival through out the land; suffering humanity calls loudly for the "Balm of Gilead," whose subtle, mystic power can heal and save from wreck and ruin. A saving and skilful hand may be found, ready to administer to the suffering at all times, in Prof. Hamilton, at his old medical emporium, where thousands, from all countries and all climes, have received the healing balm for every ill.

In Harper's Monthly Magazine for February, 1868, may be found a life of Prof. R. LEONIDAS HAMILTON, M. D., whose discoveries in reference to are now attracting the attention of the whole medical world, and whose success is carrying joy and restored health to thousands.

His well-attested cases of liver diseases, lung diseases, blood diseases, and diseases of the kidneys, bladder, spine, stomach, head and other organs are now well known all over the United States and Canada, the West Indies, Europe, Mexico, Sandwich Islands, and in many of the commercial and missionary settlements in every part of the world.

For the benefit of the sick who may wish to know positively when they have derangements of the Liver, of more or less severity, a compilation of the usual symptoms found in such cases will be found below:

SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT.

A sallow or yellow color of the skin, or yellowish-brown spots on the face and other parts of the body; dullness and drowsiness, with frequent headache; bitter or bad taste in the mouth, dryness of the throat and internal heat; palpitation of the heart; in many cases a dry, teasing cough, with sore throat; unsteady appetite; sour stomach, with a raising of the food, and a choking sensation in the throat; sickness and vomiting; distress, heaviness, or a bloated or full feeling about the stomach and sides, which is often attended with pains and tenderness; aggravating pains in the sides, back or breast, and about the shoulders; colic pain and soreness through the bowels, with heat; constipation of the bowels, alternating with frequent attacks of diarrhea; piles, flatulence, nervousness, coldness of the extremities; rush of blood to the head, with symptoms of apoplexy; numbness of the limbs, especially at night; cold chills, alternating with hot flashes, with dullness, low spirits, unsociability and gloomy forebodings, and, with ladies, female weakness and irregularities.

DISEASES CAUSED BY LIVER COMPLAINT.

The human system, the most perfect of all the works of the Creator, is so constituted that, to be entirely healthy, it must throw off the waste, worn out and poisonous materials as fast as it takes on new materials from our food and drink. The food is assimilated and made into healthful and healthy blood principally through the office of the stomach, liver and lungs. The worn-out materials are mostly excreted by the liver, lungs and kidneys; but all medical men have heretofore failed to recognize the vast importance of the liver as a blood-purifying and excreting organ. The most learned German physiologists, who base their assertions upon actual experiments only, state that the amount of BILE which should be manufactured by the liver and poured into the intestines each day is two and one-half pounds. All persons interested to know this fact, and the experiments to prove it, may consult Verdauungsafte und Stoffwechsel, Leipzig, 1852, or they may see a resume of these facts in Prof. Dalton's Physiology.

Remember one thing more: The bile is something more than the natural physic of the bowels, as has heretofore been taught by eminent medical men. The bile is mostly made up of the waste matter of the blood—effete, worn-out and injurious materials. If the liver does not make this bile and pour it into the intestines daily, it remains in the blood as a poison. It poisons the blood itself, and circulates, as irritating and poisonous matter in the blood, to every organ in the system.

The blood poisoned with the daily accumulated excess of bile, returns from the liver to the heart, and the nerves of the heart are affected, and we have an oppressed feeling at the heart, and palpitation; and if this cause is long continued, we get chronic irritation, undue excitement, and morbid nutrition of the heart, developing many forms of Heart Disease.

Just so with the Lungs. The bile-poisoned blood goes from the upper and right cavity of the heart to the lower cavity, and thence directly to the lungs, circulating all through those most delicate organs. The lung tissues are poisoned and irritated, and they invite the scrofulous humors of the blood because they are thus irritated. Hence Consumption, which is local scrofula, so defined and proved by Liebig and all the most scientific authors. The lungs try to oxygenize and purify the blood, and they do it in a great measure; but they are overworked and irritated, and you smell the blood poison matters in the breath. Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Nervous Cough, and Consumption itself are the results. If the Liver had done its duty—made and excreted that BILE—the Lungs would not have been diseased.

Just so with the Blood itself. It goes from the lungs back to the upper left cavity of the heart, then next to the lower cavity, and thence through the arteries and capillaries to every organ and tissue of the system. Among the most important of those organs are the kidneys, furnishing the urinary secretion a most important excretion. But the kidneys themselves are irritated and congested by the presence of the bile-poisoned blood, and they become diseased. Every person who has had a liver disease knows that the urine is scanty, highcolored, and loaded with red deposits, at times, or other diseased products. Hence diseases not only of the kidneys, but also of the bladder.

But this is not all—far from it. The poisonous blood goes to the brain, and affects the great electrical center of all vitality; and the brain, stimulated by unhealthy blood, cannot perform its office healthfully. The person has dullness, headache, incapacity to keep his mind on a subject, cannot remember, has a crowding and dizzy feeling, is sleepy, becomes nervous, gloomy, easily irritated, and often has a bilious or neuralgic headache.

And the Blood itself becomes diseased, as it runs to the great open surface of the skin; and is so irritating and poisonous that the person is disfigured by brown spots, pimples, blotches and other eruptions, sore legs, carbuncles and scrofulous tumors.

Disease of the Liver itself is the most common of all diseases. The sudden changes of the New England climate, the malarial influence of the West, and the heat also of the South, as well as the dietetic habits of the people of this country, and other causes all tend to develop the Liver disease, in some of its varied forms, throughout the United States. This is true both of man and beast, as every butcher knows that he finds the livers of cattle, sheep and swine diseased ten times where he finds any other organ diseased once. Almost every person is bilious at some time, and many are constantly bilious. It may be mere congestion of the Liver, and torpidity of its function, or this may result in some structural or organic affection. But the Liver can never be diseased without affecting the stomach, bowels and the other organs we have spoken of, and costiveness, piles, dropsy, dyspepsia, diarrhea and impoverished blood are among the necessary results.

CHRONIC DISEASES.

Prof. HAMILTON will also inform the afflicted that, having been written to by thousands of patients, his office has become the greatest center for the treatment of novel, interesting and peculiar cases of any place in the world. No hospital in Europe or America has one-tenth the number of singular and remarkable cases as are presented, either personally or by letter, at No. 536 Broadway. It is, indeed, an Empirism of Clinical Medicine. Among the thousands of cases arising from diseases of the Liver, Lungs and Blood, which he treats, the following receive a prominent and most successful attention: Sick and Bilious Headache, Nervous and Neuralgic Headache, Chronic Diarrhea and Dysentery, Costiveness and Piles, Pimples, Eruptions and Brown Skin, Dropsy and Diseases of the Kidneys, Consumption of the Blood, Scrofula in all its forms, Spinal Irritation, Salt Rheum, and Erysipelas, Cancers, Asthma, Epileptic Fits, Nervous Diseases of the Heart, Diseases of Females and all diseases arising from Impurities of the Blood, Rheumatism, Catarrh and Throat Diseases, etc., etc.

SYNOPSIS.

For greater convenience of those wishing to write me about their diseases, I insert the following, which embraces nearly all that I require to know in most cases: Have you constipation of the bowels? Have you attacks of Diarrhea? Have you pains in the back, sides or shoulders? Have you a pain or tenderness about the stomach? Have you a dry, teasing cough? Have you sallow or yellow skin? Have you brown spots on your face or any part of the body? Have you a headache? Are you dull, heavy or sleepy? Have you a bitter or a bad taste in the mouth? Have you an irritation or dryness in the throat? Have you cold chills or hot flashes? Have you palpitation of the heart? Is your appetite unsteady? Is your stomach sour? Do you rise or spit up your food? Have you any choking spells? Are you troubled with sickness and vomiting? Do you feel bloated about the stomach? Have you a tired or sore feeling on rising in the morning? Do you have colic pains? Have you wind in the stomach or bowels? Have you piles or fistula? Have you nervous and all gone feelings? Have you cold feet and hands? Have you a rush of blood to the head? Have you uneasiness on lying on the sides? Have you fainting or sinking fits? Have you great lowness of spirits? Have you gloomy forebodings?

Please Read the Following and See who are Cured.

SUPPORTED BY HONORABLE MEN!

READ! READ!

R. Leonidas Hamilton, M. D.—Dear Sir: Duty prompts me to a most grateful acknowledgment of the astonishing success of your treatment in my case. For nearly three years I had suffered from Catarrh, Nervous Rheumatism, Liver Complaint and Extreme Nervousness, in somuch that life had become an intolerable burden, and death was looked for as my only release; physically and mentally broken down, I was utterly unable to do the duties of a minister, and was preparing to retire from the ranks, when providentially my eye fell on your advertisement in the New York Methodist. I had already traveled far and expended so much in the vain effort to secure a cure, that it was with great reluctance and little hope that I addressed you. Your reply inspired me with hope—your remedies were received and taken, and the result was as marvellous to those who knew my condition as it was gratifying to myself. In three weeks I was again in the pulpit, preaching with unusual vigor, and if my services are any value to the church, it is indebted to you, under God, for their continuance. You may refer to me at any time, and I shall be ever pleased to bear testimony to your extraordinary skill.

Your's truly,

REV. JOSEPH JONES,
Saint Joseph, Mich.

CASES OF LIVER COMPLAINT.

It is with much satisfaction that I invite particular attention to the following voluntary statement of the eminent divine and missionary, the Rev. A. A. Constantine, recently located in the interior of Africa:

No. 90 Fulton St., New York City.

Dr R. Leonidas Hamilton, No. 536 Broadway—My Dear Benefactor: A sense of duty impels me to say that your medicines have done for me what no other physician has been able to do. I have been a sufferer for many years from diseases contracted while laboring as missionary in Africa. Last fall I was declining fast, and had all the symptoms of quick consumption. I applied to you for help. You remarked: "Before I get through with you I will make you feel several years younger than you have ever felt since you left Africa." I thought but little of that, as I had often received similar assurances from eminent physicians, both here and in Europe; but in less than two weeks all my symptoms were entirely changed, and my health and strength improved very fast. In a few weeks I found myself in the enjoyment of better health, and able to perform more labor, mental and physical, than at any previous time since I left Africa. May God bless you in all your researches in his great laboratory, and make you his agent in restoring thousands to health.

A. A. CONSTANTINE.

Weedsport, New York.

Prof. Hamilton—Dear Sir: I have used three quarters of the package of medicine you sent me, and thanks to that wise Providence, whom all should bless for the great good they have done me, I truly believe that my disease was of the liver and digestive organs; and had I not procured timely aid from your treatment my difficulties would have terminated in liver consumption, and that I should have been incurable. I had been failing fast for the last five years, and had been under medical treatment of three of the most skilful physicians in one of the cities of this State. Many persons are daily visiting me to see and hear of your miraculous skill, remarking that "Professor Hamilton must be possessed of more than a doctor's power to cure you." Some look at me with great amazement, after noticing the great change that has taken place in my condition and appearance in so short a time. I ride or walk every day, and can walk a mile.

Truly your's, MRS. D. C. HOWE.

RHEUMATISM CURED!

William McNellis, Eagle Rock, Venango Co., Pennsylvania, writes:

"I return my sincere thanks for having permanently cured me of rheumatism, after having suffered seriously for about seven years. When I had doctored with the doctors and tried all the patent medicines that I could get, with no avail, and was so bad that I could hardly get out of my house, and part of the time not able to get out of my bed, as I was affected in nearly every joint, I thought I would try you as a last resort. To my great joy, in less than three weeks I was able to go out, and jump with the best active men in the place. In one month I was perfectly cured, and had gained seventeen pounds; and I never had better health in my life. I have enjoyed it for the last six months. May God bless you and your wonderful remedies."

CASES OF ASTHMA.

Mr. Joseph Little, of Thompson, Pennsylvania, writes:

"Last January I received a package of medicine from you. It is with much pleasure and thankfulness that I now state that my health is fully re established. The asthma and bronchial difficulties are entirely removed, with the other numerous complaints before specified. I now feel as well as any one can expect to be at my age—sixty-seven years."

Mrs. Eliza Bryant, of Preston, Hamilton Co., Ohio, writes:

"I have so far regained my health, under your treatment, as to be able to be free from my terrible complaint—the Asthma. I can now lay my head down upon my pillow and sleep calmly and sweetly all night. I have no pains now through my shoulders, chest or any part of the body."

REPORT FROM A CASE OF ASTHMA!

Mrs. Jesse Smith, of Cantle Village, Rockingham county, New Hampshire, writes:

"I received your medicine, and have used the most of it. My cough is better, I breathe freely and can sleep well nights. I have every confidence in your skill, and hope soon to be permanently restored."

CANCER CURED.

Extracts from a letter of Mr. Edwin Sanford, of Rosedale, Madison county, Ohio:

Do you remember the young man who came to your office last summer from Ohio to consult you about a disease in his face? I went from Ohio to New York to see you; but there are many who go farther to see you. You treated me like a gentleman. I took three prescriptions of you, and that dreadful cancer got well, and I am hearty and well now. I feel that I can ever trust myself in your hands. I very often go and look at your picture, and think how I would like to see you, and have a good talk with you. My mother is taking your remedies, and I think she will be cured. Do you remember Mr. Gay, the gentleman that you sent tar and wine to by me? You cured him entirely, and he now says that there is no one that he would have to treat him but you.

Your sincere friend,

EDWIN SANFORD.

LIVER AND LUNGS BADLY DISEASED.

Webster City, Iowa.

Dr. Hamilton—Dear Friend: I feel that it is due to you, as well as to all those who are afflicted with disease, to express my gratitude to you for the great benefit which I have received from the use of your medicines. For many months I had had a pain in my shoulders and side, soreness across the chest, difficulty of breathing, hacking cough, sore throat, ringing and roaring in my ears. I was very nervous and my slumbers were disturbed by frightful dreams, and it would seem almost incredible if I were to attempt to describe the objects which seemed to be before me when wide awake. Sleep was no rest to me. I had no ambition, and I had about come to the conclusion that unless I soon got relief my earthly career would soon be ended. I kept growing worse, until I was confined to my bed all the time. My husband induced me to write to you, and your remedies came duly to hand, and in a very short time I began to recover, and am now comparatively well. I thank you, doctor, for your faithful attention, and I shall always recommend you to the afflicted. With much respect.

MARY E. LYON.

THOSE AWFUL FITS CURED!

From P. C. Howard, of Hot Creek, Va.:

"Your package was received, and the medicine taken as directed, and I am happy to be able to inform you that it has had the desired effect. My general health is much better than it has been for several years. I have had no spasm or fits since I commenced taking your medicine."

A VOICE FROM WAYNE CO., PA.

Mr. John Benney, of Honesdale, writes:

"It would be injustice to you, as well as to myself, not to acknowledge what your remedies have done for me. They have done for me more than I ever expected. I began to improve in a week, and when I had taken all the medicines I felt like a new man. All of my neighbors told me how much better I was looking. I have not felt so well for five years as I now do."

EPILEPTIC FITS CURED—OF TWO YEARS' STANDING.

Persippany, New Jersey.

Prof. Hamilton—Dear Sir: Again I have seated myself to inform you of the success your medicine has done for me. I can say I am feeling as well as ever, and no one to praise but Dr. Hamilton for my recovery. I have taken the last of the medicine. Your's truly,

J. A. HOLLOWAY.

EPILEPTIC FITS.—BAD CASE IN MANISTEO, MICH.

Oak Creek, August 31, 1868.

R. L. Hamilton, M. D.—Dear Sir: I have a little boy, 3½ years old, that has fits. You were recommended to me by Mrs. O'Neil (at present Mrs. Shannon,) of Manisteo, Michigan, as having cured her daughter, who was very bad with them. I had been a resident of Manisteo for the last five years, but moved to Wisconsin lately. I have seen the young lady quite a number of times, and know she has had not one in three years. I would have got one of your circulars from the lady, but she had given them away. Write your terms, that I may place my dear boy under your care. Your's respectfully,

THOMAS O. HERRIN,
Oak Creek, Milwaukie Co., Wis.

APPLIES FOR TREATMENT.

George P. Quanty, of Queensville, C. W., writes:

"You will doubtless remember of treating my sister, Mrs. Stephen Noble. You performed such a miraculous cure in her case that I beg leave to give you a statement of my case."

REMEMBER ONE THING!

Reader: Do not think that you cannot be cured because you have tried other remedies. Let it be distinctly understood that many of my remedies are known only to myself, for many of them are discoveries of my own, and are compounded according to my own reasoning and extensive experience with the sick.

All sick persons must remember that, if they wish to be put upon a course of treatment which will cure them, they can write me their present symptoms, plainly; or patients can mark the in every instance, prescribe for them just as well as though I saw them, for I have constantly thousands under my treatment, in various parts of the world, whom I never see, all of whom I cure as speedily and safely as those I see in person—in fact some of the best cures ever made I have perfected in cases I never saw.

All I wish to know in any case is the most prominent symptoms, and they can just as well be written as told to a physician, and he can treat the case as easily as though the patient were present.

Please write to me at once, all ye afflicted, and I will answer you promptly and to the point, and state fully the facts as they appear, and whether you can or not be saved. Do not give up, even though your family physician has done you no good, for I have saved thousands after all hope had fled and the grave was near. The wisdom and goodness of a just Providence will put within the noble means for the salvation or happiness of his suffering and erring children. Also, if you expect a full and specific reply to your letter, always inclose ten cents—postage must be paid in advance.

I am always in attendance, and attend to all cases in person, and the afflicted public may rely upon my responding fully, and that they will be dealt with justly and honorably.

Have a hesitancy in writing to the doctor and state to him your case in full and he will deal honestly and promptly with you. All letters to him must be addressed thus:

No. 24 Broadway,
Care of Post Office Box No. 1,972, N. York.

GET THE BEST ORGANS

At Prices of Inferior Work.

THE MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN COMPANY

Respectfully announce that they have adopted and will rigidly adhere to the policy of printing in their price lists and circulars their very lowest prices, which are therefore alike to all, and subject to no discount. This system secures every purchaser against an exorbitant price, and saves necessity for bartering.

They solicit comparison of the prices in their new catalogue (just issued) with those of inferior organs; with careful examination and comparison of capacity, quality and workmanship of different instruments. The Company's perfected machinery, accumulated facilities and experienced workmen, together with the important improvements patented and controlled by them, enable them to produce the best work at the greatest economy of cost, and consequently to offer their well-known Organs, winners of the Paris Exposition Medal and seventy-five other first premiums, which are the acknowledged standard of excellence in their department, at prices as low or even less than those demanded for inferior organs.

The following are examples of our reduced scale of prices:

Four-octave Organ, solid black walnut case, (style No. 1,) price, - - - $50 00
Five-octave Double Reed Organ, five stops, with Tremulant. Solid black walnut case, carved and panelled (style C.) Price, - - - - - 125 00
Five octave Double Reed Cabinet Organ, five stops, with the new Mason & Hamlin Improved Vox Humana, which excels every other attachment of this class in the beauty and variety of its effects, the ease with which it is used, and its freedom from liability to get out of order. Solid walnut case, carved and panelled (new style, No. 21.) This is the finest Organ of its size and capacity which can be made. Price, - - - - 170 00

Many other styles at proportionate prices. THE CHILD'S CORNER.

FEASTING ON GOD'S WORD.—'Where have you been reading this morning, uncle?'

'Weel, Sandy,' said the old man, 'I hae been gettin' a wonderfu' feast yesterday aod the day oot of the last twa verses o' the aucht b' Romans.'

'And have you not read any more than these two verses in two days?' asked Smith, with a little surprise.

'O, surely, surely, sir,' said my uncle, 'I hae been delving owre a middlin' breadth o' surface elsewhere, but I hae beeo tryin' to sink a mine doon here. And I'm no doon at the big nuggets yet. Yon see, sir, that I do wi' these verses as I do wi' thir sugar plooms—will ye hae twa or three o' them, if ye please? I'm fashed wi' a dryness in the throat, that sets me hoastin', and Mary whiles makes me a lot o' plooms. She noo and then put ane o' them in ber month, but she gies it just a chew or two and ower wi' it; while I lay mine io my cheek and let it be and melt, and do me more gude for half a day. And mooy a ane does the same wi' the Bible. They gallop over a chapter and it's dune; bot nao sio waistrie for me. I like to tak' a sweet and sappio bit—a verse or a word, may be—and let it lie in my cheek and melt, and fill my soul wi' its sweetness, for a day, or a week, or a mooth at a time. Did you ever try this way of feastin' on God's word, sir?'

"FATHER KNOWS."—A geotleman was one day opening a box of dry goods. His little son was standing near, and as the father took the packages from the box, he laid some of them npon the arm of the boy. A little friend and playmato of the merchant's son was standing by, looking on. As package after package was laid npon the arm of the boy, his little friend began to fear his load was becoming too heavy, and said:

"Johnny, don't yon think yon've got as much as you can carry?"

"Never mind," dear little Johnny answered, io a sweet, happy tone, "father knows how much I can carry."

Brave, trusting little fellow! He did not grow restless and impatient under his burden, heavy though it donbtless seemed. There was no danger, he felt, that his father would lay npon him a burden too heavy for him. His father knew the strength, or rather the weakness, of that little arm, and would not overtask it.

HOME CHEERFULNESS.—Many a child goes astray, not because there is a want of prayer or virtne at home, but simply becanse home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing displeases they are prone to avoid it. If home is the place where faces and words are harsh, and fault-finding is ever in the ascendant, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere. Let every father and mother, then, try to be happy. Let them look happy. Let them talk to their children, especially the ittle ones, in snch a way as to make them happy.

"BECAUSE YOU SWEAR."—"Jewett," said a man in middle life to a sunny-faced boy of five summers, "Jewett, I want yon to come to my house and be my boy. Will yon do it?" "No, sir," was the reply. "But why not?" continned the man, naming many things he would do to make the little boy happy. "Why will yon not come and live with me?" "Because you swear," was the noble reply of Jewett.

THERE are two Protestant Episcopal sisterhoods in New York, connected with the opposite poles of the denomination. One was originated by Dr. Mnhlenberg, in 1843. It is called the Sisterhood of the Holy Communion, and is devoted mainly to the charge of St. Luke's Hospital. It is an independent ornary is under ecclesiastical control, and Rev. Morgan Dix is the chaplain. It is considerably on the model of Roman Catholic sisterhood, and has done a good work for fallen women.

THE Lutherans adhering to the "General Syaod' have had very few adhereots among the late German immigrants. A new German paper has just been started to advocate Evangelical Lutheranism, and opposing the extreme symbolism and formality of the "General Council."—The first Scandinavian church in connection with the synod has just been organized in Illinois; and two Swedish preachers licensed.

FOR many years there were more Unitarians in the House of Commons than Methodists, Congregationalists and Baptists put together. At present there are fifteen Unitarians who are members; and the great Orthodox, Non-conformist and Methodist bodies do not furnish more than twice that number.

FARM AND GARDEN.

FARM LIFE.—The men who have left their mark npon the ages in which they havo lived and have done a great and noble work for the race, have been, with a few exceptions, men of noble physical mode. The foundation of their greatness and their fame was laid in the patient training of their physical powers. Such a man was Washington, and most of the worthies who were associated with him in the struggle for our liberties. Such were Clay and Webster, and many of their cotemporaries in our national Senate. Their early days were spent upon the farm, and the thoughts of their declining years were given to the employments, and the cultivation, and the embellishment of their respective homesteads. Ashland and Marshfield will long be scenes of pilgrimage to the husbandman, as well as the patriot. The whole tendency of farm life is to develop the body healthily and symmetrically. The child is not pent up in the narrow back yard of a city dwelling, nor turned into thronged and filthy streets, to pursue his sports. His eyes open first npon the green fields and fragrant meadows, and his first footfall out of doors is upon the matted grass, beneath the shadowy trees of his rural home. He drinks in health from every breeze, and all the sceoes arouud him call forth that playfulness which performs so importaot an office io our early training. So this leads us to speak of the influence of farm life npon home virtues. No occupation can be more favorable to the cultivation of those qualities which are the charm of the domestic circle. The farmer is much more at home than is possible with any other man. How many are there in our cities who only see their families at evening, or on Sunday! They live for their business; and this, from its location, takes them from home early and late. How many from the same cause forsake housekeeping, and huddle into boarding houses and hotels, where the charm and beauty of the family, as God institnted it, is entirely lost; and children fall under a thonsand unfriendly influences, that would never touch them at home. With the best arrangements wealth could command in the city, it is well nigh impossible to keep children under the influence of their parents, so that they shall have a distinct family character, and bear the moral, as they do the physical, image of their progenitors. Parental influence is dissipated, amid the varied social influences to which they are subjected from their earliest days. Then what perplexities harass the man of business in the city—his capital is often invested in profitless enterprise, exposed to the depredations of dishonest men, cheated and ruined by knaves and bankrupts. From the very character of his business, he has to trust far more of his available means to the integrity of his fellows than the cultivator. His debts are often scattered over a wide extent of territory, and collections are not only expensive, bnt exceedingly uncertain. But his commercial credit depends upon this uncertainty, and he is often compelled to fall back upon nothing, a ruined man. Ninety-five failures in a hondred, among most business men in the city, tell a sad tale of the perplexity and sorrow, the corrodiog cares and agonish of mercantile life. How can a father, goaded with these anxieties from the begioniog to the end of the year, do justice to his children, even if his business allowed him to be with them part of the time? He is not in the frame of mind to superintend their education, and to perform a father's office. The farm preserves the family in its integrity. The home has io it that charming word, and that more charmiog thing, the fireside, around which parents and childreo gather, aod where the bright aod cheerful blaze upon the hearth is but a true type of the flame of love that glows in every heart. The parents have been drawn together, not by worldly advice of social display, but by the personal qualities seen in each other. The glory of the fireside to the husband is, that the wife is there; and to the wife, that he is who is the head of women; and the band is that home circle. Here they gather, at morning, and evening, and at noon.—Their board is almost always surrounded with the same circle, and here they spend the long winter evenings together.—Journal of Education.

WORKING AND WASHING BUTTER.—Much has beeu said, says the Country Gentleman, about working butter, but a trial of both ways has led us to believe that in warm weather better butter can be made by washing than without. On this question Andrew Havens, an experienced butter maker, gives his experience in a recent Ohio Cultivator, which we condense for our readers as follows: Some say they would rather leave the milk in the butter than to wash it—that washing makes it rancid; bnt it is a mistake. Milk left in butter will sorely sour, and the bntter becomes strong; besides it is as easy to work out the water as the milk, and if not all worked out, combines with the salt to make a brine which will help to keep the butter sweet. In cool weather we can work out the milk very well without water, but in hot weathnr we cannot get the milk out very well without washing, and hardly with. A great deal of butter is spoiled by the way it is worked—Some work it too much—this makes it greasy like lard, and after standing for a while it turns white and loses its flavor. When working bntter, never draw the ladle over it. Butter should never be packed down until it is solid; if put dowo solid it will remain so.

SCIENTIFIC.

ADHESIVE GUM.—The gum used on envelopes and postage stamps is a preparation of starch called dextrine, the valnc of which for sealing and stiffening purposes was accidentally discovered in England some time since. During the conflagration of a large flour warehouse, a cotton spinner worked at carrying water and rolling out the partially charred flour. In the morning he found his clothes irremediably stiffened and glued together.

On investigation he ascertained that the scorched flour would form with water a glntinous matter much more adhesive than any known gum. Snbsequent experiments revealed the fact that this preparation was better than gum arabic for stiffening cotton goods, aod the discoverer kept his secret and made money out of the manufacture of "British gum" for cotton dressers. But his success was his ruio; he became a profligate, his secret was discovered, and dextrine came into notice. It is now used for all purposes where a cheap mucilage is required. For dressing cotton goods, for preparing the backs of postage stamps, the edges of envelopes, manufacturer's labels, etc., it is found to be unrivalled. It has nearly ruined the gum arabic trade, as well as that in sealing wax and wafers.

PREVENTIVE OF DRY ROT.—A London scientific journal announces that soaking timber for a short period in lime water is an effectnal preventive for what is known as dry rot. It says the matter has been thoroughly tested by experiment, and may be relied upon as being correct. The proportion of lime used is eighty-eight grains to one gallon of water, and the time necessary for the timber to remain in the solution depends upon its size, and the kind of wood used Whatever kind or size is used, it should be thoroughly saturated.

MAKE YOUR OWN CANDLES.—Take two pounds of alum for every ten pounds of tallow; dissolve it in water before the tallow is put in, and then melt the tallow in the alum water, with frequent stirring. This will clarify and harden the tallow so as to make a most beautiful article either for summer or winter use, almost as good as sperm.

CHRISTIANITY WORTH SOMETHING.—In his 'Ten Years on the Euphrates,' Rev. C. H. Wheeler, missionary of the American Board, describes the practical method he adopted to teach the Mussulmans that 'they who preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel.' A church had been formed in Harport City, and a man who had been educated at Constantinople was there as preacher. He was unwilling to look to them for support, and they were unwilling to do anything for his support, saying, 'We don' need a pastor. Your missiooaries are good euongh to preach to us.' To this Mr. Wheeler replied: 'Yes, iodeed, we are too good—at any rate we cost the American churches too much to stay here and preach to you, and thus do you harm. You must have preaching for which you can pay.' With subscription paper in hand, he called upon every man who attended the chapel, saying: 'I am glad to see that yon like the Gospel and its new preacher, Mardiros, and I have called to see how much you love them.' Some refused to give anything, and such generally disappeared from the chapel, but of those who were in earnest, some put down their two cents, or one cent, or half a cent per week, and began to feel that the church and the preacher belonged to them. Mr. Wheeler thinks that the surprising success which has crowned the missionary labors in that field is due, to a great extent, to the lesson taught them, that the Gospel demanded a sacrifice on their part, and was worth all that could be paid for it.

MR. GLADSTONE, the English prime minister, is announced as about to contribute a series of papers on "The Duties of a Citizen of a Free State" to Good Words during the current year.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE

OF THE

CHARTER OAK,

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day.—It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury membership fee, if between the ages of 16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of .....; 31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of .....; 41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of .....; 51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of ....., which payment constitutes him or her a member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on any policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed one thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.),

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

THE THIRTY FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Hass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwaitz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board, including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of instrument $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,
sep5 tf President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket-money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300. PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING

STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

T. K. PRICE, Esq., Vendor of "Price's Patent

DEAR SIR—After a fair and deliberate use and experiment of your Vegetable Medicine, known as PRICE'S PATENT TEXAS TONIC, we give it as our decided opinion, that it is the best recipe that we have ever known, for Indigestion, Torpor of the Liver, Constipation of the Bowels and Dyspepsia. We consider your Vegetables Medicine worthy of all commendation, and therfore feel no hesitation in recommending its use to all our friends, as well as the public at large, and that in doing so we are contributing to all the afflicted. Many of us have been suffering from these evils from ten to fifteen years, and have been greatly benefited.

Wishing you great success in introducing this valuable medicine,

We remain yours truly,

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $18 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy and seeking their sons out of the State to be educated

[illegible] to believe that [illegible] will conduct next night exclusively by [illegible]

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has shown only a moderate degree of animation since our last issue. Wholesale dealers have done a fair business, mostly for the country, but have not met a very active demand in any department. Sugar and molasses have been in steady request, and the receipts have met a ready sale at full prices. We have but little movement to notice in Western produce. There have been some receipts of corn, which have met a ready sale, partly for export. We notice that a moderate amount of wheat, also, is coming forward, a part of which has been offered to arrive, but shippers, we presume, prefer to see the article before making their purchases. If the receivers be willing to accept a fair price, considered with regard to the New York and Liverpool markets, they will no doubt find a ready sale without the expense of storage. Pork has further advanced, but with this exception there has been no material change in Western produce.

The weather has been generally clear and pleasant. Nothing of much interest has been reported from the country, but there is still great complaint of the bad state of the roads and the difficulty of hauling cotton to the landings.

The river has risen six inches since our last report, and is now three feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 22d instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 18054
Alabama and Tennessee	64
Arkansas	850
Mobile	18
Texas	38
Total	19024

On Saturday the movement was partially suspended, and the sales were confined to 1,200 bales, at a decline of ¼ to ⅜c., but prices closing so unsettled that quotations were mostly nominal. There was no improvement on Monday. One buyer taking 500 bales, the entire sales comprised 1,250 bales, but prices were still lower, sales having been made at a decline of from ½c. to 1c. per pound, and the nominal quotations at the close being 26½c. for low middling, and 27¼c. for middling. On Tuesday the market opened dull and drooping, but more encouraging telegrams from New York subsequently imparted an additional stimulus to the demand, and 3,000 bales changed hands at steadier prices, showing a slight improvement over the closing rates on Monday, and an advance of ¼ to ½c. on the lowest point.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 5,450 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 538,155 bales, against 322,458 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 94,381 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 34,990 bales to France, of 3,839 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 65,612 to Great Britain.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Low	— to —
Ordinary	24 to 24¼
Good ordinary	25¾ to 26
Low middling	26½ to —
Middling	27¼ to 27½
Strict middling	— to 28

Sugar.—The demand has shown less activity since our last review, but the supplies on Saturday and Monday were mostly sold at previous prices for the various grades of open kettle, while clarified brought higher rates. On Saturday and Monday 1,300 hogsheads, all the receipts, sold at 8½ to 9½c. per pound for inferior; 10¼ to 10¾c. for common; 11 to 12c. for fair; 12¼ to 12½c. for fully fair; 12¾ to 13c. for prime; 13½c. for choice; 14½ to 15c. for yellow clarified, and 15½ to 16c. for white. On Tuesday but the supplies were pretty much all sold, however. Prices for the medium and lower grades gave way, while those for the better descriptions remained about the same.

Molasses.—The demand has been good, though not so active as previously. The supplies were sold, however, at about previous prices.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

To the Members of the Montgomery Conference.

Dear Brethren: In behalf of the Committee on Bible Cause, I beg leave to call your attention to a resolution contained in the report of said committee, and adopted by you, requiring each pastor, immediately on his arrival at his new field of labor, to ascertain all the destitution of the people in regard to the Scriptures, and report the number of destitute families to your next session.

ORGAN OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH FOR THE MOBILE, MONTGOMERY, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES

VOLUME XV.—NUMBER 3.
WHOLE NUMBER..... 717.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1869.

$3 00 A YEAR IN ADVANCE.
OFFICE—113 CAMP STREET.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

MEMPHIS, Feb. 2.—The train from Madison, Arkansas, to-day brought in a large number of refugees from Crittenden county, who are fleeing from a party of negroes who represented themselves as militia. They hung a planter named Gibson this morning and were committing every species of vandalism.

The Avalanche's Little Rock special has the following:

The bill exempting $300 worth of property, introduced into the Legislature yesterday, provoked a heated discussion and finally passed. Consideration of a section of the digest levying a tax of $1,000 on a county where any murder is committed was discussed and finally postponed.

On Sunday night a planter named Cullen, who had been to Little Rock and sold his cotton, while camping six miles above the city, was murdered by a negro, who, after robbing him, took one wagon and horses and rode into Little Rock, where he was arrested and lodged in jail.

SAVANNAH, Feb. 2.—The heaviest rain storm for years prevailed this morning, with a strong gale from south southeast.

DANBURY, Ct., Feb. 2.—The dams at the waterworks broke away, causing a terrible flood. Five bodies have been found and a number are missing. Several bridges and houses were swept away.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—A heavy gale and rain prevailed throughout Great Britain yesterday. Much land was flooded and many marine disasters, but no loss of life reported.

Dispatches from the East report a bloody battle between the Turks and Montenegrins near Nikschitza. No particulars.

LONDON, February 2.—The Greek cabinet voted four to three in favor of signing the conference.

Seward authorizes Minister Norris, at Constantinople, to offer the mediation of the United States between Turkey and Greece.

MADRID, Feb. 2.—The government resists the clamor for immediate action regarding religion, and persists in referring the whole matter to the cortes, and forbids large meetings or political discussions on the streets. The cortes will appoint a director until a sovereign is chosen.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 2.—Noon.—Cotton market firm; estimated sales 15,000 bales; middling uplands 11¾ to 11¾, middling Orleans 11¾ to 12.

WASHINGTON Feb. 3.—The President has directed that a pardon issue for Dr. Mudd, one of the alleged conspirators at the Dry Tortugas.

The Committee of Ways and Means have authorized General Schenck to report a resolution requiring bonds to be paid in gold, unless otherwise expressed in law, etc., and also in favor of legalizing gold contracts.

They also authorize a resolution, in accordance with the Conkling and Judd resolutions, against the sale or issue of any more bonds or notes by the present or any future Secretary of the Treasury.

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs have, for want of time, refused to consider the Alta Vela controversy at this session.

A very important subject was disposed of to-day, so far as the Senate Pacific Railroad Committee can determine it. This committee finally agreed upon a plan for the construction of railroad lines to the Pacific. They provide for a Northern Pacific railroad and an Atlantic and Pacific railroad, the latter extending from Little Rock, on the thirty-fifth degree of latitude, to the southern border of California, there to join the Southern Pacific railroad now, as established by a California charter, to San Francisco. The bill will provide for a branch from Portland, Oregon, southwest to a connection with the main trunk line of the Union Pacific railroad, on Humboldt river.

These companies are to issue bonds respectively, as twenty mile sections may be completed, to the amount of $30,000 per mile, bearing six per cent. interest, payable in greenbacks, running thirty years. To secure the payment of interest on these companies, all dues from the government to them for transportation are retained, and the title to public lands to remain in the government until the latter shall offer them for sale in the usual manner, each company is required to pay into the treasury ten per cent. of the gross receipts as further security for the payment of interest.

The branch road from the Northern Pacific to Portland is excluded from the above aid, as is also the Western division in Kansas.

The preparation of the bill is committed to Senator Harlan, who expects to be ready to report it to the Senate next Friday.—New Orleans Times.

Government Monopoly of the Telegraph.

But the strongest objection to the Federal government engaging in the exclusive business of receiving, transmitting and delivering telegraphic messages is, that it has no such right; and another almost equally strong objection is, that the people would never submit to the government supervision of their private and confidential correspondence; and that those who did not employ cipher would cease altogether to telegraph. We might add another to the objections already adduced, namely, the dangerous power which it would place in the hands of the Federal authorities, who, in the last few years, in various places, have acquired, with alarming rapidity, rights which before the war they would never have dared to assume. The people have been repeatedly warned by us and other journalists of the danger which lurked in the assumption of new powers by Radical office holders under the Federal government. Our warnings were not heeded, and the result has been as we predicted it—a bond-holding aristocracy untaxed, and receiving interest for their money in gold, while labor is paid in bank paper: National Banks, with unlimited power over commerce and labor; a Congress usurping powers which, by the Constitution, are reserved to the States respectively and to the people; and its latest attempted usurpation, the effort to annex telegraphing to the functions of the Federal government. All this looks to consolidation, and is, so surely as night follows day, intended to bring it about. Mr. Jefferson, with the keen eye of an enlightened statesman, foresaw the end of all this when the political predecessors of the Radicals began the usurpation which their successors are now endeavoring to consummate. In his letter to Mr. Giles, some time in 1825, he says:

"I see, as you do, and with the deepest affliction, the rapid strides with which the Federal branch of our government is advancing toward the usurpations of all the rights reserved to the States, and the consolidation in itself, of all powers, foreign and domestic; and that too by constructions which leave no limits to their powers, etc. Under the power to regulate commerce, they assume, indefinitely, that, also, over agriculture and manufactures, etc. Under the authority to establish post roads, they claim that of cutting down mountains for the construction of roads, and digging canals, etc. And what is our resource for the preservation of the Constitution? Reason and argument? You might as well reason and argue with the marble columns encircling them, etc."

This was the language held by Mr. Jefferson when high tariffs and expensive internal improvement schemes were urged in Congress by the party who, in that day, sought to obtain the end which the Radicals of our day have almost reached. His views are as applicable now as they were then.—New York News.

CHATTANOOGA RAILROAD.—We are glad to perceive that the Mobile and Chattanooga Railroad Company begins to show such symptoms of vitality as must soon become apparent to every eye. The contracts for a considerable portion of the line betwixt this city and Mobile have already been made, and the work at both ends will commence on Monday. Mr. Collins, one of the contractors, will break ground on the Gentilly ridge, and dredge boats are being prepared to throw up a road bed through the marshy grounds beyond Chef Menteur. Mr. King, the Mobile contractor, procured his shovels and wheelbarrows here a day or two since, and a contractor for sixty miles of the way along the Mississippi Sound is expected to arrive from New York today. All this looks like work. Besides, a visit to the office of the company, at Gallier's Court, gives refreshing evidence, in the way of maps, plans and profile sections, that the necessary details have been carefully prepared and that the undertaking is a genuine one. We are assured that all the money necessary for the completion of the road eastward has already been subscribed by wealthy capitalists, and that an application by the company for State aid only refers to a contemplated extension westward from this city toward Texas. No State aid is asked toward the construction of the road betwixt this city and Mobile.—New Orleans Times.

Multiplying Bishops.—How the Policy May be Overdone.

Some of our Advocate writers, and other brethren, who talk and do not write, seem to think more bishops are wanted; aye, a bishop for every Conference is the desire of not a few. If eight do well, twenty would do better.

Well, the current is setting strongly in this direction. There is danger of having "too much bishop." The power may be lost in the attempt to multiply it. Let us learn a lesson from a sect which has experimented fully—the Protestant Episcopal Church. In their late Triennial Convention the High Church party called for more bishops. One would think they had enough; but a morbid ecclesiasticism grows by what it feeds on. Some of their bishops remind us of a colonel in regimentals without any soldiers. It is more soldiers they need—men of the rank and file. A plain man of the world was talking with a "churchman" on this subject. Said he, "The difference between you and the Methodists seems to be this—you have a great many bishops and but few members; they have a great many members and but few bishops." Query: Has not this difference of policy had a good deal to do in producing this difference of results? In the Protestant Episcopal Convention, one Dr. Andrews, of Virginia, stood up boldly against the rage for multiplying bishops. We quote from his speech, and Methodists may learn a few things. He said:

But we are told that what is wanted is more of episcopal presence and inspection and counsel and general influence. But, sir, the fond notions entertained upon this subject are totally unfounded; they have never, in a single instance, been realized, and never will be. And yet there seems to be no theory so persistently entertained, though no one was ever so often and so thoroughly confuted both by philosophy and by fact. And first for the philosophy. What is it which gives such efficiency to episcopal presence and counsel? Is it the superior talents of the bishop? Not necessarily. Is it his superior piety? Not necessarily. Is it the conviction on the part of the people that he holds under a divine constitution? So does the presbyter hold under a divine constitution, and by a title which has certainly been much less disputed. No, sir, it is the jurisdiction—it is the office; and the influence of that office, ceteris paribus, will be in proportion to the singularity of its functions, and the size and importance of the territory over which it extends.

The desired influence is of a sort which may be attempted too often. Suppose it exercised every other Sunday or every other month. If effectual, it becomes an influence, other than episcopal—an influence which the bishop divides with the rector, and nothing is gained. Whereas it is a great thing to have such an extra-ordinary power in the church, brought statedly into action, but not so often as to encroach upon the ordinary. It is a power which ought not to be trifled with. But it is trifled with, nay, it is in a great measure destroyed by such legislation as is now proposed. * * * *

It gives me pain to speak of the delusion of those who think to multiply spiritual power by multiplying bishops. I was once under the same, supposing that as "antiquity" was against us we must be all wrong. But upon learning more about antiquity, especially of the corruption which prevailed at the period when dioceses were thus indefinitely subdivided. * * * * I saw the delusion. Yet numbers cling to it, and insist that this is a chief thing now wanted to build up the church and do more good. Would to God their heart's desire, and mine also, could be effected by so easy a process. But the experiment has been made too often, and under too great a variety of circumstances to suffer a doubt to remain with such as can reason. If any question has been settled by experiment, this has been.

The philosophy is even less convincing than the facts. What are they? Look at Arkansas, with one rector, and he the bishop. Look at Florida, with seven rectors, divided into I don't know how many deaneries. Look at Kansas, reporting to the last general convention a hundred and seventy-one communicants. Look at Delaware, with a good man and an able man as bishop for more than twenty years, reporting to said convention less congregations in 1865 than in 1862, some sixteen or eighteen in all. * * * * * *

The marvel is that the delusion should continue, and even grow in spite of all proofs. Is there any man who cannot see that if you have got a bishop who cannot be episcopally employed, perhaps half his time, then you have got confessedly more bishop than you want? Or if it be said that the man's being a bishop makes his missionary or parochial labors more efficacious, it may be answered that we have had and still have bishops who are rectors of parishes, and the facts warrant no such conclusion. So also when bishops are resident in particular towns and spend much time, is any special good observed to result to such town from such residence? There is not, and it is unreasonable to expect it.

And now, sir, as to these more protracted and minutely inspective episcopal visitations of which we have such beautiful theories in newspapers and pamphlets—the most recent, as it seems the most improved, I find just distributed in the convention. It comes from North Carolina. It is the work of a respectable committee, and is addressed to the church at large. Hear what it says: The bishop must be "the father of his diocese, knowing individually all his spiritual children, sharing their joys and their griefs, aiding and directing them in their work—the chief pastor in reality of the flock, able to reckon even its lambs, living and moving daily among them, ordering, directing and guiding each under shepherd; not indebted for his influence to them, but rather the source of their influence, pressing them to their work when necessary. * * * * watching their lives for their own and their people's good, correcting promptly their errors, and staying or undoing their evil consequences, tying them into one harmonious suit, etc.—in part by making them all only his agents, himself the ultimate doer of all the work."

And a like inspection is advocated for the laity. "It should be possible for him to know them individually, and he often with them, not in church only, but at their homes." Now, Mr. Chairman, can you pretend to any such supervision as this, over your single parish, or any other minister who has a large parish? and do you or does any other presbyter in this house desire any such inspection for himself? I profess for one that I do not, and never saw the day when I did. If religion had any strength at the start such perpetual nursing as this, ab extra, would be the surest way to make it weak. This is a very pretty thing to talk about—a bishop coming into a parish * * * * questioning the minister about the vestry, and the vestry about the minister, and both about the people, and the people about both.

* * * * *

I never heard of its being attempted but in a single instance, and that not in a small diocese or one which showed any signs of edification under the process. At first it was thought a wonderful thing for a bishop to profess his intention to make the personal acquaintance of every Episcopalian in the diocese. The work was undertaken. After service all came up to the chancel to be introduced, not only colonels and squires, but special prominence was given to the poor—Uncle Jack and Aunt Susan (I give the names) were cordially shaken by the hand—quite a scene—and reported all abroad. But presently it came to be asked how much of reality there was in all this. Certain it was that not a natural sentiment had been expressed on either side, and it is needless to say that these things were soon left to regulate themselves. * * * * *

But surely, it is said, a bishop ought to render some service in a parish beyond his mere official acts. True he ought, but how is it to be done? The rector ought always to be master of the situation. Ordinarily he is so, but if not, it is seldom in the power of the bishop to make him so—never by authority. The power of a bishop in this age is not so much realized under the idea of a father among his children as that of a man among men. He works by character, as well as by office—by reputation for truthfulness, for integrity and godly sincerity in religion, for wisdom, for enterprise, for success. * * *

But alas, sir, he must read the signs of the times with other eyes than mine who does not see that instead of this, if the present revolutionary proposal should be adopted, we shall have a multitude of bishops without respect, and without the means of subsistence.—Memphis Christian Advocate.

THE SOUTH AND THE PACIFIC.

There could be no sincerer pledge offered the South at this particular time of the friendship and fraternal feeling which the North so freely professes to entertain than the execution of the project for a railway that will unite its centers of trade and commerce with the Pacific and the far East. Thoughtful minds would see in the plan itself a fortunate opportunity to join interests and sympathies with that section as they have never been joined in the past. This is the commercial age, and South and North together are to come under the benefits of its stimulating influence. Agriculture being its controlling pursuit, and its soil and climate combining so happily the conditions requisite to the support of a dense population, outlets for its products, and a broad and deep channel to bring in the wealth of the foreign world become of prime necessity to its healthy development. An enterprise that shall connect Charleston, Savannah, Augusta, Atlanta, Mobile and New Orleans with the Pacific seaboard, and open to them the untold wealth of central and eastern Asia in exchange for the products of the South, is naturally of such urgent importance to that whole section, that no ordinary reasons can suffice to defer its completion.

Whether we think it or not, the soil of the Southern States is, for generations to come, to furnish the great staple whose fleece is sought by the world. On that single staple we are to rely for the means of adjusting our trade balances with foreign nations. No other crop or product known, not even breadstuffs themselves, can serve the turn in commerce which cotton does. And that may be raised in fabulous quantities throughout the limits of the Gulf States, by the throwing open the entire section to trade and immigration, and creating a powerful union of industrial interests in that entire region. Slavery has given place to wages; and to stimulate the new system into productive activity the commercial spirit must be freely introduced. While China and Japan and the Indies are sending their created wealth to the Pacific, in exchange for American and European products, the South offers an opening for a liberal share of the common trade which a comprehensive view of the situation cannot affect to overlook. There may be sectionalism in other respects, but there can be none in trade. There the law is like that which sends water on its natural course, and is susceptible of no variation of prejudice or selfishness. And as a great commercial nation, we have nothing to do, beyond applying our united energies at the top of their bent, but to ascertain the natural tendencies of trade and exchange, and promptly to follow their valuable suggestions.

The Southern Pacific road unites this large cotton producing area with a tier of timber, grass growing, grazing and mineral bearing territories to westward, yet to assume the proportions of integral States; and the connection is to work industrial miracles for both. If the grain and gold of California are better for lying so close together, like the iron and coal deposits of Tennessee, so will it be better for the cotton producing States that they are brought into close relations with the beef and mutton raising, the grass producing and the mineral bearing States beyond the Mississippi. The union is that on which the future prosperity of the South will depend, just as much as that of the North depends on its intimate connection with the agricultural States of the West and the opening trade beyond the Pacific. But it is in view of the great staple of commerce, which the South exclusively produces, that the whole country must see how its general interests are allied with the success of the projected Southern road to the Pacific shore.—Boston Post.

OLIVES.—The San Diego Union says: There will soon be more than two thousand olive slips set out, in this county, this year. They can be had very cheap, and they grow with no more attention than is paid to the cultivation of the willow. They bear in about two years from the time they are planted, live almost forever, and will always be a source of revenue to the cultivators. They make a fine shade tree, and are ornamental as well as useful.

MOBILE is to have a wagon and plow manufactory.

THE ex-king of Naples is dangerously ill at Rome.

THE Bishop of Mayence once delivered a sermon against drunkenness; and, after painting in the strongest colors the evils of over indulgence, concluded as follows: "But the abuse of wine does not exclude its use, for it is written that wine rejoices the heart of man. Probably there is no one in my congregation who cannot drink four bottles of wine without feeling any disturbance of his senses; but, if any man at the seventh or eighth bottle so forgets himself as to abuse and strike his wife and children, and treat his best friends as enemies, let him look into his conscience, and in future always stop at the sixth bottle. Yet, if after drinking eight, or even ten, or twelve bottles, he can still take his Christian neighbor lovingly by the hand, and obey the orders of his spiritual and temporal superiors, let him thankfully drink his modest draught. He must be careful, however, as to taking any more, for it is seldom that Providence gives any one the special grace to drink sixteen bottles at a sitting, as it has enabled me, its unworthy servant, to do, without either neglecting my duties or losing my temper." It seems incredible at this day that a bishop could ever have written such stuff as this.

ALABAMA RAILROADS.—We clip the following from the Mobile Register of the 13th:

Northwest and Southeast Railroad. We yesterday received a visit from ex-Governor G. M. Patton, vice president of this road, in the construction of which Mobile is so deeply interested. He informs us that twenty miles of the road—from Chattanooga to Trenton, Georgia, is now in successful operation, and that ten miles more down the Wills Valley is under contract for completion by the 1st of May prox. There are twenty-seven miles of this end—from Meridian to York—already completed; and Governor Patton promises that the remaining sixty-nine miles, to Tuscaloosa, will be completed within twelve months.

South and North Alabama Railroad. The Montgomery Mail learns that work on this road will be commenced in a few days. The contract for the bridge, which will be built about two miles above the city, has been taken by Mr. W. G. Wharton. President Whiting has left, ere this, for New York, part of his business being the disposal of the $500,000 of bonds voted to the road by the city of Montgomery.

DR ELLIOTT'S FUNERAL.—Rev. Leroy M. Vernon, on the 11th, wrote from Mount Vernon, Iowa:

Rev. Charles Elliott, D. D., LL. D., died here, from paralysis, on the 6th instant, at seven o'clock P. M., in great peace. After suitable services on the morning of the 9th instant, at the late residence of the deceased, by Dr. C. A. Holmes, the remains were conveyed to the Main street Methodist church, when, at eleven o'clock A. M., in the presence of a large assembly, under the direction of Rev. Wesley Dennett, appropriate funeral addresses were delivered by Alexander Burns and others.

At half-past one o'clock P. M. the interment occurred in the Mount Pleasant Cemetery, one mile and a half from the town. All six of his living children, his youngest brother and some of the grand children of the deceased were present on the occasion. A memoir will be sent you in a day or two.

THE London Spectator doubts whether "any English writer now living writes as pure and classical English as was written by Nathaniel Hawthorne." No English male writer does, we think; but we should not like to say the same of Marian Evans—"George Eliot"—who is not merely the first of English novelists now living, but the first of English prose writers.

A FRENCH chemist has invented a new way of preparing glass for mirrors. It is coated with an exceedingly thin layer of platinum, and becomes, mysteriously, not only a perfect mirror, but also remains so transparent that it may still be used for windows.

FLORIDA farmers believe that the late frost destroyed the caterpillars, and that cotton planting this year cannot fail to be a success. Accordingly they are preparing to plant a greater breadth this year than ever before.

THERE is a tiger near Chintagoonta, Madras, who has, within a year or two, eaten more than two hundred natives, and is still at it.

LOVE LIGHTENS LABOR.

A good wife rose from her bed one morn,
And thought, with a nervous dread,
Of the piles of clothes to be washed, and more
Than a dozen mouths to be fed.
There's the meals to get for the men in the field,
And the children to fix away
To school, and the milk to be skimmed and churned,
And all to be done this day.

It had rained in the night, and all the wood
Was wet as it could be;
There were puddings and pies to bake, besides
A loaf of cake for tea.
And the day was hot, and her aching head
Throbbed wearily as she said:
"If maidens but knew what good wives know
They would be in no haste to wed!"

"Jenole, what do you think I told Ben Brown?"
Called the farmer from the well;
And a flush crept up to his bronzed brow,
And his eyes half bashfully fell;
"It was this," he said—and coming near,
He smiled and, stooping down,
Kissed her cheek—"'Twas this; that you were the best
And the dearest wife in town!"

The farmer went back to the field, and the wife,
In a smiling and absent way,
Sang sna ches of tender little songs
She'd not sung for many a day.
And the pain in her head was gone, and the clothes
Were white as the foam of the sea;
Her bread was light and her butter was sweet,
And as golden as it could be.

"Just think," the children all called in a breath,
"Tom Wood has run off to sea!
He wouldn't, I know, if he only had
As happy a home as we."
The night came down and the good wife smiled
To herself as she softly said:
"'Tis so sweet to labor for those we love;
It's not strange that maids will wed!"

FAREWELL.—WELCOME.

MR. EDITOR: I was much pleased with the suggestion of a late correspondent in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE that "Post Oak had another side, which should be sketched by some competent hand." Recent occurrences induce your humble correspondent to feel sensibly that there is another side to Post Oak.

How suggestive of the sweet sadness of Christian parting is St. Paul's farewell: "When he kneeled down and prayed with them all, and they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck and kissed him." There were hearts knit together in love, cemented by the strong ties of Christian affinity. Drawn together thus, no wonder it was deeply affecting to part. The relation of pastor and people is very endearing. Such it has been for two years with the writer, and it seemed to strengthen to the last; and it would seem cruel to sever these ties and rend these endearing attachments, but for the demonstrated fact that the itinerant economy is a chosen means of heaven of spreading scriptural holiness. Wonderful and glorious have been the fruits of the system. A mutual, heartfelt farewell is sadly sweet. Such was the recent parting of the Minden pastor and people. Two years have brought about many scenes and associations. But now, farewell, veteran soldier, your warfare is nearly done! Farewell, "elect lady"—and we might give it the plural; your deeds are as "ointment poured forth!" Farewell, young disciple; the contest waxes hotter. "Bind thy sandals on thy feet" and persevere. "Fight the good fight of faith." And respectful and respected, kind-hearted sinner, too, farewell. God in mercy has spared you. You have been taught and warned, both publicly and privately. May not that "labor, in the Lord, be in vain." Dear Christian brethren, we were fed and feasted together at the same altar; we raised our voices together in the same swelling anthem, till earth seemed akin to heaven; we have rallied and encountered the foe, and held the field as victors; we have mingled our shouts with those of the newborn. Now we say farewell!—From another you will receive the "bread of life." May he go in and out before you as a man of God, and in due time may he "return with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." I say to each, I say to all affectionately—farewell!

Preachers—Methodist—ought to become used to moving. So they are. And as sad as it is to say farewell, and as great as are the sacrifices, hardships and exposures, yet a hearty, cordial, speaking welcome, such as we are now receiving from the dear brethren and sisters of old Morean street, mitigates the pangs of farewell, and augurs good—is truly cheering and encouraging. With house, furniture and every appliance and requisite for housekeeping, including supplies, all at hand and arranged neatly and tidily—O how pleasant! I might mention names, but their works speak more than words of fulsome praise. Mrs. W. and myself have for this day and a half been prying around and trying to imagine something requisite for housekeeping that is not here, and positively, with all of an experienced itinerant's acumen and ingenuity, and his wife's more penetrating sagacity, we can think of nothing. If Paul had had such an outfit, how he must have preached and worked. From a cooking stove, neat and new, to a nutmeg grater, all is complete. Why the salt cellars are even filled with salt, and coffee is parched from the store room, and the coffee mill is screwed to its wonted place, there, in circular motion, to grind out the refreshing liquid. Well, what poor, unworthy itinerant could have hoped for such? Brethren and sisters, in the name of the Lord I salute you! Thank you, and thank the Lord that he put it in your hearts to "be thus minded." As we, of you, receive "temporal things," may you, of us, receive doubly of "spiritual."—And may there be such a sympathy and accord of feeling, and concord of effort, that it may be said of Zion: "Arise and shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord hath risen upon thee."

Finally, to one I say farewell! To the other, greeting!

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 20, 1869.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

A letter from Rev. J. Bancroft, dated Mobile, Alabama, January 25, 1869, says:

"I know you will rejoice with me when I tell you that we have Dr. Lovick Pierce with us. He arrived in our city last week, and occupied the pulpit of Franklin street church yesterday (Sabbath) morning and night.

"Both sermons were marked by peculiar force and power, and I venture to say that there were but very few in attendance who did not resolve, by the grace of God, to do better. He promised to deliver a lecture on Tuesday night, in the same pulpit, on the "Wants of the Church." On Thursday he preaches at Saint Francis street church, and will also occupy that pulpit twice next Sabbath, and at night preach at St. Paul's. He is truly "a wonder unto many," and I pray that his visit to our city may result in a stirring of the churches, and in the conviction and conversion of sinners.

"Dr. Hamilton has somewhat improved in health since Conference, and is remarkably abundant in labors, though suffering much with asthma. Dr. Dorman was in the pulpit yesterday, and was able to conclude the services. He thinks he is improving.

"Brother Jas. A. Heard, our presiding elder, has held three quarterly meetings in the city, and has got a good start.

"Brother A. S. Andrews has commenced his work at St. Francis street, and is hoping for success.

"God grant that this may be a year of remarkable spiritual power among us.

"I am here, as you know, in the midst of the scenes of my childhood and youth, and I trust that as I preach "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God," in the pulpit of the Franklin street church and elsewhere, that the great Head of the Church may place his seal upon my labors.

"Fraternally yours,

"J. BANCROFT."

BIGOTRY.

"And John answered him saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbade him, because he followeth not us. But Jesus said, Forbid him not; for there is no man that shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is on our part."

This quotation presents us with a strong instance of sectarian exclusiveness and arrogant bigotry, and the Master's equally strong and pointed treatment of it. I suppose no people ever presented a stronger example of close corporationist than the ancient Jews. They understood that the Messiah, and the mercy he came to reveal, were Jewish monopolies, intended for their exclusive benefit. The disciples, until more fully illuminated, were no exceptions to this narrow and exclusive spirit, of which we have a notable example in the passage here quoted. They acknowledged, in their narration of the matter, that they saw one "casting out devils." That was certainly a good work. It was a work which Christ often wrought, and a work he commanded the disciples themselves to perform—"cast out devils." Certainly they must have been pleased to see one doing so praiseworthy a deed. But not only was this "one" casting out devils, but, said the disciples, he was doing it "in thy name." What higher or more rightful authority could any man claim as the warrant for his work than this? This would seem to be a most satisfactory instance of well-doing—one that would have called forth the hearty commendation and "God speed you" of the disciples. But no—bigotry looked on with scowling and jaundiced eye, and exclaimed: "This is an infringement of our patent. We have the monopoly of the devil casting out business. This is irregular. This man must be arrested unless he connects himself with us, and becomes of our corporation, and does business under the style of our company. Better let devils possess unhappy victims, better let evil continue, and good go undone, than to recognize this irregularity, and permit men to work, even good works, outside of our organization." We see how the Saviour met and rebuked and "forbade" this narrowness—this bigotry. Well would it have been for suffering innocence—for the church and for the world—if his imperative "Forbid him not" could have sounded down the centuries and over the nations.

Alas! how much of this Christless, this Christ-forbidden bigotry and sectarian intolerance still remains to frown unmannerly upon good men and true, working, with whatever ability they may, to glorify God and bless the world. "True," says the bigot, "you have gathered thousands of congregations of faithful men; true, you have thousands of zealous and self-denying ministers; you have hundreds of thousands of God fearing people, and multitudes of children training for holiness and heaven." "What then?" "This: you do not 'follow us;' you are not a church. We deny your authority to do good—to cast out devils. All those edifices you have built, and professedly dedicated to God, are not churches. They are only 'meeting houses.' You are no 'church'—only a 'sect'—and your preachers have no right to do good, apart from our authority and our modes. We forbid you, unless you follow us. We are right. The measure of absurdity is the distance from us."

THE Papal government, it seems, is not satisfied with the execution of two of the men who aided in blowing up the Zouave Barracks. Two others are still lying under sentence of death, and five are doomed to the galleys for life. The Italian people are presenting petitions to their government, calling for some effort to obtain a remission of the death sentence; but it is not easy to see what the Italian government can do. An appeal from that quarter is not likely to have much influence with the pope or his advisers.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

ARMIN B. HAWKINS was born in Spartanburg district, South Carolina, October 23, 1793, and departed this life in Pickens county, Alabama, December 7, 1868, aged seventy-five years, one month and fourteen days.

My mother was converted and joined the church in early life, and up to her decease showed the genuineness of her faith by a godly walk and pious conversation. She was the mother of and raised ten children—five sons and five daughters—five of whom she outlived. She was the kindest and best of all mothers.

When I entered the traveling connection and started to my first appointment, north of this place, fourteen years ago, the kiss she impressed upon my cheek, her counsel to me to go and work in my Lord's vineyard, and her prayers which followed after me—which I thought might be the last, for she was then the subject of severe affliction—time and change and death can never remove from my memory. O how a parent's counsel and advice and prayers strengthen the heart of a young man just entering upon the office and work of a minister of Jesus Christ.

My mother had a very exalted opinion of all true preachers, and held them in much esteem for their work's sake, and would have been willing for all her sons to have been ministers. The kindness of her heart and the liberality of her hands were only bounded by her worldly means. Nothing like covetousness ever found a place in her heart, nor did sordid selfishness receive any countenance at her hands. She would kindly rebuke even the outcroppings of these wicked dispositions when seen in her children or others. She patiently bore injuries, by whomsoever inflicted and of whatever character, and always entertained an extraordinary forgiving spirit, adopting the maxim: "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."

She was always delighted with Christian association, particularly that of ministers, and to hear them preach the Gospel was always food to her soul. Two of her grandsons have recently entered the ministry. She was as much pleased as if they had been her own children.

Though her early educational advantages were very limited, yet her judgment was good, and her counsel in most matters within her purview well to be followed. While young and healthy she was active and industrious, looking well to the wants of her household, white and colored; and if any were sick she was frequently both doctor and nurse.

As a professor of religion and member of the church her life and example were unreproachable.—Though my mother, I say it candidly, if she ever spoke wrong or acted wrong, it was unintentional—an error of the head, not of the heart—for I believe purer motives never dwelt in the breast of any human being. And, notwithstanding all this, she was always what might be called a doubting Christian. She was fearful, not of God or his faithfulness, but of herself. The language of her heart was:

Just and holy is thy name;
I am all unrighteousness;
False and full of sin I am;
Thou art full of grace and truth.

For twenty years past she was the subject of deep affliction, first being crippled by a fall, which produced a spinal disease, and then a slight cough, and finally, a few weeks before her death, a slight dropsy of the chest and swelling of the lower extremities, which, on the 7th of December last, took her to her eternal rest and home. I was at Meridian, attending our Conference, but receiving a dispatch, I hurried home, but was too late to see her pass away. The spirit had flown from its mortal enclosure. I felt, for the first time, what it was to lose a good mother. May her sweet spirit rest upon me and all her children who are living. An aged and afflicted father, the companion of her youth, with whom she had journeyed for upward of fifty years, still lingers upon the stage of life, waiting the appointed time till his change come.

We committed her body to the grave on the 9th of December—Rev. U. L. Thompson performing the burial service—where, dear mother, undisturbed shall be thy rest, till this mortal shall put on immortality, and death itself be swallowed up of life. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; from henceforth, yea saith the Spirit, they rest from their labors, and their works they do follow them."

G. HAWKINS.

AMANDA S. AGNEW, consort of Dr. A. W. Agnew, and daughter of Jas T. and Mary Burdine, was born in Pickens county, Alabama, March 28, 1831, and departed this life, at her residence, December 15, 1868, aged thirty-seven years, eight months and seventeen days.

At nine years of age she made a profession of religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and always maintained an unblemished Christian character up to her death. Trained by the hand of that devoted and excellent mother, Sister Mary Burdine, deceased, her life was one of great uniformity, almost unruffled by the troubles and perplexities of the busy world.

In all the relations of life—as a member of church, a wife, daughter and mother—she had few equals. As a neighbor and acquaintance she was admired by all who knew her. She was unobtrusive in her manners, quiet and even in her disposition. Her last illness was long and distressing, being afflicted with heart disease, which finally resulted in general dropsy, which hurried her, in the prime of life, to her eternal home. But her death was as we might expect from a life of uniform piety toward God—calm, resigned, and willing to depart and be with Christ, her only regret being that she had to leave behind her devoted husband and three children, a daughter and two sons. May the kind hand of our indulgent heavenly Father, who gently led on the mother to the rest and glory of heaven, conduct the husband and dear children to the same haven of eternal repose, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest."

G. HAWKINS.

Died, on the morning of the 31st of December, 1868, Mrs. MARGARET McALPIN, in the sixty-sixth year of her age.

Her death occurred at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. William B. Hamberlin, near Edwards' Depot, Hinds county, Mississippi, under those calm and peaceful circumstances that ever attend the departure of those who sweetly fall asleep in Jesus.

An acquaintance of more than twenty years enables the writer to say that she was one of the most exemplary Christians he ever knew. Punctual in her attendance upon the public services of the sanctuary, ever in her place, when not providentially hindered, in class and prayer meeting, she exemplified the sentiment that glowed in the heart of the Psalmist when he said:—"How amiable are thy tabernacles, oh Lord of hosts!"—"a day in thy courts is more than a thousand." Rejoicing in the spirit of Christian unity, though much attached to the church of her choice, she loved the true followers of Christ wherever she found them, and deemed it a privilege to call them brethren.

She leaves a devoted daughter and some five or six grand-children to mourn their loss, while the church, together with a large circle of friends, are called to feel that a mother in Israel has fallen asleep in Jesus.

J. R.

The distant friends of the Rev. Samuel Armstrong, presiding elder of the Ouachita district, Louisiana Conference, will be grieved to learn of his sad bereavement in the decease of his youngest daughter, Eudora. She died in Vienna, Louisiana, surrounded by her immediate relatives, on the 9th day of November, 1868, after an illness of about two weeks. During its progress she seemed to have had a presentiment of her approaching dissolution, yet was remarkably submissive and uncomplaining.

Though just in the bloom of existence, with a bright future looming up before her, she yielded to the dread summons with extraordinary composure. A death, in the walks of private life, seldom produces so profound an impression as did hers among those who best knew and appreciated her worth.

Combining, in a high degree, gentleness of manners with sweetness of disposition, she had become the center of a large circle of admiring friends. A favorite with the elderly, she was no less beloved by the young, for whom she appeared to possess an especial attraction. We would not, in this brief tribute to her memory, assert her immunity from the common frailties of our nature; still her defects of character, whatever they may have been, were so veiled by her many graces and sterling virtues as to pass unobserved.

But neither youth, goodness nor untiring attention could avert the decree of Providence. She has left a vacant chair around the parental hearthstone which the treasures of this world cannot fill. The hearts of kindred and friends are darkened with sorrow, but not as those who are without hope. Whilst they, sad and weary, pursue their destined course on earth, they confidently believe that the dear, departed Eudora dwells with angels in heaven.

A FRIEND.

DEATH OF MRS. JOSEPH JONES.

On the 4th of December, 1868, in New Orleans, Mrs. Caroline Jones departed this life. She was the wife of Dr. Joseph Jones, of that city, and daughter of Rev. S. S. Davis, D. D., of Augusta, Georgia. It gives us great pain to make this sad announcement; for never was there a lady more beloved by her numerous friends, more deserving of love, than she who has now been called in the prime of her days. Truly, too, has the church been bereft of one of her purest ornaments.

About one year ago Mrs. Jones, then in feeble health, with a young infant in her arms, was compelled at midnight to flee from her burning house in the city of Nashville. So rapid was the progress of the flames that the family barely escaped with their lives. This untimely exposure in the depth of winter, without the ordinary protection against the cold, laid the foundation of disease which culminated in her death. Although from that hour a stranger to the blessing of health, she nevertheless, with cheerful, self-sacrificing devotion to duty, continued to attend her household and watch over her children. Early in November last she was prostrated by disease in its most acute form, and was compelled to endure great physical suffering. Her mind, however, continued throughout as bright and clear as it always had been in her days of health, and her heart was tenderly submissive to the will of God, for which submission a long experience of the sweetest trust in her heavenly Father had prepared her. Her language often was: "I lie humbly at the foot of the cross, reposing upon the merits of my precious Redeemer." She indeed committed herself unreservedly into his hands, not only submitting, and apparently purposely indulging, a single wish as to the issue, but leaving all to the disposal of her Lord. In the morning of her life she had given herself to God in a public profession of her faith, under the pastorate of her honored father, in the Presbyterian church of Camden, South Carolina.—Southern Presbyterian and Index.

A HEROINE.—The Brussels correspondent of an English paper says a subscription has been opened in that city in favor of a poor crippled girl named Eliza Spillmark, who, to save her sister from a week's imprisonment, to which she had been condemned for some slight offense, went there instead of the offender. The fraud was detected after she had suffered the punishment, and when brought before the judge she was sentenced to three months' imprisonment, which, however, she will not escape. Her answer to the question what induced her to substitute herself for her sister was, that being a cripple, she could not maintain her aged mother, which her sister had done for a long time, "and therefore," she added, "it was better for me to go to prison, and let her be free."

THE Privy Council of England has decided, on the appeal from the judgment of the Court of Arches, that kneeling and prostrating before the consecrated elements by the use of lighted candles are ceremonical.

JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY.

Isabella L. Bird is writing the Sunday Magazine, England, a series of papers on John and Charles Wesley. From paper number one we extract as follows:

Before John Wesley returned from Georgia to England some influence unknown to us produced in him an overwhelming conviction that he was yet a stranger to the full salvation offered in Christ. Then he who went forth with high hopes of attaining complete sanctification, wrote in bitter sorrow and unrest: "I have learned what I the least of all suspected, that I, who went to America to convert others, was never myself truly converted to God." Having become acquainted, on the voyage, with some Moravian brethren, in whom he beheld a faith and holiness such as he had never witnessed, he turned in his distress to Pastor Bohler, whose conversations yet further convinced him of his unregenerate and unbelieving state. Then followed a period of agonized strivings after light and faith, of painful questionings and reasonings, each day wrapping him round with deeper darkness and hopelessness. When Bohler spoke to him of passing from death unto life as an instantaneous work, he met the assertion with a denial; yet his own subsequent study of the word showed him few, if any, instances of conversion so slow as that of Paul. Overcome by Scripture testimony, he next sheltered himself in the belief that instantaneous conversions, like miracles, belonged to the first age of the church. He was beaten out of his retreat by the evidence of several trustworthy men, who testified to their own instantaneous translation from guilt and fear to joy and the sense of forgiveness. Wesley's disputations were now over, but not his distresses. Like the blind, he believed that light existed; but no link of the day-spring from on high had ever shone upon his soul. The religious experiences of Charles Wesley, at this time, were almost identical—with this exception, that in the midst of his distress he was strongly averse to what he termed the new faith." But after a great struggle he suddenly entered into peace. Three days afterward the strong spirit of John as suddenly and strangely underwent the same great change. Never had more honest spirits more literally agonized to enter in at the straight gate. Of this singular period in the life of Charles Wesley a majority of his hymns are the fruit. His were not ordinary religious experiences, and the tone of the hymns is not ordinary. How far they have been instrumental in producing similar experiences in thousands since it is difficult to say. Immediately after what he always regarded as his "conversion," John Wesley visited the Moravian settlements in Germany, where he came in contact with a matured and intelligent piety, and was further instructed in the doctrine of justification by faith. From the Moravians John learned much—the recognition of the social intention of the Gospel, and the value of hymns as the nutriment and index of a vigorous faith. It was more by the force of race and circumstances that Methodism so soon lost the German likeness of these Moravian societies, of which it was the mighty offshoot, and earned for itself the distinction of being the most fervid and emotional of our religious bodies.

On John Wesley's return he and his brother, convinced that they had now found the true light, began to preach immediate repentance and immediate salvation. Very shortly the churches were closed against them, and on April 2, 1739, John Wesley went forth into the highways and hedges, and crossed the Ecclesiastical Rubicon by preaching from a little hill near Bristol, to an audience of three thousand persons. The courage which could lead a forlorn hope, or give the word of command in a sinking ship, is inferior to that which led the two Wesleys, with the refined and scholarly atmosphere of Oxford about them, to mount wagons or tables by the roadside, give out hymns and address crowds. The very doctrines they taught were known only as "fanaticism." The mode of teaching was obnoxious to cultivated natures.—The hymns, which were already beginning to assert their power, were opened with "the song of the peasant." Yet it was "field preaching" and that alone, that could raise the dead in sin; and when out of every thrilled and tumultuous assembly Christ rescued his own, and the first men fell down in mortal agonies, out of which great joy and holiness were born, and a Gospel free from metaphysical shackles was preached to the poor, the whole world was roused.

From the day when John Wesley defiated the proprieties of ecclesiastical conventionalism, by preaching on the Somersetshire hillside, his life became one long marvel. One brain in his head, for forty years, beat down storms of opposition, which never fully spent their force till both brothers were gathered to their rest. Perhaps the least felt of the many trials to which he was exposed was the storm of persecution which the preaching aroused. Throughout the land the appearance of either of the brothers was the signal for disorder and violence. Preaching-houses were gutted and burned, the preachers assailed with stones and other missiles; they were waylaid and beaten, their property destroyed, their clothes torn to pieces. Even in Cornwall, where their labors made the desert places glad, their meeting houses were burned as bonfires, and the gentle poet, Charles, on several occasions narrowly escaped with his life. In Yorkshire the fanaticism of the people, hounded on by the clergy, rose to such a height that for many a year the brothers itinerated among its fierce population at the peril of their lives. Even in the metropolis the fury against these uncompromising evangelists for a long time defied the authority of the law. There is a triumphant hymn, very dear to Methodists, associated with one memorable day in White-Chapel, when the word on Wesley's lips being sharp as the sword of the Spirit, a mob, after vainly endeavoring to disperse the enthralled crowd by driving cattle among the women and children, assailed the preacher with stones, one of which cut him severely on the forehead. Yet all the more earnestly discoursed he of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come, as he wiped the flowing blood away. For thirty years the history of Methodism is the history of unremitting brutal violence, accompanying Gospel triumphs such as have never been witnessed in our land.

Are the Jesuits Coming to America?

The decree of the Spanish provisional government, abolishing the order and confiscating the property of the Jesuits in Spain, has been followed by a second, ordering the sale of several convents to pay the current local expenses of cities in which the octroi duties, or taxes levied at the gates on garden truck and such imports from the surrounding country, have been abolished. The whole action of the new government in regard to religious matters has been eminently sensible and practical, and promises an easy and early solution of difficult questions of the church status.

The early demands of the people for the abolition of all religious orders, and the language of the late decree, reciting that it was in accordance with the pragmatic sanction of the government and a former act of the papacy, have occasioned some misconception in the minds of the people of this country. A clergyman of this city lately congratulated his congregation on the enunciation of the decree, by declaring that "it was a grand word to utter in an American church that the Jesuits have left Spain." Another assured his hearers that the supremacy of the Catholic Church in Spain was at an end. Both ideas are erroneous. The new government has not made the mistake of exiling the Jesuit priests in person, though in Barcelona, where the people are radically republican, some talk of doing this was heard in the early hours of the revolution. The temporal power of the papacy in Spain, as in all Europe, except the States of the Church, has been broken, it is to be hoped forever; but the Catholic Church still has fifteen million blind followers in Spain, and twenty-eight thousand zealous and influential priests to propagate its doctrines. No other church can be said to have a foothold there as yet; and the field is a good one for missionary labors, but care should be taken that the broader one at home, in which the Catholics are so vigorous and successful, shall not, in the meantime, be neglected.

The Jesuits came into power in Spain with the Bourbons, with whom they have been simultaneously abolished. A Jesuit priest obtained, by the most infamous means, the succession of a Bourbon to the throne. Under the Bourbons they ruled Spain without dispute for sixty-seven years. During that time they absorbed one-fifth of the entire real estate of the kingdom, and doubled its taxes, and through their infamous Inquisition burned and sent to the galleys over three thousand persons. So great were the atrocities committed by them that Carlos III was induced by his prime minister, Aranda, to sanction their banishment. On the night of April 2, 1767, every Jesuit in Spain was seized in accordance with the decree, carried secretly to the coast, and the whole of them were shipped on transports for Civita Vecchia, the port of Rome. The pope refused to let them land, knowing they were a pestiferous set, and declining to give up his small dominions to the ecclesiastical refugees of all Europe. They tried Parma, but the duke, instead of allowing them to land, sent his Jesuit subjects to join them. Naples was tried in vain. The whole body of Jesuits were carried about from port to port in this way for three months, dying by hundreds daily, and were finally thrust ashore at Corsica, to nearly starve. Carlos was induced to make them a per diem allowance each of two reals—thirty-five cents of our currency. They lived thus in most horrible exile for six years. At length the pope, to purchase peace with Spain, agreed to abolish the order, and did so on July 21, 1773, by the enunciation of an apostolic brief—a document differing from a bull only in that it is more concise and differently sealed. The Corsican exiles, thus bereft of ecclesiastical authority and much reduced in numbers, were considered harmless, and allowed to return to Spain. But they did not prove harmless; there have been no burnings of heretics since, but in some way the order has been enabled to retain its organization, accumulate property and wield a great influence.

Spain of to-day cannot afford to be as arbitrary as Spain of a hundred years ago, and no attempt will probably be made to expel the Jesuits bodily. But deprived of property, their organization destroyed, and themselves most decidedly unpopular, it is questionable if they can remain there. The interests of order and church will probably carry them elsewhere—why not to this country? France, England, Italy and Austria have repudiated and would spurn them; American policy heretofore has welcomed all kinds of emigrants, and it is by no means certain that even this class would be refused admission to any of our ports, even if they should come in offensively large crowds, and at the instance and by the order of their government. It is fortunate, for America, that they have not been banished, for the chances are that they would come here. It is by no means utterly improbable, when the present pope dies, and Italy takes, as by the treaty of 1866 she may, possession of Rome, and puts an end to all his temporal power, that the new head of the church will remove the chair of St. Peter to some part of this continent. Stranger revolutions have happened in the last ten years.—New York Times.

THE DECISION OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL ON RITUALISM.—The English papers bring the details of the judgment of the Judiciary Committee in the case of Martin vs Mackonochie. This judgment is rendered upon an appeal from a decision on two points by the Court of Arches. The case involves the ritualistic question in some of its most important features. Mr. Mackonochie was charged, first, with the elevation of the elements in the Lord's Supper during the prayer of consecration; second, with kneeling in the course of the prayer; third, with the use of lighted candles on the communion table during celebration; fourth, with the use of incense; fifth, with the mixing of water with the wine in the Lord's Supper. Mr. Mackonochie disconnued the elevation of the elements before the judgment of the Court of Arches, and was admonished by the court not to resume it. Incense and mixing of water with the wine were condemned. The use of lighted candles on the Lord's table during celebration was allowed, and kneeling at the consecration was pronounced to be an indifferent matter, which should be submitted to the bishop. On these two points an appeal was made to the Judicial Committee, and their decision now is that lighted candles on the Lord's table during the celebration are unlawful, and that kneeling at the consecration is inconsistent with the Rubric.

Dr. Pusey writes a letter to the Times, in which he complains that the Judicial Committee, in their judgment in the Mackonochie case, have not interpreted the Rubric as to kneeling at the holy communion grammatically. Comparing the last with former judgments, where matters of doctrine were involved, Dr. Pusey thinks there is good ground for "the world" to accuse the highest court of appeal of "playing fast and loose"—"loose" whenever it is the question of allowing any matter of faith to be disbelieved; "fast" when it is the question of not allowing anything to be believed which popular prejudice disbelieves.

GOOD FOR SPAIN.—The following is the order of the provisional government for a Protestant chapel in Madrid:

"The minister of grace and justice has duly considered your petition for permission to erect a Protestant temple in this capital, and he has seen fit to authorize it. You can now proceed to its construction in such manner as shall conform to the municipal ordinances.

The Report of Commissioner Wells.

The New York Sun makes the following neat little abstract of the report of Commissioner Wells:

The report of the Special Commissioner of the Revenue for 1868 makes a closely-printed octavo pamphlet of over one hundred pages. From the mass of valuable matter it contains we extract the following interesting items:

From July 1, 1865, to December 1, 1868, one million natives of foreign countries have sought a permanent home in the United States. The specie they have brought with them is set down at $80 per head, or $80,000,000 in all; while their value to the country, as producers, is estimated at $500 per head or $500,000,000 in all; making a grand total of $580,000,000 which has been added from this source to the wealth of the country.

The increase of cotton manufactures has been, since 1865, thirty-two per cent.; and the amount of capital invested in the woolen manufacture is more than threefold now what it was in 1860.

The production of pig iron for 1868 was one million five hundred and fifty thousand tons, showing a steady annual increase, since 1863, of about eight per cent.

The export of petroleum for 1868 was ninty-four million gallons.

The amount of anthracite coal mined in 1868 was thirteen million five hundred thousand tons.

The crop of Indian corn was, in 1859, eight hundred and thirty million bushels; in 1868, one billion one hundred million bushels.

The cotton crop for 1868 9 is estimated at two million seven hundred thousand bales.

The tobacco crop for 1867 was two hundred and fifty million pounds.

Two thousand five hundred miles of new railroad were built in the United States in 1868, making the number of miles now in existence in the country over forty thousand. The total value of merchandise annually carried over these roads is $7,273,000,000. Six thousand miles of new telegraph wires have been put up during the past year.

Nearly all the individual States materially reduced their debt in 1868.

From these and similar facts, the commissioner concludes that our national wealth as a whole is increasing. He reckons, however, a number of influences adverse to our real prosperity. He goes into elaborate calculations to show that while the cost of living has increased, since 1860, seventy-eight per cent., wages have increased only from fifty to seventy per cent. As an illustration of the general principle, he shows that the wages which, in 1860, would purchase a barrel and a half of flour, now purchase only a barrel and a quarter. Hence, the laboring population are really not as well off as they were.

In regard to the customs duties and internal revenue taxes, the commissioner favors a greater simplification, and a reduction in the number of taxes imposed. He mentions a number of articles, such as salt, lumber, iron and coal, on which the taxes and duties should be as light as possible, in order to favor the industry of the country.

Of the national finances the commissioner speaks at some length, and gives figures to show that with proper economy our national debt can be reduced by $100,000,000 before the close of the next fiscal year, June 30, 1870.

In regard to the tariff, he advocates the imposition of duties with a view to income only, and severely condemns the protectionist policy, which has so many advocates, as exceedingly detrimental to American industry. He concludes by saying:

With these feelings and convictions, he would therefore prove untrue to his trust did he not here enter his most earnest protest against any further general increase of the tariff, but would, on the contrary, recommend:

1. An enlargement of the free list.

2. A reduction of some rates of duty, and as an exception an increase of a few others with a view to the increase of the revenue.

3. A reduction of some rates of duty with a view to an absolute abatement, on the simple ground that the reduction of a duty is the reduction of a tax, and that the most efficient method of protecting home industry is by the removal of obstacles in the form of taxes.

4. The conversion to the utmost possible extent of the present ad valorem duties into specific, as the only practicable method of insuring certainty and equality in the assessment of duties and the prevention of undervaluations, and the abrogation of the privilege which enables returning tourists to import, free of duty, an amount of goods corresponding to their real or supposed social position.

FARM AND GARDEN.

ORCHARD AND NURSERY.

Plant trees in those States where the season is sufficiently advanced to admit of it. At the North it is much better to wait until spring is well opened. Young, recently planted trees are often much injured by exposure to cold, dry winds, as they are unable to take up moisture to supply the waste by evaporation.

Grafting, for the same reason, should not be done too early. If the cions are put in just as the tree is starting into growth the chances of success are much greater.

Nursery trees, if frozen in transportation, as they are apt to be, are not likely to be injured if allowed to thaw very gradually. Cover the package with hay or straw, that the thawing may go on slowly.

Injured trees are to be attended to as soon as the trouble is discovered. If any limbs have been broken by storms, secure a smooth wound, as directed in the article on pruning on page fifty-seven.

Girdling by rabbits and mice may now be discovered. Most trees injured in this way may be saved by proper care. Draw up a mound of earth to completely cover the wound, or if the place be too high for this, bind on a generous plaster of clayey loam; if this be mixed with cow dung it will retain its moisture better. If the injury is very severe, grafts must be inserted to establish a connection between the bark below the wound, and that above it. Cut incisions with a chisel downward, below the wound, and upward, above it; then take twigs of the same kind of tree of the proper length, sharpen them to a wedge at each end, and insert the ends in the incisions; put grafting wax over the insertions, as in ordinary grafting.

CIONS.—Cut, if not already done, and preserved, as mentioned last month on page eight.

Pruning has sufficient said upon it in a special article on page fifty-seven. We omitted to mention there that thick white-lead paint is found to answer excellently as a covering for the wounds made in pruning. It may be colored with lamp black, to make it less conspicuous, or it may be made more like the color of the tree by using amber.

Washing with some alkaline wash is of great benefit to trees, as it removes parasitic growths, loosens old bark scales and dislodges insects. Home-made soft soap, thinned with water and put on with a brush, is one of the best applications, or a moderately strong lye of potash or soda-ash may be used. The effect is more satisfactory if the wash is used during a damp spell.

INSECTS.—Remove all eggs of the tent caterpillar before they hatch. Canker worms, or rather the insects of which they are the larva, come out of the ground as soon as it thaws. The females are wingless and must crawl up the trees, and upon this fact all the preventives depend. We have given some of these. Whatever places an impassable barrier to the ascent of the insect, without injury to the tree, will answer.—American Agriculturist.

FRUIT GARDEN.—Do all preparatory work that the weather will allow.

Blackberries and raspberries may be planted as soon as the ground can be worked, as they start very early; the shoots will be much broken in handling them if delayed until they have pushed.

Dwarf trees—and none others should be in the fruit garden—may have the general care given to trees in the orchard; being small, they are more accessible, and it is inexcusable to neglect them.

Strawberries.—Some good cultivators prefer to set them as soon as the frost is out of the ground, while others prefer to wait until later.

Grape-vines which were neglected may be pruned in mild weather. Cuttings made from wood that has been exposed all winter do not usually succeed so well as from that cut in the fall and properly cared for during the winter.—American Agriculturist.

WORK IN THE HORTICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.—In arranging plans for spring work, do not lay out more than can be done thoroughly.—Amateurs especially are apt to grasp at too much and take up a heavier load than they can carry. Laying out and planting are not all, but only the beginning; the labor and cost of cultivation and maintenance are to be taken into the account. "Walks and Talks" discusses the size of farms, and his remarks apply to the garden, whether it be one for ornament or for use. Orders for trees and seeds sent the present month are more likely to be satisfactorily filled than if delayed until planting time.—American Agriculturist.

RECIPES.

GINGER SNAPS.—One pint molasses and one cup butter boiled together; when cold, add half a cup of ginger, one tablespoonful soda, and flour to roll; roll thin and bake.

BREAKFAST ROLLS.—Make a hole in two quarts of flour, and pour in one pint of curd milk that has been boiled, with a cup of butter melted in it. Add a quarter of a cup of sugar and half a cup of good yeast. Let it stand, without mixing, two or three hours. Salt to the taste. Then knead it, and set it to rise a few hours; then mould it, and rise again in the pans before baking. The rolls require about fifteen minutes in a quick oven.

PEA SOUP.—Soak a quart of split peas in cold water over night. Then put into a pot, with two gallons of water, six cold-boiled potatoes, two onions well sliced, one pound of pork, or an old ham bone, or one pound of dried beef. Cover very closely; boil very slowly for five hours. Season to the taste with pepper and salt, if the pork does not give enough, add one tablespoonful of celery seed, which imparts a fine flavor. Serve the pork on a platter, with vegetables, after the soup.

BONED TURKEY.—This favorite dish for evening parties may be thus prepared: "Boil a turkey in as little water as may be, until the bones can be easily separated from the meat. Remove all the skin; slice, mixing together the light and dark parts. Season with salt and pepper. Take the liquid in which the turkey was boiled, having kept it warm; pour it on the meat; mix well. Shape it like a loaf of bread, wrap it in a cloth, and press with a heavy weight for a few hours.—When served up, it is cut in thin slices. Chickens can be prepared in the same way.

"WHO ATE ROGER WILLIAMS?" This question is asked in Steele's "Fourteen Weeks in Chemistry," which gives these curious facts:

The truth that animal matter passes from the animal back to the vegetable, and from the vegetable to the animal kingdom again, received a curious illustration not long since. For the purpose of erecting a suitable monument in memory of Roger Williams, the founder of Rhode Island, his private burying ground was searched for the graves of himself and wife. It was found that everything had passed into oblivion. The shape of the coffins could only be traced by a black line of carbonaceous matter. The rusting hinges and nails, and a round wooden knot, alone remained in one grave; while a single lock of braided hair was found in the other. Near the grave stood an apple tree. This had sent down two main roots into the very presence of the coffined dead. The larger root pushing its way to the precise spot occupied by the skull of Roger Williams, had made a turn, as if passing round it, and followed the direction of the backbone to the hips. Here it divided into two branches, sending one along each leg to the heels, when both turned upward to the toes. One of these roots formed a slight crook at the knee, which made the whole bear a striking resemblance to the human form. There were the graves, but their occupants had disappeared; the bones even had vanished. There stood the thief—the guilty apple tree—caught in the very act of robbery. The spoliation was complete. Roger Williams had passed into an apple tree. The elements had been absorbed by the roots, transmuted into woody fibre, which could now be burned as fuel, or carved into ornaments, or bloom into fragrant blossoms, which delighted the eye of the passer by, and scattered the sweetest perfume of spring; more than that, had been converted into luscious fruit, which, from year to year, had been gathered and eaten. How pertinent, then, is the question, "Who ate Roger Williams?"

THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.—A German linguist, Professor Carl Neuman, of Munich, it is stated, has discovered from the Chinese year books that a company of Buddhist priests entered the continent of America, via Alaska, a thousand years before Columbus, and explored thoroughly and intelligently the Pacific borders, penetrating into the Aztec territory, or the "land of Fusang," so called after the Chinese name of the Mexican aloe.

IT IS stated that more than one-third of all the births that took place in Paris last year were illegitimate. Even this, however, would hardly bring Paris to an equality with Vienna in regard to illegitimacy.

SOCKS versus SIRUP.

The Memphis Christian Advocate copies our item in regard to Mr. Beasley's fine remittance of sugar and sirup from the Lafourche country, and adds: "Hereby we are reminded to give thanks, sincere and cordial, to a very kind sister in Hay. wood county, for a present of a pair of excellent woolen socks. Ah, Dr., when turkeys, oranges, sugar and sirup have been consumed, we shall still enjoy our present—one, too, in the old-fashioned Methodist style."

We are surprised at such a melancholy reflection: "When sugar and sirup are consumed." We never eat sirup that way. When we eat sirup we eat it. How about the socks? Is there no end to them—then what? When both socks and sirup are gone—why, then, we shall be even. One can't have everything. If you have sirup you can't have socks. But as we have not worn a pair of woolen socks for twenty-five years, that does not disturb us. This is a warm country, and on a pinch a man could go a while without socks and not suffer greatly. No, we have the sirup, and we pity all who have it not. By the by, we expect soon a barrel of cocoanuts from Honduras, and possibly a bunch of bananas. Our lines are gradually extending. "The world is my parish" is the true Wealeyan idea. Then what offset will the Tennessee brother have? Another pair of woolen socks, possibly. Ah, beware of those socks! They have cost many a man his quarterage. People give socks and ease their conscience; they get uneasy and give more socks. We have known a young preacher almost smothered with socks, thick woolen socks, socks upon socks, and yet come to Conference without having received one-half his quarterage. Deliver us from book-marks and socks.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

After the lapse of nearly two thousand years the history of that wonderful being, Jesus of Nazareth, commands the admiration of the most cultivated minds of the civilized world. Though stranger still is it that the Gospels are read by the unlearned with the greatest relish and constancy. It would seem quite incredible that a book of so few pages could contain enough to employ human thought for so long a period. This interest does not abate. Every month some new contribution is made toward realizing the words, actions and character of the "Son of Man." This simple continuance of unfailing interest proves the fullness and variety of these marvelous writings. The question starts up at once: by what charm or wisdom could these untrained men accomplish more than Plato has done in his picture of Socrates. That majesty, simplicity and naturalness of style which constitute the Gospels the most philosophic book that was ever written, that accuracy and completeness of detail, that selection and grouping of incidents, which realize the very action and spirit of their great hero, would be wonderful enough in one writer, but is still more inexplicable in four. But that these four distinct treatises were written by four persons is easier to conceive than that any one writer could have produced four such books, moving so nearly together side by side in the main narrative, and yet be so individual and different in their facts and words. This forces the mind to the only solution: that there must have been a central figure, one illustrious being, about whom these four evangelists revolved and from whom they derived their light and wisdom, as the movements and variations of the surrounding spheres necessitated the presence of a planet to the mind of Le Verrier.

The boundless wealth of the imagery, of the reasoning and the sentiment which they display can only be accounted for by the reality, as by them affirmed, of their living Lord. This reality does not, however, lessen the wonder of the Gospels as an artistic creation, for that is surpassingly great in itself. No writer has approached their power of transcribing from the life to the page. A very able counseller, one long accustomed to the analysis and balancing of evidence, remarked, a few days since, that he could but wish there had been a Boswell present to give all the minutiæ of that wonderful life. But certainly we have a more distinct and accurate conception of Jesus of Nazareth than we have of the great English moralist. The height and dress, the color of the hair and eyes, the tone and compass of the voice, the thousand little things which we desire to fill out our idea of the Saviour, these, strange to say, find no place in the biographies of the evangelists. The very items which we should suppose their wonder would have naturally fastened on and magnified are wholly omitted. This silence, as wonderful as any part of their speech, has deprived men of the very elements of any visible representation of the Lord, and by so much checks any natural idolatry of form. Even Rome, disposed, as she is and ever has been, to make the kingdom of Christ a visible one, has not been able to discover, amid the rubbish of tradition, the slightest hint of those personal lines of the form of Jesus. At first thought this may seem to have limited our pleasure in contemplating him, but the effect is exactly the opposite: the imagination, unfettered, paints the Saviour with its own fresher colors, and blends the whole expression of his person, as before and as after the resurrection, in one glorious body of perfected humanity. Which should the evangelists have described, his first or his second presence—as one "without form and comeliness," or as clad in the invested glory of the holy mount, or in the abiding luster of his ascending form? Either would have been deficient, and all would have seemed contradictory. This complex impression made upon the minds of these writers is probably another reason why they did not attempt to reproduce it. The higher and greater reason of all this omission can only be in the mind of the Holy Spirit, without whom it was simply impossible that these books could have been written at all. Such accurate memory of difficult and to them unfathomable passages, as are many of the utterances of the Saviour, without supernatural aid, we cannot suppose. It is far easier for us to conceive of this divine assistance as having been afforded than to understand the whole as the achievement of unaided, natural, unlettered men. If they had been lettered to any such high degree as such a feat would imply, it would have been by slow processes, and they would have been universally known in their day by other literary performances.

The age of Jesus is another point difficult to realize, for he was in the earliest maturity of life. When he died probably every hair was untouched by time, and there was no decay or abatement, or scarcely as yet the settled development of his physical powers. He still looked to be the son—"is not this the son of Joseph?" "his mother and his brethren are they not here with us?"—just moving out in his majority, according to Jewish ideas of manhood—not as yet separated in their thoughts from family surroundings. That he should speak with such power and authority—whence came it? It was indeed a surpassing truth that had burst upon them in all its blinding splendor. Now at this distance of time we can hardly support the glory of this vision—this visit of God in person to the earth. No marvel that they were filled with endless questionings. Every word he spake only gave way to some other word of equal, may be of greater, weight, and from his lips there gushed perennially a tide of gracious truth. Whence that wondrous stream?—Did it take its rise in the brain and soul of a man? But his word was charged with more than wisdom—it gave life, it cured the leper, it formed an eye or a limb, it commanded an audible response from the unseen world. To look on him as the Creator was difficult; but it was more so to regard him only as a man. His genuine humility and self-forgetfulness could not be counterfeit, and yet he dared to say: "Thy sins be forgiven thee." He, of all, obeyed and feared God, and threatened blasphemy with eternal fire, and yet he received the homage and worship of those who were habitually with him.

To this conclusion they came who were the constant observers and companions of Jesus: that he was the Son of God—as powerful, as wise, as good and as holy as any conception they ever had of God himself. To this fact he himself at last brought them: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father;" "I and my Father are one." Upon this issue he was crucified and to this truth his resurrection bore witness. And this is the great overruling fact of all the history of Jesus—the "Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

DECEASED.

MRS. NANCY TARKINGTON, of Franklin, Louisiana. The following note from her bereaved husband brings us the news of the death of this estimable lady. She died in the seventy-first year of her age. She had been a member of the Methodist Church for forty years, and is gathered "as a shock of corn cometh in its season."

"FRANKLIN, St. Mary Parish,
"January 7, 1869.

"MR. EDITOR: Please announce in your excellent paper the death of my wife, Mrs. Nancy Tarkington, which took place on the 24th inst., of typhoid pneumonia, after great suffering. From the first she told me that she would die. But, thank God, she was ready. She had nothing to fear. She admonished me to be also ready, for I did not know when the messenger would come for me.

"She has been a member of the Methodist Church for forty years.

"With much respect, I remain your obedient servant,

"J. TARKINGTON."

DR. NEWMAN'S "NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE."

The last observation we took of the Rev. Dr. he had collected a circle of twelve colored brethren about him, and was in the midst of them calling everybody to prayer—in view of the presidential election. We had but little notion at that time of the strong interest he had in the welfare of the country, more especially in the continuance of Radical control. A report of the Committee on Printing, made last week to the House of Representatives, discloses an item which should be taken, in connection with other symptoms, in estimating the zeal of the patriotic brother. This we give below. It will be seen that he received for printing legislative proceedings, in his New Orleans Advocate, $14,869. How far the State gets value received can be imagined when it is considered that the same laws and proceedings are printed in this city by two other papers at a cost to the State of $54,561,29. We suppose that a very small part of the circulation of the New Orleans Advocate is in this city. It is possibly, therefore, in view of its larger circulation in the parishes that it has been employed, though twenty country papers are paid to scatter these precious legislative documents throughout the State, at the very considerable cost of $86,122 16. The circulation of a city paper should be very large in the country to warrant the employing it in addition to the above. What the extensive circulation of the New Orleans Advocate is we have the means of laying before our readers. We have received a circular, dated January 6, 1869, signed by the agents of the Northern Methodist Book Concern, at New York and at Cincinnati, which gives the information. It will be seen that these gentlemen know what they are talking about, and they give the facts as reasons why they establish one church paper at Atlanta, Georgia, and not three papers at three points in the Southwest. They are evidently business men, and are not to be blinded by the doctor's patriotic call to prayer.

"After the adjournment of the General Conference, at Chicago, the agents found that the two papers at Charleston and New Orleans had only about five hundred paying subscribers each, and that both were dependent upon government advertising for their support, and that with that support there was no probability of their publication without loss, and that, too, without paying anything in either case for the support of the editor.

"Both papers placed at their head the names of the candidates of the Republican party and became strong partisan papers, the right of which we do not question, as they were published by private parties. But it was evident that a paper officially published by the church could not become a political paper, and, as a consequence, could not depend on any government patronage for support. It became, therefore, a question of moment—can a paper with five hundred subscribers be sustained on the amount specified by the General Conference? The editor's salary and the setting up the type of the paper would be just as much with a circulation of five hundred as of five thousand or more. It was therefore evident that to sustain a paper all the patronage of the South must be concentrated upon one paper.

"HITCHCOCK & WALDEN.
"CARLTON & LANAHAN."

We have nothing just now to do with their judgment beyond the official statement that the New Orleans Advocate has "only about five hundred subscribers." We suppose that a part of these are at least in this city. This would leave a very small number of readers for its columns elsewhere—possibly not over three hundred country subscribers. To inform these citizens, of whom we suppose nine-tenths are colored, as to what the last Legislature did, the public is to pay Dr. Newman's Advocate the sum of $14,869. And we suppose that as much more will be required to inform this valuable list of subscribers in regard to the proceedings of the present session. The patriotism of the doctor may be very beautiful and touching in some of its aspects, but we submit that this phase of it is too expensive an affair for longer continuance in view of the present impoverished condition of the State Treasury.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

To the Hon. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee have had so much business before them that they have been unable to report in full on the resolution of the House, adopted January 12, instructing the committee to investigate the printing of last session, etc., but will make the following partial report, and ask for further time to complete their investigations, and for authority to send for persons and papers.

Your committee has received the following statements of warrants and certificates issued by the auditor, and the amount of cash paid out by the treasurer for warrants for printing:

There were thirty papers contracted with, but sixteen have been stopped from receiving pay since the 30th of November, 1868, for the reason that they were not printed in the parishes they professed to represent. This matter will be more fully reported upon; if your committee is granted further time to prepare the same.

Respectfully submitted,
A. J. DEMAREST, Chairman.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. D. Duncan, of the Montgomery Conference, writes:

"I think the signs are good for a prosperous year. Two indications, however, are unfavorable, viz: the planting of too much cotton—even potato patches—and too much church machinery, instead of personal piety."

The Rev. J. A. Parker, presiding elder of the Pensacola district, Montgomery Conference, writes:

"The year has opened most encouragingly. The preachers are in good spirits, and look for a prosperous year.

"I have let out the year before me as follows:

"First round, (statistics in hand.) Lecture on the Foreign Missionary Work and Support of Pastors.

"Second round, (statistics in hand.)—Preach on Domestic Missions.

"Third round.—Protracted meeting time.

"Fourth round.—Conference collections.

"Last Sabbath, at Milton, Florida, by a kind of variorum arguments, I raised $10 for Brothers Allen and Lambuth, in China. It only cost one lecture to get it. Ought I not 'take courage' and 'press on?'"

Rev. J. W. Glenn, of Fort Deposit, Alabama, writes on the 15th instant: "At the last session of the Montgomery Conference a resolution was passed pledging the church in its bounds to sustain the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE at New Orleans. Having voted for that resolution, I went to work, and the result is, I send you fifteen new subscribers." The money came at the same time. There is the right ring about that letter, and with Conferences made up of such friends we should soon enlarge, beautify and fortify this paper so that its best friends would hardly recognize it.

New Orleans District Sunday School Union.

It will be remembered by the members of the last New Orleans district meeting that it was resolved to reorganize this union for the purpose of planting missionary Sabbath schools throughout the city as the most practicable way of extending our church. A meeting will be held for this purpose on Wednesday, the 10th of February, at seven o'clock P. M., in Carondelet street church. Addresses will be delivered by gentlemen, members of our church. The teachers of our schools and all of our members who feel an interest in this important enterprise, are expected to be present.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from Mr. J. A. Gresham, No. 92 Camp street, the following new books:

GOLDEN LINKS, OR THOUGHTS FOR THE HOURS. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger. 1869.

A very neat 18mo, filled with verses of Scripture and single stanzas of the best hymns, divided so as to suit each hour of each day in a month.

LESSONS FROM DAILY LIFE. By Elizabeth E. Hildreth. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1869. A small 12mo, pp. 120.

This is a treatise on "truth," "prayer," "the tabernacle of God with men," etc. It treats of "the amount of divine truth veiled for our reception in the correspondential forms of this outside life." If we had any doubt as to the peculiar faith of the author it would vanish before the statement that "The mission of Swedenborg was to oppose existing errors, and by revealing the existence of a spiritual meaning within the literal word of the Bible to give to man a firm foothold in spiritual things."

THE LAST PASSOVER. "An account of the closing incidents in the life upon earth of our Lord Jesus Christ. Arranged by John H. Whitney. Philadelphia: Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger. 1869. 18mo.

This is a harmony of the last chapters of the four Gospels. Neatly printed and bound according to the arrangement of Townsend.

THE COTTAGE BY THE LAKE. Translated from the German by Miss H. H. Schively. Philadelphia: Lutheran Board of Publication. 1869.

This is a beautifully drawn picture of the home-life of the family of Luther. The story of the poverty, frugality and Christian trustfulness of the Wilmer family is touchingly told. The care of God for those who confide in him is the sentiment which shapes this sweetly worded tale:

"Be firm, O pious Christian heart!
When in sore need and grief thou art
In God's great love confiding;
On Him repose
Thy fears and woes,
Yield thee to his wise guiding."

We have received from Mr. A. Eyrich, No. 130 Canal street, the following recent publications:

THE CLOSING SCENES OF THE LIFE OF CHRIST, being a harmonized Combination of the Four Gospel Histories of the Last Year of our Saviour's Life. By D. D. Bo D. D. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1869. 12mo, pp. 290.

The events of the "Passion Week" and the resurrection are elaborately harmonized, and tables of the principal incidents are given that will prove of much service to the Bible student. There is in the arrangement great precision and completeness. The titles of the chapters and paragraphs are a thorough analysis of scenes and subjects. It presents the whole after the style of a modern drama, giving "time," "principal persons," "principal places," etc.

THE OLD WORLD—PALESTINE, SYRIA AND ASIA MINOR.—Travel, incident, description and history. By Jacob R. Freese, M. D., United States Commissioner to Paris Exposition. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1869. 12mo, pp. 469.

This volume, like all we have seen from Messrs. Lippincott, is a model of mechanical execution.—The dedication of the work "To my Lily Wife, who accompanied me on my tour," is significant of the whole. The author is at home in the bazaar, and in all matters of industry. His imagination is very matter of fact in its discursions. He conveys a good deal of information in regard to the manners and peculiarities of the Druses, Marionetes, Turks, Jews and Christians of Palestine. In these days of travelers and books of travel one looks for the difference which distinguishes a book from others covering the same general topics, to ascertain why it was written. The reason for this book evidently lies in its dedication, and every man who succeeds in having his wife for a reader has a good audience.

THE OLD WORLD IN ITS NEW FACE Impressions of Europe in 1867–1868. By Henry W. Bellows. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1869. Vol. 2, large 12mo, pp 528.

The regions traveled over by the writer in this volume are Italy, Egypt, Syria and the lower part of Greece. He is a good observer and writes from a full mind—his standpoint that of a scholar and divine. His Unitarian notions frequently crop out, but he has nevertheless a warm enthusiasm for every trace of the footsteps of the Master. He sees with the eye of an artist and leads one delightfully along the slopes and shores of the Galilean lake on to the snow-clad heights of Hermon. Yet one is in no danger of an oversuperstitious admiration for any of the holy places who follows him. He even tries to be less poetical than he really is; and this matter-of-fact light, when used by one who has the genius of a poet, only heightens the effect. For sale by G. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street.

LESSONS FROM DAILY LIFE. By Emily V. Hilldreth. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1869. A Eyrich, 130 Canal street. See notice above.

THE GARDEN OF SORROWS, OR THE MINISTRY OF TEARS. By Rev. John Atkinson. New York: Carlton & Lanahan. Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden.

The outside substance of this book—its binding, paper, type, etc.—is as beautiful as we have ever seen from any publishing house. The theme is an interesting one—"human sorrow from the standpoint of Gethsemane"—that is, we suppose, in the light of Christ's suffering. It is what the author describes it: "A contribution to the devotional literature" of the church. It will guide, and may aid, the meditations of the sorrowing. The design of the work is highly creditable to the writer, and we wish it "God speed" in its errand of mercy.

CASELLA, OR CHILDREN OF THE VALLEYS. By Mary Farquharson, author of "Annandale," "The Shannons," "Holidays at Rueslands," etc. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1869. 12mo, pp. 387. For sale by A. Eyrich, 130 Canal street.

This is a refreshing and delightful book for Sabbath reading and Sunday school libraries. It narrates the stern fortunes of a Waldensian family during the persecutions of the seventeenth century. The scene is laid amid the valleys of Piedmont.

"Yes, go thou to the hamlet vales
Of the Alpine mountains old,
If thou would'st hear immortal tales
By the wind's deep whisper told!
Go, if thou lov'st the soil to tread
Where man hath bravely striven,
And life-like incense hath been shed
An offering unto heaven!"

The doings of the Congregatio de Propaganda Fide should be kept before the minds of our people and their children, for the boast of the Church of Rome is that she does not change; nor does she, excepting as the light of God's word and the principles of the Reformation force her. This little book strongly sets forth her dreadful history of arrogance and cruelty.

NORTH BRITISH REVIEW, FOR DECEMBER, 1868.—Leonard Scott Publishing Co., 140 Fulton street, New York. Contents: The Right Hon. Hugh Elliott; Alfred de Musset; Our Indian Railways; The Poetical Works of Robert Browning; Wishart; The Amazon; Mr. Bright's Speeches; The Elections.

Louisiana Conference of the Northern Methodists.

We copy an account from the New York Methodist of this session, which was held in St. Paul's Church, one of the three negro churches which were taken from us by military order, and are still held—total value, $55,000. It is well to keep this item in mind while reading,

The Louisiana Conference commenced its session in Wesley chapel, on Wednesday morning, January 13, and closed on Monday, January 18. Bishop Simpson presided, and Dr. Newman and Rev. W. M. Henry were elected secretaries. The session was harmonious, and the manner of conducting the business of Conference indicates an improvement on the part of the preachers, most of whom were a few years since in bondage. During the past year, especially in the time of the political excitement, they endured a great fight of afflictions. Their lives were threatened, their churches in some instances burned, and two local preachers, together with others, some of them women, were murdered in cold blood. Notwithstanding all this opposition, many of the charges have been visited by revivals, and a precious ingathering of souls is reported. Dr. Newman, R. K. Diossy and W. M. Henry are the only white preachers in this Conference, and the latter received a transfer to the New York Conference. He is a young minister of genial spirit, deep piety, excellent abilities and an earnest worker, and, in addition to his pastoral work, has been the associate editor of the New Orleans Advocate. Dr. Newman is reappointed pastor of the Ames Church, and Mr. Diossy is made presiding elder of the New Orleans district. Dr. Newman will continue the paper established by him, and will have associated with him as editors, Mr. Diossy and Rev. M. C. Cole. The Advocate has been an invaluable aid to the preachers, who are very earnest for its continuance, persuaded that no other paper can serve the cause of loyal Methodism in Louisiana so well.

SABBATH SCHOOL NEWS.

MR. EDITOR: You publish "Reports from the Churches." Can you allow room and introduce another heading, "Reports from Sabbath Schools?" I want to hear from all the Sabbath schools of our Conference, and other Conferences through which your ADVOCATE is circulated. I think it will do good to communicate with each other through your columns, and by your permission.

The Sabbath school of Felicity Methodist Episcopal Church South, under my charge, is in a very prosperous condition. There is an increasing interest in the school, manifested in various ways, and within the past three months a considerable increase of members. Though for several Sabbaths past the weather has been very unpropitious, we have had over two hundred members present, engaging in the exercises and duties of the school, and joining in songs of praise to God. Our teachers are more prompt, punctual and efficient than heretofore. We have a well conducted Bible class of adults and youths, under the charge and instruction of Brother Richard Jones. Recently we reorganized our missionary department of the school, with happy effect, both as to the amount of missionary money collected and the spirit of zeal and interest in the cause. Our pastor is with us every Sabbath, and on the last Sabbath of the month examines the whole school on the catechism which they have studied during the month, with profitable and interesting comments and instruction. I am more than ever convinced of the importance of the introduction of the catechism into all our Sunday schools. It is the best way to instruct our children in the truths of the Bible and the doctrines of our church. And just here, Mr. Editor, let me suggest the query: Is there not some one who will prepare a catechism better suited to the use of Sabbath schools than our church now gives us? We have a great variety, I know, but none of them are worthy the place of a permanent standard work, while all together fail to meet the wants and requirements of a Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Last Sabbath Dr. Parker preached to the school especially, from the text, "Know thou the God of thy father," etc., an excellent sermon, full of instruction to the children, with many a good point suited to the older grown. Preaching suited to children, after all, is the best kind of preaching, and I see no good reason why all our regular pulpit services should not be so plain and simple that the children of the congregation may all understand and comprehend them. The lambs are to be fed, as well as the sheep, and I rejoice to report that with us the lambs are receiving increased attention, and a growing interest is manifested in their behalf.

W. H. FOSTER, Sup't.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 2, 1869.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—One of the most signal proofs of the prosperous business of this commercial metropolis is found in the fact that Mr. Horace Waters, whose musical literature has given him a national reputation, has found it necessary to enlarge his store, carrying it through to Mercer street, to accommodate his increasing trade in pianos, melodeons and cabinet organs. These rooms are neatly fitted up and filled with elegant instruments of all forms and sizes, and every phase of price; and those who desire to purchase new or second-hand instruments, or to hire them, can be accommodated on the most favorable terms. Persons of moderate means can purchase instruments by paying monthly installments. This celebrated establishment, 481 Broadway, is really one of the grandest musical establishments in the United States, and those who visit New York should not fail to drop in and see it. The Waters piano ranks with the best manufactured in America.—New York Independent.

PARENTS will do well to keep in mind that the new silver tips will make shoes wear twice as long as shoes without tips, consequently saving half the cost of keeping children supplied with shoes. No one can afford to buy children's shoes not protected with metal tips.—Journal.

POLITICAL.—The political campaign for 1869 opens with State elections in New Hampshire March 9, Connecticut April 4, and Rhode Island April 7. It would not be astonishing if the Democracy, manifesting that amazing recuperative force for which they are distinguished, should carry at least Connecticut. The Democracy of New Hampshire even seem to be hopeful of the result in that State.—New Orleans Crescent.

Senator Wilson's proposed amendment has the true Radical ring in it. He flatly proposes that nobody shall be disqualified for suffrage or office except "rebels." This is frank and straightforward, at all events. The amendment passed by the House means the same thing, but it could not come in practice to the same without a vast deal of circumlocution and superfluous delay and bother. Under Wilson's plan, every Radical Legislature in the country would at once see the way clearly to the accomplishment of the precise degree of disfranchisement of their political opponents needed to secure the perpetual ascendancy of their party.—New Orleans Crescent.

MARRIED.

At the residence of Mrs. Stowers, near Fayette, Mississippi, on the evening of the 19th of January, by Rev. W. Fisk Glenn, Mr. ALFRED ELSINOA, of Vicksburg, Mississippi, to Miss LUCY E. WORTHNER, of Jefferson county.

At Greenwood, Louisiana, on the 17th of January, by the Rev. John Pipes, Mr. CHARLES PHILLIPS to Miss D. N. MARTIN.

By Rev. George F. Ellis, January 13 at Sunnyside, Miss MAGGIE ROGERS to Mr. L. CARTER, both of Marengo county, Alabama.

January 18, 1869, by the Rev. R. S. Trippett, Mr. JAMES B. BAYLISS to Miss NANNIE B. GUICE, all of Caddo parish, Louisiana.

OBITUARIES.

Mrs. MARY BOOLEY died in the city of New Orleans, on the 9th of January, 1869, in her fifty-seventh year. Her maiden name was Richards. She was born in the city of Baltimore, where she grew up and was married. There also she was converted in her nineteenth year, in the Caroline street church, under the preaching of Rev. Mr. White. The hour of this momentous experience was distinctly and clearly known, and always readily stated by her whenever required. It was the beginning of one of the most devoted and spiritual lives ever exhibited in our church.

Sister Bodley came to New Orleans in 1837. There was at that time but one Methodist church in the city, situated on Gravier street, and at the time under the pastoral care of Rev. Joseph Travis. Here she gave in her church letter and identified herself with the Methodists of New Orleans. The members were few, and the church edifice was a small frame building, which has long since disappeared. She subsequently became a member of the St. Mary's street church, which afterward, in 1849, became incorporated in the Felicity street church. Her membership continued in this charge until the day of her death. Thus for thirty-two years this elect lady went out and in before our people, and adorned the doctrines of God, her Saviour. She was called to pass through many trials. Her husband and two children passed away before her. But every affliction was sanctified, and her faith and submission shone with peculiar luster in the days of sorrow.

She died where she had lived for many years—in the quiet home of her only surviving child and daughter, surrounded by a loved circle of Christian friends, and amidst the tender ministrations of her children. Her last sickness, of more than a month's duration, was borne with characteristic patience. There was perfect peace throughout this period of suffering, and never a single doubt. She met death sublimely, conscious to the last moment, and completely victorious. In the death of Sister Bodley we have lost one of our oldest and best members. Her social and religious influence was a blessing to the community. She was gifted in prayer, and her presence in the social meetings of the church was always powerful for good. Her testimony in the love feast and the class meeting was ever rendered with clearness and simplicity. Her love for the church was great beyond expression. In frequent conversations with her pastor, for many years, the subjects in which she seemed most interested were the state of the church and the conversion of sinners. Her concern for sinners, as manifested in her prayers and conversation, was almost agonizing. There was, however, a great deal of cheerfulness and hope in her piety. She could minister consolation and encouragement to the desponding. She loved the young. In her prayers she rarely forgot the Sunday school, and the conversion of children was to her a delightful theme. Self seemed to have been altogether lost in the interest which she felt for others and for the Redeemer's kingdom. She was ripe for heaven, and God has taken her to himself.

L. PARKER.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 30, 1869.

Died, near Jackson, Alabama, January 12, 1869, ARTHUR DUBOSE, son of John D. and E. J. Saint, aged two months and fourteen days.

One has conquered death, and has brought life and immortality to light. The light shines, and faith sees infant souls in the family above, all bright and joyous in their home. May the gracious One cheer and guide bereaved parents to a happy greeting of their redeemed ones in their blissful home.

B. C.

FRANKLIN, La., Jan. 22, 1869.

Mrs. ELIZA L. NEWCOMB died at Beauregard, Copiah county, Mississippi, after long-continued suffering, on the 25th of December, 1868, in her sixty first year.

Sister Newcomb was born in Adams county, and in that county she lived most of her life. I became acquainted with her in 1845, at her residence near Natchez, and learned from herself that she united with the church when sixteen years of age. She was never full of religious joy. Hers was rather a life of hope as to the future, while she clung to the present life, though one of suffering to the last.

Sister Newcomb was a generous friend, full of cheerfulness, of a forgiving spirit, and of warm social feelings. Her house was a home for ministers of the Gospel. Though she was never very happy in religion, yet as she gave more than a cup of cold water to the servants of the Most High, she will not lose her reward.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

MY PUSSY CAT.

BY ANNA WILMOT.

I had a little pussy cat
When I was only five;
A funny little pussy cat—
The funniest alive.

She'd purr, and spit, and round her back,
And try to catch her tail,
A dozen times an hour, or more,
Though every time she'd fail.

The silly little pussy cat!—
And mamma's knitting-ball
She'd chase about the floor, or leap
At flies upon the wall.

She'd tumble on the carpet,
She'd tear about the room,
She'd watch when Ellen came to sweep,
And jump upon her broom.

And if you'd draw along the ground
A handkerchief or string,
She'd crouch a moment, watching it,
Then give a tiger spring,
As if it were a mouse she saw,
Or other living thing.

My darling little pussy!
But that was long ago;
I'm five years older now than then,
And cats, like children, grow.

My pussy is a stately cat;
No more about the room
She chases mumma's knitting-ball
Or jumps at Ellen's broom;

But sits up, tall and dignified,
And winks, and spreads her paw
Out in a serious way, as though
Just laying down the law.

I laugh when I remember
The harum-scarum thing
That whirled around to catch her tail,
Or tried to seize a string.

And will the little romping girl
That laughs at pussy now,
Grow up and be as dignified,
And wear a serious brow?

It may be so; but this I'll say—
And say it once for all—
I'll do much more than wink and blink,
Sitting up straight and tall.

THE THREE WISHES.

BY ALLIS WALDEN.

'Rain, rain, go to Spain, come again another day,' said dear little, blundering Rose, getting all the jingle out of the rhyme, as usual.

'Never mind, Rose, it never rained forever yet,' said Nelson comfortingly.

'I don't see why it isn't pleasant, for I've prayed like everything,' said Rose seriously.

Nelson always had a reason for everything, and he was only nonplused for a minute.

'Somebody must want it to rain more than you want it to shine, and they have prayed the hardest,' he explained.

Rose said nothing, but stole off to pray again, and May sang softly,

'Behind the clouds is the sun still shining;
Thy fate is the common fate of all—
Into each life some rain must fall,
Some days must be dark and dreary.'

Rose came back bright and hopeful.

'Let's play three wishes,' suggested May.

'And let me wish first,' cried Rose eagerly.

'Yes, let Rose wish first,' repeated Nelson.

The game of three wishes was a great favorite with them. They had taken the idea from the fairy tale of the same name. They played that a fairy came and offered to give them the first three things they wished for. As there were just three of them, they had a wish apiece.

'I want such lots of things,' Rose began. 'What would you wish for, May? Wouldn't it be beautiful to have a peacock? And I want to see an elephant, too. If I only had a whole trunk full of dolls, and dresses, and bureans, and everything! O, I know—I wish I had a daguerreotype car all my own for my baby-house. Wouldn't it be splendid?—a stove in it, and a little room, and I'd have a cunning little bed and sleep there myself, and you could come and make calls, and if I had a kitchen stove I'd cook mince pies all the time.'

'That is a great wish!' laughed Nelson, as Rose stopped to get breath. 'I wish I was cast away on an island like Robinson Crusoe, and lived in a cave, and had a parrot.'

'There! That's just what I wanted, only I couldn't think,' burst in Rose. 'I'll change and be cast away with Nelson.'

'What would you do, I should like to know, without any dolls, or bureans, or elephants, or mince pies, or fandy dandy shangos?' said Nelson provokingly.

'I don't like mince pies a bit better than you do. You've ate twice as many as ever I did; you know you have, Nelson Talbot, 'cause you're two years older, so, now.'

'Don't you say anything. I've walked on you when you were nothing but dirt.'

'I hope I was a mud puddle and spattered awfully,' retorted Rose quickly.

'Robinson Crusoe never had any girls round,' said Nelson contemptuously.

'You won't go to heaven, if you keep plaguing me so,' said Rose, beginning to cry.

'Couldn't you play that Rose was Friday,' suggested May. Rose brightened.

'Friday worked like a Trojan. What under the sun could she do?' said Nelson, determined not to give up.

'I can whittle,' said Rose eagerly, her tears all gone.

'Did you ever!' and Nelson shouted his ill humor away.

'I wish that I had a wishing ring,' said May.

'That isn't fair. You'll get every thing now,' said Nelson, his face clouding up again.

'Couldn't we take turns wearing it?' asked May, willing to give up anything rather than have another outbreak. Nelson had nothing to say to such a proposal as that. 'I'd have a whole room full of money, and tell everybody to come and take just as much as they wanted,' continued May.

'So would I,' echoed Nelson.

'And I'd give them all pipes to blow soap bubbles with, and clocks that tinkle when they strike, and lozengers for every one of them,' said Rose, her face all aglow as if she were the most generous person alive.

'There comes the sunshine,' said May.

Rose clapped her hands and danced with delight. 'I thought it would! I thought it would!' she exclaimed. 'I wonder which is the easiest, to stop it from raining, or to pick a mountain right up and squeeze it through the eye of a needle,' continued Rose, whose mind was a sort of jumbled up mixture.

Just then her mother called her. A lady with her little girl, about five years old, had come to see her, and Rose was summoned to amuse the child, who began to grow restless.

'I have been trying to make your doll dance, but it is obstinate and won't go. Do you see to it, Rose,' said her mother.

Rose's dancing doll was a jointed, paper doll, gay in pink satin and white lace. A thread ran through its waist with a pin on the end behind the doll. Rose stuck the pin in the carpet, and slid the doll along the string till she swung so that her feet just touched. Then she hummed Yankee Doodle, and kept the other end of the thread, which she held between her fingers, quivering in time to the tune. Miss Dolly danced well. The little girl was delighted. She wanted to take it herself, and see whether she could make it go, and whether its dress could be pulled off, and whether that string, pin and all, could be jerked right through the doll, and a great many other interesting things. Rose had much ado to keep her fingers off.

'We will give the doll to the little girl,' said Rose's mother, seeing how pleased the child was.

'O, mamma!' was all Rose said, but her face fell.

The child snatched at the doll. She evidently thought it too good an opportunity to be lost.

'No, no, Amy, it belongs to Rose,' said the lady. But Amy held on.

'Rose has had it so long that she is tired of it, I am sure,' said Rose's mother, but Rose said nothing.

'O, no, don't mention my taking it. Rose thinks a great deal of it, I can see,' replied the lady.

'Cousin Helen gave it to me, and I have kept it so nice!' said Rose, in apology for her reluctance.

'Yes, and you shan't give it away till you want to, dear. I can cut some dolls out of a newspaper that will amuse Amy just as well,' said the lady, freeing the doll from Amy's clutches, and giving it to Rose.

'But, mamma,' began Rose, doubtfully.

'I am satisfied, Rosebud. I did not know you cared so much for it,' replied the mother.

The lady went away, but Rose did not feel easy. She had just been telling how much she would do if she had a wishing ring. Here was a chance to be generous, and she had failed entirely. 'If my wish had been to be a good girl, perhaps I should have done better,' she sighed.

'We can pray, and that is better than wishing,' said her mother, who overheard her.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE Italian merchant shipping is making great progress. In 1866 the number of Italian seamen enrolled was one hundred and fifty five; in 1867 this total has increased to one hundred and sixty-nine thousand. During the same space of twelve months the number of merchant ships had been increased by three hundred and thirty-nine vessels, with a tonnage of fifty-five thousand.

SCIENTIFIC.

SPEED OF LIGHT.

Ordinary terrestrial phenomena indicate that the communication of light is instantaneous, and for what we name "practical purposes" this is so. As a fact, however, it requires time and is subject to a definite velocity.

Around the planet Jupiter four satellites revolve in different orbits, nearly circular. The periodical times of their revolutions, as well as the dimensions and positions of both the satellites and their orbits, have been carefully and accurately determined. The three nearest to the planet move in orbits lying nearly in the plane of the path of the latter round the sun. Consequently they suffer eclipse by the interposition of the body of the planet at every revolution. The observation of these eclipses being useful in the determination of longitudes of places on the earth's surface, the periods of their occurrence are now regularly calculated beforehand. But the times thus predicted, upon data so thoroughly ascertained, were found to vary from the observed times — being sometimes earlier, sometimes later, by a regular gradation of differences. In 1676 Roemer, a Danish astronomer, traced these discrepancies to their true cause. The eclipses took place too soon at the periods when the earth in its annual course came nearest to Jupiter, too late when it receded farthest. The total variation, amounting to sixteen minutes and twenty-six seconds, or not quite one thousand seconds, indicated therefore, the time consumed by the light from the satellites in crossing the diameter from the earth's orbit. This diameter, heretofore taken at one hundred and ninety millions of miles, is now considered (from late observations upon the distance between the orbits of Mars and the earth) as more probably being about one hundred and eighty-four millions of miles in length. From these data the velocity of light appears to be about one hundred and eighty-six thousand five hundred miles per second.

The discovery of the aberration of light by Dr. Bradley, in 1727, afforded a means of confirming this almost incredible result. Though we cannot here enter upon a full explanation of this phenomenon, a conception of it may be had by considering the case of two men moving with rapidity in opposite directions during a shower of rain falling perpendicularly. The rain drops will fall upon the faces of the two men as if proceeding in inclined lines from points in front of their respective zeniths. The rain drops represent the rays of light in the astronomical phenomenon, and the opposing motions of the observer are those of the earth at the opposite sides of its orbit. The inclination of the rays is the result of the motion of light combined with the earth's orbital movement. The latter is known and the angle of inclination can be measured, and these data furnish, by an extremely simple calculation, an estimate of the velocity of light.

But the velocity of light has also been measured by means of mechanism, the principle of whose action may be said to be the subdivision of a second of time into very minute parts—in a word, the atomizing of time. M. Fizeau, of the French Academy of Sciences, effected this by means of a toothed wheel, in which the teeth were precisely of the same size as the intervals between them. The light of a lamp was directed through an aperture in a screen so as to cross one of these intervals and fall upon a reflector placed at a known and considerable distance from the wheel. The reflector was so arranged as to threw back the beam through the notch in the wheel exactly opposite to that through which it first passed. Through this notch could be perceived the reflected ray, which had traversed a distance double that of the reflecter from the wheel. When, now, the wheel was revolved with increasing velocity, the reflection, at first seen continuously, gradually became feebler and presently entirely disappeared. This occurred when the velocity of the wheel was such that the light transmitted through the notch on one side was intercepted by the tooth adjacent to the opposite aperture on its return; that is, when the velocity of rotation carried a tooth over its own breadth whilst the ray was going and returning. This velocity is readily measured; indeed, it may be registered by the mechanism used to drive the wheel. If the wheel, as was actually the case, makes twelve and six-tenths revolutions in a second and has fourteen hundred and forty divisions (teeth and notches,) the time of the passage of a tooth across its own breadth is found by taking the reciprocal of the product of these numbers. In this fraction of a second the ray has traversed twice the distance between the mirror and the wheel—which amounted in M. Fizeau's experiments to eighteen thousand eighteen hundred and eighty yards. But this total distance, measured or divided by the time, will give the distance gone over in a second, or, in other words, the velocity of the ray. The mean results of the experiments established a velocity of one hundred and ninety-six thousand miles.

The far more refined and delicate method of M. Foucault has shown, however, that this result is too great. This method is essentially that first used by Arago, in an experiment determining the relative velocities of light in air and water. A horizontal ray of light is admitted into a darkened chamber, and falls upon a mirror arranged to revolve on a vertical axis lying in its own plane. As the mirror turns, the reflected ray will move, of course, in a horizontal plane passing through the point of incidence and the aperture of admission, and by an easy geometrical consideration its angular velocity is known to be double that of the mirror. In this horizontal plane a second mirror is placed, perpendicular to a line itself drawn perpendicular from the center of the last to the axis of the first—placed, in other words, so as to return a ray to the first mirror upon the same path in which it is first reflected from it. If, now, the revolving mirror be supposed at rest and be so arranged as to reflect the ray (received through the aperture) upon the second mirror, the ray will manifestly be returned by the latter upon the same path, and will be again reflected by the first directly toward the aperture. But if, whilst the ray has been passing between the mirrors, the first has revolved through a small angle, the ray in passing back toward the aperture will deviate from its original path by an angle double that described by the mirror. This angle is readily measured; and the fraction of a second required by the light to traverse the distance between the mirrors, to and fro, multiplied by the angle described by the mirror in any small fraction of a second taken as a unit, will give a product equal to one half this measured angle. But the number of rotations in a second being registered, the unit angle may be readily deduced from the unit of time. The product and one factor of it being thus known, we derive the other factor, or the time of the ray; this, with the space passed over—the double distance between the mirrors—affords one factor of another known product; so that finally dividing the space by the time we obtain the velocity.

We may here mention, in passing, that by the interposition of a column of water between the mirrors, through which the ray is passed, we have the means of ascertaining the velocity of the propagation of light through water, and that this is found to be less than its velocity in air.

The result of M. Foucault's experiments was a velocity of one hundred and eighty-five thousand one hundred and seventy-two miles; so that taking all the methods into consideration—neglecting only M. Fizeau's as subject to important errors from mechanical imperfections—we may conclude that the velocity of light in interplanetary and cosmical space is about one hundred and eighty-six thousand miles in a second!

This enormous velocity takes hold upon the infinite, and is beyond any adequate comprehension. The greatest speed we can generate in a body moving through the air or over the surface of the earth, is a mere bagatelle to a velocity which will belt the globe in the eighth part of a second. Yet it is some consolation to know that we can always halt one immensity, however overbearing, with the qui va la of another. Space, in fact, is infinite, and we can, by bringing it face to face with this vast velocity, not only reduce the scale of numbers upon which the latter plumes itself, but even turn the tables upon it and obtain tremendous results in the opposite direction, so as to leave the impression that, after all, light is really slow!—To achieve this desirable result, we count off space in units of this velocity. We thus find that light will reach us from the moon in about one second and a quarter; from the sun, in eight minutes and thirteen seconds; from the fixed star, Alpha Centauri, in about three years; from 61 Cygni, in nine years; from Alpha Lyræ, in twelve years; whilst from the remotest nebulæ, as surmised by Sir William Herschel, it will require not less than two millien years! These facts develop a singular field of contemplation.—When we view, in an unclouded night, the starry dome, we are really looking upon a historical chart reaching back into the far distant ages of the past. The rays that reach our eyes started upon their journey, some an hour, some a day, some years, some centuries, ago from the stellar bodies in our field of vision. This light may be partially that reflected by these bodies from rays which left the earth just twice those periods past. So that the whole history of our earth may now be illustrated on the vault of heaven.—Southern Review.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans, he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA COLLEGE,

AUBURN, ALABAMA.

The Spring Session will begin on the 20th of January, and close on the 11th of July, 1869.

The educational facilities here furnished to students are equal to those of the best colleges in the country. Young men may take a regular or partial course, but will be required to have at least three studies.

Auburn is situated directly on the Montgomery and West Point Railroad. Its health and social advantages cannot be surpassed.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, Spring session,	$18 00
Tuition, Fall session,	32 00

Board in private families, from $15 to $20 per month.

Students in indigent circumstances, by applying as such, will be required to pay in advance only half the price of tuition, and by messing they may greatly reduce the expense of board.

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D.D., President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwartz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidentals are charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of Instrument $4; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,
se15 tf President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the appreciation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including every thing except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those who are limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Heuners.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South. Young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils unsurpassed. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social disquietude. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The unusually heavy rain storm which prevailed here throughout Monday and Monday night has materially restricted operations in the general market. On Saturday and Tuesday, moreover, the movement was only moderate in most branches of the wholesale trade. In sugar and molasses the demand has been fair, and the receipts have met a ready sale at full prices. The principal feature in Western produce is the receipt of a fair amount of corn and wheat, the former of which has met a ready sale for export at fair prices. There is also a demand for the latter, but thus far no sales have been reported. In other articles there has been very little movement, but provisions continue firm.

The accounts from the country state that the roads continue in a very bad condition from excessive rains, and that at some points it is impracticable to haul cotton to the landings. Wherever the roads are passable high prices have led planters to push forward their crops to market. The intelligence is decidedly unfavorable for the sugar prospect.

The river has risen six inches since our last report, and is now two feet six inches below high water mark.

Cotton.—The following are the arrivals since the 29th ultimo:

Louisiana and Mississippi.....bales..	12364
Lake.....	21
Arkansas.....	916
Mobile.....	133
Florida.....	28
Texas.....	51
Total.....	13513

On Saturday the market opened at about previous rates, and a moderate business was done without any marked change in prices, but on the receipt of favorable Liverpool telegrams and dispatches, with new orders from that market, the demand became unusually active, and factors promptly advanced their pretensions. The supply, however, being ample and buyers operating freely, notwithstanding the high prices asked, the sales summed up 11,000 bales, at an irregular advance of ¾ to 1c. in middling, and ¼ to ¾c. in the lower grades, the improvement in the former being the most marked, in consequence of its comparative scarcity. On Monday the weather was calculated to suspend all movement, but, nevertheless, a few buyers came forward and took 2,000 bales at Saturday's outside rates, factors supplying the demand sparingly in consequence of the non-arrival of the usual Liverpool telegrams, and preferring to await further accounts. On Tuesday the market opened with a very good demand and prices a fraction higher, factors claiming an advance of ¼ to ½c., but after it was ascertained that there had been no quotable improvement at New York, the latter were less stringent in their pretensions, and a considerable part of the business was at Monday's figures. On the whole, however, the advantage was so much on the side of the seller that prices may be regarded as closing ¼c. dearer. The sales amounted to 4,900 bales.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,900 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 571,406 bales, against 351,870 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 76,715 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 33,554 bales to France, a decrease of 97,631 to Great Britain, and of 1,392 to other foreign ports.

Sugar.—A better demand and firmer market, though without any change in prices, has been the prominent feature since our last review. On Saturday 550 hogsheads, all the supplies, sold at 8½ to 9½c. per pound for inferior; 10¼ to 10½c. for common; 11 to 11¾c. for fair; 12¼ to 12½c. for fully fair; 12¾ to 13c. for prime; 13¼ to 13½c. for choice; 14½ to 15c. for yellow clarified, and 15½ to 16c. for white.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

To the Members of the Montgomery Conference.

Dear Brethren: In behalf of the Committee on Bible Cause, I beg leave to call your attention to a resolution contained in the report of said committee, and adopted by you, requiring each pastor, immediately on his arrival at his new field of labor, to ascertain all the destitution of the people in regard to the Scriptures, and report the number of destitute families to your next session.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—The Alabama claims treaty will fail to be ratified, and the whole question will go over to the next administration for a renewal of negotiations under a new minister. Such is the almost concurrent opinion of the Republican members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate, and of the Senators on the floor. An organized opposition to the treaty seems to have originated in New York and Boston, among the claimants for relief from the depredations committed by the Alabama and the Shenandoah. They have prepared memorials and arguments against the treaty, which they are sending to Senators.

The clerks in the departments here have resorted to a novel expedient to secure an increase of salary of twenty per cent. from July last, which, if passed, will take about $2,000,000 from the Treasury. They have been advised by Radical members to get some Democratic members to introduce the proposition, thereby securing the Democratic vote of the House, and giving at the same time Republican members a chance to quietly vote for it, on the ground that the proposed large expenditure did not come from the Republican party.

There was quite a scene in the House to-day during a discussion of an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, between Holbrook, delegate from Idaho, and Butler. The former said that a certain statement made by Butler was "false, unqualifiedly false, and known by Butler to be false." He was promptly called to order. The words were taken down, and an opportunity given to retract, but he declined. Mr. Schenck then offered a resolution, directing the Speaker to censure Holbrook, which passed unanimously. The sergeant-at-arms brought him to the bar, and the Speaker reprimanded him, saying that deliberative bodies must protect themselves from insult in debate. Holbrook seemed utterly indifferent to the censure, but the galleries looked upon it as quite solemn.

The well-known McArdle case will be argued in the United States Supreme Court about the middle of February. It had been previously fixed for February 5, but Judge Black consented to a postponement to accommodate Mat. Carpenter, who is counsel for the government. The question to be argued is, whether the law, passed by Congress last year, taking away appellate jurisdiction from the Supreme Court, is operative in this case, which was pending in this court at the time the law was passed. The McArdle case, it will be remembered, comes up ex parte from the lower court in Mississippi, where he, as a Vicksburg editor, was imprisoned by General Ord, or by virtue of the military power conferred by the reconstruction acts. If the Supreme Court decides that the act of Congress is retractive and unconstitutional, as applied to a case already pending, then the court will have an opportunity to pronounce on the validity of military reconstruction.

It was well understood, at the time the act destroying the appellate jurisdiction of the court in habeas corpus cases passed, that Congress intended to prevent a decision on the great question involved in the pending McArdle case.

PARIS, Feb. 7.—Queen Isabella has issued another manifesto, denouncing revolution in Spain and asserting her rights to the throne.

The great powers have granted a delay of eight days for the government of Greece to make its final decision in regard to the proposals of the Paris conference.

Late advices from Athens give the French government good reason to hope that the pacific policy of King George will triumph over the excitement of the hour. Great agitation still prevails in Athens.

HAVANA, Feb. 7.—The insurgents burned eighteen large plantations in the Eastern District. Cholera of a very virulent type is prevalent in the insurrectionary districts, insurgents, Spanish troops and citizens falling victims. Steamer Cabrero lost at sea while carrying government supplies from Santiago de Cuba to Manzanillo. An attempt of Cubans to fire a powder magazine at Puerto Principe has been frustrated. Two Cuban prisoners, Para and Anacis, were killed by troops or volunteers while attempting to escape from Guantanamo. A private letter denies that they were attempting to escape. Jose Cespedes, late commissioner to the insurgents, sailed to-day for America; he says he is disgusted with the state of affairs. Influential and wealthy Cuban families, who generally sympathize with the revolution, continue to emigrate to New York and New Orleans.

Salnave has destroyed two towns and captured another in San Domingo. The inhabitants of Aux Cayes and vicinity are panic stricken, and many escaping to Jamaica.

NEGOTIATING FOR SAN DOMINGO.

The special Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, in a dispatch dated the 4th, says:

M. Louis Paul Angerard, a resident of San Domingo, arrived here two weeks since, and waited upon Mr. Seward, presenting him credentials from President Baez, of the Republic of San Domingo, according him plenary power, so far as he and his cabinet could do so, to treat for the annexation of that republic to the United States. The conditions of the proposed annexation are the payment, on our part, of the indebtedness of that republic, amounting to several millions, with a full recognition of its territory and people as an integral part of our own, and the establishment, immediately after the annexation is made, so far as our action is concerned, of a territorial government therein of a character similar to those in our Western sections. The ultimate hope is that this territory would become a State of the Union. President Baez's envoy claims for the Dominican administration that the proposition is simple and frank, and made in the interest of his own people, the major portion of whom desire nothing so much as good order and peace, while returning an enormous equivalent to the United States. The population of the republic is less than two hundred thousand, while the territory is three fifths as large as Ireland, and could support ten millions. Their prosperity has declined greatly under the depression and disorder produced by the Spanish occupation and the more recent revolutionary attempts. Mr. Seward received M. Angerard cordially, entering at once into his plan. The protectorate of General Banks and the annexation resolutions of Judge Orth were supposed to have been put forth to feel the public sentiment. The Committee on Foreign Affairs met this morning, informally, and listened to statements from M. Angerard and Mr. Schumacker, of Baltimore, who acts as interpreter. They gave an interesting sketch of the present posture of affairs in San Domingo, and urged the proposal of President Baez as advantageous to both countries. The committee were much interested in the information, General Washburne being specially attracted by the statements made of the vast mineral resources and fertility of the island. No action was taken or suggested. It is expected, in a few days, that another resolution will be presented in such a way as to bring on a reconsideration. Considerable interest is manifested among members. It appears that before Judge Orth's resolutions were presented the Democrats held a caucus, and agreed to oppose their adoption. Some of the more prominent, as Messrs. Woodward, Kerr and Pruyn, are moving for a reconsideration of this action. General Butler earnestly supports the project, and is working energetically to bring members to consider it favorably.

The Dominican envoy expected to have completed his mission and started home ere this. When he left San Domingo General Baez was confident his proposal would be accepted.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The committee on the revision of the laws agreed to-day to report Jenckes' naturalization bill. The features are nearly as reported heretofore in these dispatches, save an amendment or two. One is, that the applicant shall have resided in the United States four and a half years before a certificate be issued, and that he shall not vote until six months after receiving his certificate of naturalization. Pending these six months, it shall be lawful for the court, for cause, to revoke the naturalization.

Mr. Jenckes is preparing the bill, which will soon be reported to the House.

Application has been made to the President for permission to remove Booth's remains, and for possession of the trunk and other effects of the assassin in the custody of the War Department.—New Orleans Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—The President signs Dr. Mudd's pardon to-day.

Senator Whyte, of Maryland, visited the Attorney General to-day in behalf of Lieutenant Braine, at the instance of a large number of Baltimore ladies.

During the contest to-day over the suffrage amendment to the Constitution, Mr. Vickers offered an amendment looking to the restoration to the exercise of the elective franchise of those who are now excluded by reason of participation in the rebellion, which was rejected by twenty-one to thirty-two; those voting in the affirmative being Messrs. Bayard, Buckalew, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Ferry, Fowler, Grimes, Harlan, Hendricks, McCreevy, Norton, Patterson of Tennessee, Ramsey, Rice, Robertson, Sawyer, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Vickers and Wilson.

Included in the bill for removal of political disabilities is Michael Hahn, of Louisiana.

HAVANA, Feb. 9.—A band of insurgents, numbers unknown, made their appearance at the town of Camarones, on the line of railroad between Cienfuegos and Villa Clara. A detachment of troops were marched against them. A panic prevails at Cienfuegos. Many families that fled from the town, fearing the insurrection would spread, have arrived here. Fort Cabanas, which guards the place, is garrisoned by a battalion of volunteers. A force of regulars have been dispatched to reinforce them.

The Diario, in its account of the outbreak at Camarones, states that the first act of the rebels was to destroy a section of the railroad between Cienfuegos and Villa Clara. The same paper acknowledges the situation in this quarter is very critical, and much excitement is created in Havana by the versions of the news (more or less exaggerated) from the central department. The approach of the revolution to the vicinity of Cienfuegos, which is the center of a large planting district, is expected. Several attempts have been made at revolution in Vualta Abajos region. The first and fifth battalions of volunteers are to proceed to that point to prevent a renewal of the disorders. Strangers continue to arrive from various points on the coast—it is supposed with the intention of joining the insurrectionists. Many have been arrested on suspicion.

NEW YORK, Feb. 9.—James T. Brady died to-day of apoplexy, aged fifty-four years. All the courts adjourned out of respect.

BALTIMORE, Feb 9.—General Breckinridge is here, the guest of his brother-in-law, Rev. Dr. Bullock.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—Noon.—Governor Holden, of North Carolina, on behalf of himself and other loyalists, telegraphs the North Carolina Senators to oppose any reduction of the army which will reduce the Federal garrison in North Carolina.

Congress did nothing till one o'clock, when the Senate came to the House, and the count of the electoral votes proceeded with, and is now in progress. The capitol is densely packed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—Evening. Longstreet and Frank Blair are here.

Grant has returned.

A company of United States infantry from New York passed through to-day en route for Wilmington, North Carolina.

At one o'clock the Senators, arm in arm, came to the House. Wade took the chair, Colfax seated near him. Senator Conkliag and Representatives Wilson, of Iowa, and Pruyn acting as tellers. Pruyn read the Democratic votes, Coakling and Wilson alternated in reading the Republican votes. All went smoothly until Louisiana was reached, when Mullins, of Tennessee, objected, declaring that no valid election had been held. The joint session separated. The House voted one hundred and twenty-six to sixty-three to count Louisiana. The Senate, after a severe struggle to draw in extraneous matters, also voted to count Louisiana.

The House again met and proceeded with the count until Georgia was reached, when Butler objected because the Georgia college had not voted on the proper day, and for other reasons. Much confusion ensued, which Wade ended by ordering the Senate to its own chamber. The House then voted, one hundred and fifty to forty-one, that Georgia should not be counted. The Senate, after a most perplexing and laughable struggle, declared that in the face of the concurrent resolution concerning Georgia, the objection in joint session was out of order. The houses again met in joint session in absolute conflict.

Wade ordered Georgia to be read as directed by the concurrent resolution. Butler objected. Wade would hear no objection. Butler appealed from Wade's decision. Wade would allow no appeal and ordered the count to proceed. Butler moved that the Senate have permission to retire. Motion not in order. Butler insisted that they should control their own hall. Amid the most intense excitement Wade ordered the count to proceed. Conkling commenced reading the result, but his voice was drowned by cries of order.

The noise became deafening, when Speaker Colfax sprang to the desk, proclaiming that the Vice President must be obeyed in joint session, and ordered the sergeant-at-arms to arrest disorderly persons. Colfax was ordering and appealing probably two minutes, during which time the sergeant-at-arms had distributed his men well through the house, before partial order was restored, when reading the result, and its proclamation followed, and the houses separated.

The Senate immediately adjourned.

In the House Butler introduced a resolution that Wade's and the Senate's action was a gross invasion of the rights of the House, which resolution was pending when the House adjourned.

The President has recognized Carlos Pie, consul of Spain at New Orleans.

Butler addressed the House after the Senate retired, in support of his resolution, very violently, and seemed to carry the House with him.

Speaker Colfax, calling Dawes to the chair, took the floor, and in a brief speech took the House away from Butler. Colfax defended the rulings of Wade and the action of the Senate. Desperate efforts were made in both houses to complicate Louisiana with collateral questions, but the presiding officers of both houses kept the question whether the votes should be counted or not in view as directed by the Constitution on joint rules of Congress. Nothing but technical observances of parliamentary proceedings saved the vote of Louisiana from being ruled out, or at least having attached to it damaging provisos. This action, it is thought, will clinch the recent Congressional elections in Louisiana.

CAIRO, Feb. 10.—The bulk grain movement by the new route, via Cairo and New Orleans, is fairly inaugurated. Large buyers for Europe are here, paying good prices for all grain that arrives.

RICHMOND, Feb 10.—Rev. Henry A. Wise, Jr., died to-day.

HAVANA, Feb 9.—The government is organizing several battalions of volunteers, part for garrison duty and part for active service. La Cabana, the strongest fortress in Havana, is now garrisoned by volunteers in place of the regulars sent to Cienfuegos.

The government has chartered several steamers, and is preparing some men-of-war and light draft steam launches, to sail to Rosian Keys to prevent the expected disembarkation of an expedition from Nassau. When it is accomplished the flotilla will proceed to attack the earthworks which the insurgents have erected at La Guavaja.

The rebels recently assembled at Managua to the number of three hundred, and were attacked by government troops and defeated, losing their arms, ammunition and eleven prisoners.

HAVANA, Feb. 10.—Arrests continue. Last night the police searched several houses.

Two companies of regulars left Matanzas for Macagua to suppress disturbances there. Vuelta Abajos continues quiet.

THE unparalleled tyranny of the military authorities at Jefferson, in arresting fourteen or fifteen citizens, and the killing of another without cause, has called forth a scathing article from the Texas Republican, which we think they deserve. It is too long for our columns, or we would publish it for the facts it contains as well as for the well applied castigation. It is evident from the article that the military authorities had but one object in view, and that was to tyrannize over the people of Jefferson for no other cause than the alleged murder of George W. Smith by some unknown person. The authorities, it seems, are pursuing their work with a vim worthy of a better cause. In some respects it resembles the Ashburn affair in Georgia. The detectives use every effort to make the freedmen purge themselves by implicating some of the first citizens. In this respect it resembles the Ashburn affair, and we have no doubt many of the persons under arrest were implicated in this way. The killing of Captain Perry was brought about at the instance of Colonel Mallory, the military mayor, who has no hesitation in admitting the fact. The party who shot Captain Perry was turned over to the civil authorities and given a mock trial before a scalawag judge and discharged. Oh, justice, where are you? Not in the possession of Wipston Banks, judge eighth district of Texas. The citizens of Jefferson are under a reign of terror equal to that of Robespierre. We sincerely condole with them and trust their situation may be made known to the higher military authorities, and their sufferings and hardships alleviated.—Shreveport Southwestern.

CHURCHES, STOLEN AND OTHER.

Soon after the conclusion of the war the Virginia Legislature passed an act with which to settle the conflicting claims of the two branches of the Methodist church to the property which had formerly belonged to the united communion. This act "vested all church property in the several congregations." The effect of the statute was such that, in cases in which the congregation was in communion with the Methodist Episcopal Church North, the property went, practically, to that body, and in those in which the congregation was in communion with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the property went to the Southern organization. This seemed to be a fair settlement of the difficulty; although, in some instances, it gave Southern church property to Northern congregations, which had taken possession of Southern churches. Soon afterward civil government was overturned in Virginia by the military reconstruction revolution, and the carpet baggers and negroes got possession of the ways and means of making a Constitution to suit their own purposes. They determined, among other things, to undo the settlement which had been effected by the Legislature, to steal the church property from its real owners, and to turn it over to the "trooly loil," scamps whose fingers itched to get possession of it. With this view they inserted in their Constitution the following provision:

> The rights of ecclesiastical bodies in and to church property, conveyed to them by regular deed of conveyance, shall not be affected by the late civil war, nor by any antecedent or subsequent event, nor by any act of the Legislature purporting to govern the same; but all such property shall pass to and be held by the parties set forth in the original deeds of conveyance, or the legal assignees of such original parties holding through or by conveyance; and any act or acts of the Legislature in opposition thereto shall be null and void.

In plain terms this means that five per cent. of the members of the Virginia Methodist congregations are to have the title to and the administration of the church property to the exclusion of the other ninety-five per cent. When, a few days ago, Mr. Beck, member of Congress from Kentucky, asked the solicitor of the Methodist Church North whether there were any congregations to take possession of these churches, the answer was that "they had no congregations at present, but if they could get possession of the churches they had strong hopes of being able to build up congregations." No doubt! Wherever there is a chance of plunder the harpies of carpet baggery will be sure to swoop upon it. Just let them have a chance at a church or State, and they will pick the bones so dry that a mosquito could not get a living from them afterward. The Virginia suffrage-amnesty commission, now in Washington, have presented this point as one of the grievances of which the people complain, but it is not probable that the Radical majority will view the stealing of the Methodist church property otherwise than as a natural right of "trooly loil" carpet baggers to appropriate everything on which they can lay their patriotic hands.—Crescent.

GENERAL SANBORN, of Minnesota, is in favor of supplying the Indians with guns, on the ground that their bows and arrows are more deadly in their hands than firearms. The effective distance to which an arrow can be thrown is about eighty yards. An expert warrior, drawing three at a time, can discharge them so rapidly that he will have the third arrow in the air before the first reaches its destination. At the Philip Kearney massacre, eighty-two men and officers were killed in less than one hour, and only two were slain by bullets.

The Suez and Darien Ship Canals.

It seems strange in looking back that a few miles of land should have been allowed to cost the mercantile world so many millions of dollars in needlessly long voyages around Capes Horn and Good Hope, when the expenditure of less than a hundred millions would have lessened the voyage to India and Japan by many thousands of miles. It has remained for the present generation, however, to pierce the Isthmuses of Suez and Darien by the construction of ship canals. For fourteen years thousands of men have been engaged in making a pathway for the commerce of the world through the shifting sands of Suez. Another year, it is estimated, will see the work completed. The isthmus, at its narrowest part, is something more than seventy miles wide, but the canal when finished will be one hundred miles in length. It will be three hundred feet wide, and will float vessels drawing twenty four feet of water. The construction of this work has been attended with almost incredible labor and immense expense. The course of the canal is due north and south, and there are no locks. Forty steam dredges are employed in the excavation of the sand, each of which cost $160,000. The sum thus far expended upon the work is $40,000,000! As the sand is excavated it is piled upon the bank on either side, and thus the embankments rise fifty feet above the level of the cut. When the canal is opened, the vessels which pass through it are not to be permitted to use their own paddle-wheels, as the waves thus created would wash away the soft and sandy banks; but they are to be towed by tugs of a peculiar construction, working upon an endless chain submerged at the bottom of the canal. In carrying out a similar enterprise on the Isthmus of Darien the labor would be greatly lessened. Only thirty miles of land divide the Atlantic and Pacific oceans in its narrowest part, and the soil, instead of being a desert waste of sand, as in the case of the Isthmus of Suez, is partly arable and partly mountainous and rugged. The difficulties in the way of a successful construction of a canal are thus not greater than have been met and overcome in many parts of the United States. Again, all the water used in the construction of the Suez canal must be brought from the two seas it connects; but on the Isthmus of Panama there are rivers whose waters would be of the greatest value in the prosecution of such an undertaking. The only lion at present in the path of this commendable enterprise appears to be rather political than natural. The United States of Colombia have raised certain objections, the precise nature of which are unknown, but which it is understood to be the secret mission of Mr. Caleb Cushing to remove by diplomacy. The isthmus fairly belonged to New Granada, but the cession of the Darien provinces has nominally placed it under the control of Colombia. It is to be hoped that the present diplomatic difficulties will be speedily removed, and that the new canal, when completed, will be open to the commerce of all nations, free from any narrow and oppressive restrictions.—The Albion.

ROMISH BLASPHEMY.—We have before us some extracts from a Romish work entitled "The Glories of Mary." It has been cordially recommended by the late Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, in the following words:

> "We hereby approve of this translation of 'The Glories of Mary,' and cordially recommend it to the faithful.

ANCIENT PRAYER.

The "Trymer of Salsbury," published in 1531, has the following prayer at the bottom of the title page:

God be in my Bede,
And in myne Understandynge,
God be in my Eyen,
And in my Lookynge,
God be in my mouth,
And in my Speakynge,
God be in my Herte,
And in my Thynkinge,
God be in myn End,
And at my Departynge.

To the Younger Members of My Conference.

We must not forget that families take us much nearer to the center of their social circle and domestic associations than they do any other class of men—oftentimes much nearor than some of their near relations. This creates, on our part, a corresponding obligation of no small magnitude. The relation of pastor and flock is exceedingly near and confidential. This relation is very soon caught hold of and understood by the children. They soon look upon the minister as standing next to their parents. Indeed, so far as example is concerned, he oftentimes occupies the first position in their estimation. What the preacher does and says they may do and say, of course. So that while our intercourse in families should be free and social, it should be exceedingly prudent and circumspect. The children follow us wonderfully.

And we must remember, too, that the families we visit did not choose us for their pastor. Quite likely they would have preferred another. But our people are pretty well educated to the idea of receiving the pastor sent them by the bishop and Conference.—For my own part, I do not attach so much importance to the mere likes and dislikes for this and that preacher, on the part of this and that member of the church, growing ont of merely personal and social considerations, as some seem to. When our Conference, in the examination of our characters, has "nothing against" a preacher, I assume that nobody else has; and when a preacher's character "passes" our Conference I regard him as good enough to be pastor to anybody. After that a complaint in my ear against a preacher, to weigh much with me, must rise above the mere indefinable considerations of social etiquette, and show reasons why it was not brought to the notice of a presiding elder or presented at Conference. The passage of character, with us, means something, and weighs something with me. We assume to be pretty good judges of both personal and ministerial character. I have met with very few Methodist preachers whom I did not consider good enough to be pastor to my family.

But notwithstanding all these considerations, proper enough to be regarded on the one hand, we ourselves should understand that, on our part, it is not enough—by all means it is not enough—for us that our characters pass at Conference. We must rise a long way above that. The absence of legal objections may suffice for others, but will by no means suffice for us.

It is truly wonderful how many different ingredients it takes to make up what we call character; and how easy a matter it is to increase or diminish these ingredients judiciously for personal improvement. This is the business of wise men in this life.

Almost all men pay too much attention to reputation and not enough to character. Men are much more apt to appreciate highly the estimate put on them by others than their own real worth. My reputation is not my property, but that of others. I ought to desire to be thought well of for the sake of others, but not for my own sake. There is a popular sentiment, for which I have not quite as much contempt as it deserves, which jingles along about stealing a purse and getting trash; but in stealing ones good name gets that which naught enriches him, but makes one poor indeed.

That may do very well, so far as I am informed, for Shakspeare an foolery, pride and selfishness, but will not do, I am very sure, for good sense and Christian morals. Let your reputation go; that is other people's business. They will take care of that to their liking. Take care of your character; that is your business. You are responsible for what you are; others for what you are esteemed to be. Whatever else you do, be independent.

Never confess to a position second rate to anybody. But do not claim a first rate position you do not occupy. We must be leaders in society. God and the church have placed us in the leadership, and we must occupy that position or fail. No man's head ought to stand higher or more erect than that of a Methodist preacher.—Who holds a higher office than we?

We ought to look with pity, if not with complacency, upon the strutting, cob-web superiority of professionalists and dandies who owe their superiority to the schoolmaster and the tailor. The superiority of true men rests upon personal merit. We sometimes speak of self-made men. All men who are made at all are self-made. The idea that a good father, a little money and a college can make a man is a great blunder. Other things may be subsidiary, but well directed personal effort alone can ever make a man.

We should not only possess such characters as will cause men to recognize us in the church, but out also. Many of us lack what might be called outside force. I know ministers who do everything well in the church, not much out. It seems to me we might, many of us, carry a deeper and wider influence outside the church.

But it must be remembered that a proper, just and gentlemanly self respect and claim to fair superiority not only harmonizes with, but is based upon and inseparable from the deep and noble personal humility so fully and so frequently enjoined in Scripture. A timid and hesitating servility is a very different thing from Christian humility. Show thyself a workman. But I have several other things to say.

MOBILE CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: Have you seen the minutes of our Conference? If you have, your practiced eye has ran over the statistical report contained therein, and you have been horrified and humiliated by ascertaining that our loss of membership amounts to 2,487, and this loss we have sustained during the single year 1868. Alas, for the Mobile Conference!

You have seen the noble cavalry horse, worn out by poor feeding and hard service, lying abandoned upon the plain. The aerial carpet baggers are wheeling over him, singing, or saying—carrion creatures never sing—

"He sleeps his last sleep,
He has fought his last battle."

These administrators de bonis non pick out the eye first, not because it is the sweetest morsel, but because it seems to look reproachfully upon thieves, even out of the head of a dead animal.

These thoughts occurred to me upon my first reading of the aforesaid statistical report, when a friend suggested to me that there were some appointments not reported; whereupon I returned to the minutes and found the following stations and circuits reported blank: Citronelle, Bay Shore, Ocean Springs, St. Stephens, Scooba and Gainesville, Bridgeville, Caledonia, Athens, Yellow Creek, Viola, Fayetteville, and Choctaw Corner—twelve good appointments, quite enough to make a good district for one of our best presiding elders. When a pastor has died or moved away, or when from any other cause the members were not reported from an appointment, it has been customary for the secretary of the Conference to refer to the minutes of the preceding year, and thus supply the deficiency. I hope our secretary will feel bound by this "common law," or that some other means will be resorted to for the completion of the statistical report of the Mobile Conference; and then, I am persuaded, we shall be found alive, and our friend, the enemy, will be relieved from the fear of being obliged to administer upon "our little effects."

One word about the Advocate, for my paper is growing short, as you see. Glad of it. Are you? Well, you make your paper too good, doctor. It gets stolen on the route somewhere, so that I receive only one number a month; and Dr. Summers' paper is nearly as good, or nearly as bad—what shall I say?—for it manages to get stolen more than half the time. I have the promise of subscribers when the papers come regularly—when "the clock keeps time."

LETTER FROM CHINA.

Shanghai, China, Dec. 9, 1868.

Mr. Editor: Missionaries are constantly arriving from England and America. Scarcely a month passes that does not chronicle an addition to our forces. The interior is gradually becoming occupied, and the aspects of our general work all along the coast line are brightening. Toleration is everywhere proclaimed, and the country is now decidedly open and inviting. Mobs, violence and persecution, sometimes, however—as recently at Yangchow and Formosa—are still experienced, but their effect rather stimulates than abates the progress of our work.

We are anxious to see our stations multiplied, and had hopes that early reinforcements would enable us to move abreast with other missions, but recent letters from the secretary of the board and Brother Smithson quite disappoint our expectations in that respect, and in the meantime our only native preacher has sickened and died, leaving us almost helpless and hopeless.

By the mail just in we are in receipt of a small remittance from the treasurer, which has been appropriated to paying off the balance of our debt, which is now reduced to a minimum. But he gives us but little encouragement for the future. What are we to do? For ourselves we have resolved the question:—We will never abandon the China mission. You can't starve us out. The siege has lasted seven years, and though it last as many more we will not surrender. But perhaps you—I mean the church—are too well satisfied of that already, hence do not concern yourself about it.

Under the circumstances I am not able to preach much, but am doing the next thing to it—teaching and printing. From nine till twelve o'clock I am engaged in the Anglo-Chinese school, which consists of forty young men, who are looking forward to appointments as the future ministers and consuls to Western nations. They are of the higher and better class of Chinese society, and I have so far succeeded in gaining their confidence that I have no hesitation in pronouncing the school under my control and influence. I shall not give it up again voluntarily. Every other afternoon, from one o'clock till five P. M., is devoted exclusively to the tri-weekly newspaper, of which I am editor. It is a secular, and is chiefly occupied with the news, foreign and domestic, scientific instruction, etc., and advertisements. It has numerous readers, and through it I hope to instruct a large number in the knowledge of the truth, and thus, by removing the basis of many of their superstitions, prepare them for the truth as it is in Jesus. They all know the editor is a Kiau Se. The balance of my time is employed editing the Native Church Intelligencer, our only church organ, of which I am also proprietor. It has met with wonderful success, and has been most highly commended by our oldest and foremost missionaries. The native churches are delighted with it, and the native preachers heartily support it. It is taken by all the missions, without exception, and circulates at all the ports and in the interior, wherever there is a native preacher. You see, therefore, that I am fully employed, and perhaps as usefully and successfully as is possible.

As a teacher and editor I have access to all classes, and that constantly. If the board wishes me to release the school and papers I will do so, provided they will enable me, without distraction, to do something better. But until then I shall never voluntarily surrender my present position before this people, thirsting for knowledge and dying without salvation. Under the circumstances I need not apologize for brevity and haste.

Watchman, What of the Night?

What of our ecclesiastical night? It is only ecclesiastically that the Methodist Episcopal Church South was ever enshrouded by darkness. Spiritually, as is known to all, she shone, even in the midnight of her affliction, with heavenly luster. But as a church night, temporary night, overtook us. Our wealth was suddenly, as with a tornado, swept away. Our publishing interest was in the very jaws of bankruptcy, our missionary operations were checked, and our whole church machinery, if not impaired, was sadly interrupted. But more than all this, the Egyptian night of apathy flapped her sable wings over us. Our people were discouraged. It seemed more than Herculean to them to receive the "situation." What of this night? Have our people exercised their adaptability? Have they learned to receive things as they are? A great many remind me of a boy, whom, when a student at Gothingen, on an icy December morning, I noticed from my window, crying piteously. Inquiring why he stood still there in the cold crying, he boohooed the more loudly, saying: "That just serves my father right. Why did he refuse to purchase me a pair of gloves?" The scamp! I told him to run and get warm. Thus to run, though, appears very hard to a great many.

What of the night now? Thank God! there seem to be indications of the approaching day. When we see our members in St. Louis donate over $50,000 to our Centenary College; when we see that in Baltimore we own seven respectable church houses, and very recently Dr. Huston laid the corner-stone of the eighth; when we hear from our beloved Bishop Marvin that our Conferences on the Pacific are in a prosperous condition; when we hear that the collections for our Indian missions, now being taken by Bishop McTyeire, are meeting expectations; when we see that the Methodist Episcopal Church South sustains more weekly church papers than her opulent sister; when we see and hear all this, we infer that day, even ecclesiastical day, is drawing nigh. But it is, after all, but a few stray rays of light that have thus far reached us. Night is still upon us, though rapidly passing away. Yes, night is still upon us. In the last number of the Southern Christian Advocate we see that its able editor, Dr. Meyers, makes the calculation that in some few of our Conferences our membership did not, on an average, pay more in support of the ministry than about five cents each per week. We presume this calculation will hold throughout the bounds of our church. Do not these figures disclose a distressing truth? Surely our people expend more for shoe blacking than it appears they contribute in support of the Gospel. It occurs to me that our people despise the day of small things. Because they cannot now give a bale of cotton or a hogshead of sugar, they even withhold the half dollar which they are perfectly able, weekly, or in other instances monthly, to contribute.

Specially, however, it is our missionary work which is still in the dark shadow and valley of night. I shall not even mention China, Brazil and the Indian territory. Among us the field is ripe for the harvest. But it seems it is in vain that the Lord commands us: "Put ye in the sickle." The night of prejudices and apathy is upon us, and while it is night we sleep and slumber. Now is the accepted time to exert ourselves strenuously in supporting home missions. And especially should our German population be gathered into the church. In all of our Southern cities there are thousands of Germans who, if missionaries were sent among them, would be gained for our church. We should have missionaries at Saint Louis, Nashville, Louisville, Memphis and Galveston. Let us do our duty, lest God remove our "candlestick." What of the night? Shall a vigorous home mission programme soon be inaugurated in order to save the thousands to our right and left who perish for lack of knowledge, and knowledge which we might communicate? Will not Bishop Kavanaugh, who takes so much interest in the German work, take it in hand and say, episcopally: "Let there be light!"

Making the Bible Utter Falsehoods.

Mr. Editor: How blind and intense must the sectarianism be that in its zeal for party or sect should perpetrate this offense against the Bible and its author? Yet that the "new" versionists do this the following criticisms clearly show. When will such zeal give place to sober common sense?

Straining at Gnats and Swallowing Camels.—In the new version of the New Testament, made by the American (Baptist) Bible Union, Luke 11: 38, is thus rendered: "And the Pharisee, seeing it, wondered that he (Jesus) did not first immerse himself before dinner."

Upon this translation of the Greek word Ebaptisthe, a writer in the Congregationalist very justly and pertinently remarks: "1. The rendering of this passage as it stands in the new version is an absolute falsehood. The Pharisee never wondered that Jesus 'did not immerse himself before dinner.' 2. This rendering teaches that it was the custom of the Jews to immerse, regularly, before taking their meals. This is also false. 3. The middle voice immerses the rendering in the ridiculous absurdity that, to fulfill the ordinance, it was a custom for a person to perform the ceremony upon himself. These are large camels to swallow when the gnats are scrupulously strained out at the communion table." These criticisms come from one who recalls the time "when I 'went down into the water,' through an aperture in ice ten inches thick, and was baptized.—(And I have never regretted it.")

And this paragraph is forwarded by one who "went down into the water" over forty years ago, and has long regretted it, and expects to do so through life.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Port Gibson, Miss., Jan. 28, 1869.

Mr. Editor: While I rejoice at your good fortune in receiving so many nice things to be "placed to the credit of brotherly love and quarterage," your editorials on the subject constrain me to brag a little, seeing I can rival editor, publisher, presiding elder, etc.

I received a New Year's congratulation exceedingly refreshing. A note, written in such stylo and expressing such feelings as would have made a heart of stone rejoice, $26 in cash, household and kitchen conveniences, a big gobbler, a pair of hogs—Woburn and Chester—and oranges, cakes, mince pies, etc., in profusion. Port Gibson is coming to life. Your's truly,

John A. B. Jones.

Dr. Wendell Holmes has been telling of a doctor who bled and physicked the Pilgrims in the Mayflower. This man, Dr. Fuller, is quoted as writing to Governor Bradford, in 1660, "I have been to Matapan, and let twenty of those people blood."

Forty thousand hares were sent from Germany to Paris for Christmas dinners.

The Great Western Railroad of England cost nearly $350,000 a mile.

THE MINISTER'S WAGES.

We have published in this paper many appeals in behalf of a suitable support of the ministry. We would abate nothing of what has been urged in this respect. But, while there is no excuse for neglect of this by the people, it must be admitted that some ministers have a way of talking on this subject that is uncomely, utterly unworthy of the profession. We commend to such the following paragraphs from the Northwestern Presbyterian:

Paul, in charging Timothy, says: "Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content." This was the full amount of what Jacob requested of the Lord: "If God will be with me, and keep me in this way that I go, and keep me in bread to eat and raiment to put on." And this seems to have been about the extent of the promises of God to the prophets, and of Jesus to his apostles, and of the apostles to all who should succeed them in the work of the ministry. Ministers greatly err when they chaffer for wages, or make salary the condition of service. When they do so, they seem to have forgotten their first love and their early vow.

When a young man is called of God, and filled with a desire for the ministry, he proposes no bargain. He confides in Christ for all he wants, and he knows the terms Christ sent out the primitive preachers without purse or scrip, and with the expectation that they should live as he did—on the liberality of those to whom they would minister. He told them "the laborer is worthy of his hire," and put them on this principle of supply. So it was with those servants whom, after he ascended up on high, he first gave as "gifts to men." And so Paul argues to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 9: 7-10)

It is on this principle, and with this expectation, the "called" young man would devote himself to the ministry. He pleads with Jesus to accept him, and make him an embassador, and honor him in the saving of men. What he asks is privilege; and if he thinks of hire, it is souls he would have. A minister ought never to forget his early earnest pleadings, nor the ardor with which he vowed when he gave himself as "a living sacrifice."

An incident is narrated of Whitefield and Wesley, to this effect: Wesley had crossed the ocean to proclaim the good tidings in the colonies. The work was great, and he called on Whitefield, "Come!" "What shall I have?" "Food to eat and raiment to put on, and a house to shelter you—such as your master had not—and a crown of glory that fadeth not away." This was enough.

And do not all true laborers have the same? Then come, young man! Join us, and labor faithfully, and the wages shall be yours.—Presbyterian Union.

National Debts.—The national debts of the principal European States during the last thirty years have been the subject of interesting statistics recently published by a German paper. In 1829, it is asserted that the public debts of France, Austria, Russia and Italy amounted to $1,500,000,000, paying about $85,000,000 a year as interest. In 1863 the debts of the same States had risen to $6 000,000,000, paying about $300,000,000 a year as interest. In Great Britain, on January 5, 1851, the national debt was about $4,035,000,000, and on March 31, 1868, was $3,985,000,000, a reduction of $50,000,000. In Holland the debt in 1851 was $491,807,432, and in 1868 was $387,297,565, a reduction of $104,509,867. In Prussia the debt in 1851 was $148,324,618, and in 1868 was $323,846,567, including $131,760,000 for railways. Prussia has, therefore, increased her debt by the amount of $164,521,949. In France the debt in 1851 was $1,069,200,000, and in 1868 was $2,328,707,418, besides a floating debt of $2,682,000,000. In Italy the total debt of the small States now forming the dominions of Victor Emanuel was $200,000,000, and on December 31, 1867, the debt of the present kingdom of Italy was $1,355,081,632. The debt of Austria in 1850 was $511,600,000, and in 1867 was $1,512 657,948. In Russia the interest on the public debt in 1860 amounted to $21,372,485, and in 1868 to $52,213,907. The principal of the Russian debt is of a highly complicated character, so that a classification is almost impossible. There are also bills of credit issued by the government amounting to $596,729,900, which are forced into circulation by an imperial ukase. The destruction of public credit by an unlimited issue of paper money is of long standing in Russia, and the present government has been endeavoring to remedy the financial embarrassment of the country by a steady withdrawal of the treasury notes.

BEING POLITE.

I am an old pastor, and as I cannot preach any longer, I take great pleasure in thinking over the events of my long life. When I preached in the city of B., I had two neighbors. One of them, who lived at the right of my cottage, did not seem friendly to anybody. He seldom spoke to any one on the street, and the boys disliked him very much, because he was very cross and crabbed. He was noted for being penurious, and seldom did any poor person receive a gift from him.

To the left of my cottage there lived a poor shoemaker, whose whole time was occupied in taking care of his large family. He had a very pleasing face, was friendly toward everybody, and was just the opposite of my neighbor at the right. Among the old shoemaker's eight children there was a boy about eight years old, who had blue eyes, red cheeks, light hair, and was as cheerful as a squirrel. His name was Little Peter, and though his father was poor, he had trained him to be very polite; and Little Peter was one of the most polite boys I ever knew.

For my part, I thought a great deal of him, and when his school teacher, who was a member of my congregation, told me how industrious and talented he was, I felt very anxious to see him have a good education. One winter evening, as I was sitting at my desk preparing my sermon for the following Sunday, I heard a rap at the door. 'Come in!' I said; and what was my astonishment to find my neighbor who lived at the right of the parsonage.

'Please, sir, do not be offended that I trouble you to night. I have an important matter which I thought I ought to lay before you.'

'I am very much pleased to see you,' I replied, 'and I hope you will speak freely.'

'You know,' replied the neighbor, 'that I take a walk every day, and as often as I pass the door of the shoemaker who lives close by us, his little boy Peter salutes me with so much kindness and such a pleased face that he has deeply affected me. Though he has kept it up for a year or two, I have never returned his salutation, and yet he is as pleasant as ever. So I have been thinking to myself that his politeness must be natural to him, and that the boy has a good heart. One day I thought that I would test him; and, accordingly, as I went by the shoemaker's shop, I dropped my money purse right near where Little Peter was standing, and then I hurried on. I thought I would see whether Peter was honest, as well as polite; but I had not gone a dozen steps before he came running after me, and handing me my money purse, said to me: 'This is yours, sir; please take it!' Now, this circumstance has affected me very deeply, and I have thought that I ought to do what I can to help that poor family. I am advanced in life, and am rich, and need but little to live upon.—So, in the first place, I would like to help the shoemaker and his family; and, in the next place, I would like to do what I can especially for Peter. What I desire of you, sir, is to give me your advice.'

I took hold of my neighbor's hand, thanked him heartily for revealing to me such good desires, and then told him that I thought the poor shoemaker and his family were very worthy objects of his attention. I then told him that Little Peter was a boy of unusual talents as well as of great politeness, and of undoubted honesty, and then advised my neighbor to provide for his education. He then promised that he would pay especial attention to the wants of the shoemaker and his family, and after half an hour's time he bade me 'good night;' but the remarkable circumstance so affected me, and led me to think over the change that God had wrought in him, that it was a late hour before I went to sleep.

The next week this same neighbor went into the shoemaker's little shop. The ceiling was so low that he could hardly stand up in it, and he found out that the shoemaker did not make shoes at all, but only mended them, for there were piles of old worn out shoes all around the room, but there was not a sign of any new leather, or of any new boots or shoes. Of course the shoemaker was almost beside himself with astonishment to see the man who had passed for a cross and ugly person, and who seldom spoke to anybody, come into his shop, and, especially, address him in the pleasant manner in which he did.

The rich gentleman then said: 'I am needing a new pair of boots, and I would like you to make me a pair. Can you do it at once?'

'Well—well—I can make shoes and boots, too, but—but—really, I don't know—I believe I haven't got leather enough.'

The truth was, the shoemaker did not know what to say, yet he knew that he had no leather in his shop that was fit for making boots, for it had been many months since he had made a pair, and he was really too poor to lay in a fresh stock of leather.

As soon as the rich man saw the poor shoemaker's difficulty, he said to him:

'O, well; never mind the leather; I will take care of that.'

The shoemaker hardly knew what to think of him when he insisted upon his taking his measure. But the measure was taken, and the rich neighbor bade him 'good by.' That evening there was brought to the shoemaker a large roll of leather, and if his name had not been on it, he would certainly have thought it was designed for somebody else.

The next day a supply of flour, meal, potatoes and beef were brought to the shoemaker's little shop, and he and his family were rejoiced beyond measure at the good fortune which they had met with.

But Little Peter's education was yet to be provided for. My rich neighbor saw the school teacher in regard to him, gave him a sum of money to pay great attention to him, to teach him in special hours of the day, provide him with all the books that he needed, and to prepare him for the university with the greatest care.

Now, I am glad to say that all the kindness which this rich man showed to the poor shoemaker and his family did not have the slightest effect toward making them lose their politeness or kindness of heart.—The tide now greatly turned in the shoemaker's favor, and as he began to put one new pair of boots or shoes on another in his little bow window, his customers began to multiply, and after a few months he had to move into a larger shop, and his business increased constantly. Little Peter progressed very finely at school, but nobody could say to him that the good fortune which he had met with had spoiled him.

Now, when the rich man saw that his kindness was not misplaced, but that the shoemaker and his family, and especially Little Peter, deserved all that they had received at his hands, he determined to continue his kindness toward others. In fact, he spent the whole of his remaining life in seeking out and aiding the poor and neglected worthy persons in the city of B. But it was his regret, to the latest day of his life, that he had not commenced such kindness before. Still, his regret was sweetened by the fact that God had used Little Peter's kindness and politeness to soften his heart, and to lead him to devote the last of his life to a high and worthy purpose.

If a boy or girl cannot become very rich in money, each can become rich in goodness; and who ever will do as Little Peter did will find it both pleasant and profitable all through life.—Methodist.

ROOM IN HEAVEN.

"And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth; and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal."—Rev. 21: 16.

There are some who never think of heaven. In their mind a thought of the better country would starve for utter loneliness. Others think of it occasionally, when the voice of sweet music steals upon their ear, or Providence or the preacher lifts them above earth. But when they do think of it, how poor and meagre their thoughts; to them it is a narrow circumscribed spot in the universe, a small place just large enough for their church, but too small to admit within its pearly enclosure even the good beyond their communion. Such were not the views entertained by John when, on the lonely Isle, he saw, in grand panoramic view, the heavenly city.

John was in the Spirit on the mountain of holy contemplation, and he had a delightful conversation with one of the royal surveyors of the heavenly country. He says, verse 15, "And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the walls thereof." The idea he gives us, is, that there was solidity, firmness, durability and strength, all combined with indescribable beauty, surpassing grandeur and infinite glory.

The city, as he saw it, was in the form of a magnificent cube of vast dimensions. The surveyor had the golden reed, and he measured the city in the presence of his visitor. It was one thousand two hundred furlongs (stadia) long, and one thousand two hundred furlongs broad, and one thousand two hundred furlongs high. The length, and the breadth and the height of it are equal.

Here is absolutely uniformity, a thing long talked of and prayed for, but something not to be realized on this side the heavenly home.

In this cubic form the new Jerusalem recalled somewhat the form of the far-famed old Jerusalem, on its escarpment above the valley of the Kedron.

In this view of the great city we are quite in harmony with the rabbinical books.

We take the passage as it reads—"one thousand two hundred furlongs," which, when reduced to feet and cubed, is 948,938 000 000,000, 000,000,000 cubic feet. The half of which we reserve for the throne of glory and the heavenly court. Half of the remainder I reserve for the angel's thrones, dominions, principalities and powers. Half of the remainder I reserve for celestial gardens of heavenly fruits and flowers. Half of the remainder for shady bowers and lovely parks.—Half of the walks, and the remainder, or thirty second remainder for the golden streets, and of the whole, I divide into rooms of (20) twenty feet square, and ten feet high; of rooms we have 7,413,573,125,000,-000,000,000.

Then I suppose that this world was populated at present with say 900,000,000 of human beings, and that three generations pass away every hundred years, that is allowing thirty-three and a half years for each generation, and at the close of the seven thousandth year the trumpeter will proclaim that "time would be no longer," and that earth's population would all be brought home to the city of our God.

I also suppose that there are in the universe of our Father (800,-000) eight hundred thousand worlds like ours existing under the same circumstances, and for the same term of years as ours; each having the same number of inhabitants as our own, and each inhabitant obedient to the universal come.

Take all these multitudes of human or created beings, and the heavenly home the angel measured for John and for us, dear reader, would afford (49) forty-nine rooms as are measured above for each inhabitant of all of the eight hundred thousand worlds, and leave more than four millions of cubic feet yet unsurveyed. "And yet there is room." O how true it is that in "my Father's house there are many mansions."—Guide to Holiness.

CHURCH NEWS.

It is asserted that in London recently one hundred and four Episcopalians went over to Rome in a single month. The London Ritualists claim to have converted the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The German and Swiss Methodist Conference is barely twenty years old, and has but a little over forty preachers. It is receiving rough treatment from the German theologians, who seem as fearful of its neology as were the orthodox New Englanders a hundred years ago. It will improve on acquaintance.

The semi centennial anniversary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held last week in Washington.—Last year the contributions amounted to $614,137; year before, $635,-320 20. The aggregate contribution of the five decades amounts to $8 531,377 10. They are now in debt a little over $100,000—a loan, on which interest is being paid.

There are in all four hundred and thirty churches and other places of worship in New York, with accommodations for 300,000 persons. Of these three hundred and fifty-six are Protestants. There are one hundred and seventeen thousand four hundred and fifty children in attendance upon three hundred and eighty-one Sunday schools of different denominations.

The New School Presbyterians of Philadelphia have done a noble thing in aiding their feeble churches. Four churches needed aid. A meeting of the various pastors and some leading laymen was called to consider the matter. They resolved to raise immediately the sum necessary to relieve all these churches of embarrassment. Two men subscribed $20,000 each, and soon more than half the sum needed was promised. The balance will speedily be raised, and four churches will be lifted from their embarrassing struggles.

The Chinese in the Sandwich Islands are greatly increasing.—There are about two hundred in the district of Hilo, including merchants, stewards, peddlers and laborers. They are a valuable element of community, though few of them are Christians. Mr. Coan went to a Chinese sugar plantation near Hilo, on a late Sabbath, preached to them, and took up a collection for missionary objects amounting to $97! They are ready and generous in their help in building churches. They seem ashamed of their idolatry, and their children by Hawaiian wives are all in the Sabbath school, receiving a Christian education. One of their number, a merchant, has left his store and preaches to his countrymen. He is a man of good education, understands six Chinese dialects, besides English and Hawaiian, and is a perfect gentleman as well as an earnest Christian. He seems just the man to evangelize his countrymen, who are somewhat prond of him. At a late meeting which he held at Hilo, not one of the Chinese were absent. The Missionary Herald well asks: "Can so good an account be given of the Chinese in California? And if not, why not?"

Our China Mission.—The New York Advocate has an account of the annual meeting of the mission, which began at Foochow, October 16, Rev. R. S. Maclay, D. D., presiding. Thirteen native helpers and fifteen student helpers were present.

Rev. S. L. Baldwin was chosen English, and Yek Ing Kwang Chinese secretary. Twelve student helpers were admitted. Sia Ching Chiong deceased during the year. The statistics are:

The Mission Rooms' Slip says:

Our China mission, under the authority of the General Missionary Committee, has divided itself into three circuits, and the plan of the work has also been announced to the church. The centers of these three circuits are Foochow, Kiu Kiang and Peking, the capital of the empire. In this division of the work the printing establishment remains at Foochow, under the supervision of Brother L. N. Wheeler.

Accordingly the appointments for 1868 and 1869 were made as follows:

Ching Sing Tong Circuit.—L. N. Wheeler; Ching Sing Tong, Li Yu Mi; Ngnkang and Kwihung, Ting Neng Chieh; Kanchiah and Simmeka, Ung Pek Sing; Mission Press, L. N. Wheeler; American church, L. N. Wheeler.

Tieng Ang Tong Circuit.—S. L. Baldwin; Tieng Ang Tong, Hu Po Mi; Hokchiang, Sia Sek Ong; Ngucheng, Ma Tiong Mwang; Ngnka, Ngu Sia Mi; Kucheng, Hu Sing Mi; Boys' school, S. L. Baldwin; Girls' school, B. Woolston, S. H. Woolston.

Hok Ing Tong Circuit.—N. Sites; Hok Ing Tong, Yek Ing Kwang; Minchiang, Hu Yong Mi; Yenping, Li Cha Mi; Lamyit, Ling Ming Sang; Hinghwa, Sing Ching Ting.

Kiukiang Circuit.—V. C. Hart, E. S. Todd.

Peking Circuit.—R. H. Maclay, H. H. Lowry.

The examination upon the first half of the Psalms, the epistles of Peter and James, geography, biblical chronology and "Confucianism and Christianity compared," were creditable. The anniversaries included meetings for discussing missions, Bible operations and anti-opium.

A Sting Cure.—A French physician, Dr. Desmartis, has introduced a new cure, which is said to be attracting considerable attention.—The process is simple and consists in causing an insect to sting the afflicted part. The cure was suggested to the physician by a distinguished Frenchman afflicted with rheumatism, who, while pulling a handful of weeds in his garden, was stung in the wrist by a wasp. The arm swelled, but the rheumatic pain disappeared. The next day the pain attacked his leg, but an application of the sting exorcised it again and he was enabled to walk with ease. During three years which followed the discovery he cured every attack by the application of the same remedy.

The discovery, however, is not new. A Roman commander, it is said, carried with him an insect which he applied for the cure of an eye disease to which he was subject. Cases are recorded in which cholera and epilepsy were cured by the sting of a scorpion. The nephew of Humboldt, during his practice in Havana, inoculated over two thousand men of the military and naval garrison with the poison of the scorpion, and out of over six hundred who were afterward attacked by yellow fever, only sixteen died. The poison of serpents has long been known as a cure for leprosy.

The principle is an old one, older than the homeopathic system, to which it perhaps belongs. It is simply curing one disease by introducing another, or antidoting one poison by administering another. The ravages of animal poisons in the human system are daily checked by the administration of vegetable and mineral poisons, and it is not at all strange that diseases caused by vegetable, mineral or animal poisons should be cured by the introduction of an active animal poison.

However, there is good reason to question whether it is the poison of the sting that cures the local pain, as in rheumatism. The system of the German, called "Bundschiedism," originated in the bite of a fly, which, it was found, relieved pain in the hand. From this suggestion, apparatus and a system of cure have been constructed, the application consisting in picking the skin so as to inflame it. This cure, it is said, has been quite successful in nervous paralytic and rheumatic affections.

Japanese tea, to be properly prepared, it is stated, should be treated differently from tea from China. The Japan tea should be nearly boiled. Tea carefully drawn, it is asserted, is a most powerful antispasmodic.

FARM AND GARDEN.

SMALL FARMS.

THE FUTURE OF SOUTHERN AGRICULTURE.

We copied from the Planters' Banner, the other day, a paragraph on small sugar farms. The Sugar Planter, of West Baton Rouge, also copies the paragraph, and makes it the text of the following suggestive remarks:

We fully agree with our contemporary upon the subject of small sugar farms. In the present condition of affairs, they yet form the mighty lever to move our people from old habits and old customs, into cheaper, better and more satisfactory developments of the soil. But the small farm system can as well be applied to other agricultural pursuits as in the cultivation of cane, and we have observed, so far as our knowledge extends since the war, that they were more successful than large plantations. The reason of this is obvious. On large plantations the work was never, or rarely, thoroughly done from the time the crop was put in until it was gathered.

On the other, a few hands knew exactly what to do, when to do, and how to go about it. The consequence was the work was always well done, the eye of the owner being continually upon them. Somehow negroes rarely work as well in large gangs as they do in small ones. Better till a dozen acres properly than to have a dozen slurred over with what is technically called work. Experience has ever shown this, and it can be again demonstrated in the small farm system better than in the lordly heritage of a thousand acres. Sooner or later our planters will find the benefits of small farms to be superior to the plan they are now generally following. Labor is growing scarcer every year, while the peculiar ideas of the negro in regard to wages will render the cultivation of large crops precarious in the extreme. A planter with five or six hundred acres of cane in his field will be at the mercy of the laborer who may exact such wages as he thinks proper, and the planter be compelled to submit or lose his crop. The shoe will pinch on that point first, and he should be warned in time before risking too much in that branch of agriculture. On small farms the case will be quite different. Having but a few acres of cane at stake, he will be better enabled to resist unreasonable demands by employing one or two laborers only. White men will not be wanting to assist in such cases, where they would dislike to engage in taking off a large crop. As we view the case, it is the easiest way for planters to resist the unreasonable demands of freedmen. So soon as they begin to see that work can go on without specially soliciting their assistance, the quicker will they come to their senses. We have always been in favor of paying them reasonable wages for their labor, and punctually paying them at the stated time, but we are not in favor of their dictating terms under any circumstances—that would be to put a halter around the neck of Southern industry. Small farms will equalize the difference between labor and capital, and the quicker understood the better.

How Good Farmers Save Money.—They take good papers, and read them.

They keep accounts of farm operations.

They do not leave their implements scattered over the farm, exposed to rain, snow or heat.

They repair their tools and buildings at the proper time, and do not suffer a subsequent threefold expenditure of time and money.

They see that their fences are well repaired, and their cattle are not found grazing in the meadows, or grain fields, or orchards.

They do not refuse to make experiments in a small way of many new things.

They plant fruit trees well, care for them, and of course get good crops.

They practice economy by giving their stock good shelter during the winter, also good food, taking out all that is unsound, rotten or mouldy.

They do not keep tribes of cats and snarling dogs around their premises, who eat up more in a month than they are worth in their lifetime.

Lastly, they read the advertisements, know what is going on, and frequently save money by it.

Successful farming is made up by attention to little things. The farmer who does it best earns his money with best appreciation, and uses it with best results. Such men are the "salt of the earth."

How to Raise Quinces.—They can be raised as easily as apples or pears in the way we shall describe. There is no secret about it. Get the "orange" variety. See that they are entirely free of the borer before planting. Set six or eight feet apart in rich soil. Bandage the stem with two or three wrappings of old muslin, or any kind of cloth, so far down in the ground as possible, as the roots start from near the surface. Let this bandage run six or eight inches above the ground, then pile the soil compactly a couple of inches around the bandage, then renew this early every spring.—Fine, large golden quinces, rivaling the largest oranges, will bless your efforts annually.

Should the borer by any means steal in, ferret them out carefully with a piece of wire. Should they, however, get the advantage of you, and your trees become honeycombed, set out again young trees, so that by the time the old ones are gone the young ones will be finely bearing. We have raised these quinces in perfection, but not caring for the fruit they were removed when they were about to die from the operations of the worm.

Bonaparte, Wellington and Lee.—The Southern Quarterly, in a very able article on the Duke of Wellington's campaigns, has the following parallel between the achievements of the great British commander and those of General Robert E. Lee in Virginia during our late war:

General Lee, with a force not so large as the Anglo-Portuguese regular army which Wellington had under him when he encountered Massena in 1809—not half so large as his whole force if the Portuguese militia be taken into the account—in the space of twenty-eight days, in three battles, killed and wounded more men than Wellington ever killed and wounded during his whole career, from Assaye to Waterloo, both inclusive. In one of these battles Lee killed and wounded more men, by 9,000, than the French army lost, including prisoners, in the whole campaign of Waterloo, and the pursuit to the gates of Paris. In the same battle he killed and wounded more men than Wellington, Blucher and Napoleon, all three together, lost in killed and wounded in the battle of Waterloo, by 5,000 men. In the second of these battles he killed and wounded the same number that both the opposing armies lost in the battle of Waterloo; and in the third he killed and wounded more by 7 000 than the French alone lost in the battle of Waterloo. In the three battles together, Lee killed and wounded more men, by at least 30,000, than the allies and French lost in the whole campaign, including prisoners. The force with which Lee operated never amounted, at one time, to 50,000 men; the force with which Wellington and Blucher acted was, even according to English estimates, 190,000 strong. The force to which Lee was opposed was, from first to last, 240,000; the force to which Wellington and Blucher were opposed was but 122,-000 strong. When Massena invaded Portugal, in 1810, Wellington had 30,000 British troops, and 25,000 Portuguese regulars, who, in the battle of Busaco, according to Wellington's own account, "proved themselves worthy to fight side by side with the British veterans," besides 40,000 admirable Portuguese militia. He had Lisbon for his base, with a British war fleet riding at anchor, and innumerable vessels of other descriptions plying between the port and England, and bringing the most abundant supplies of arms, provisions and munitions of war. He had surrounded the port with the most tremendous system of fortifications known in modern times, and his task was to defend the strongest country in Europe. In Lee's case, his enemy had possession of the sea, and could and did land a powerful army to attack the very basis of his operations.

Historical Secret.—Another terrible state secret has been unearthed from the dust of three centuries. Juana, the mother of the Emperor Charles V, was the legitimate Queen of Spain. The historians say that she went mad in consequence of the sudden death of her husband, Philip; but, in reality, she was not mad at all, but was kept cruelly imprisoned, first, by her father, Ferdinand, and then by her son, the German Emperor Charles V, for fifty long years. The persecutions of which she was made a victim were commenced by her mother, Isabella, because Juana uttered heretical views about the persecution of heretics (burning at the stake, etc.) After Isabella's death, her father, Ferdinand, continued to maltreat the poor woman, in order to reign in her place. Finally her own son, Charles V, confined her in a dungeon, and permitted himself to abuse and torture her when she refused to take part in the divine service held in the prison. These facts have been brought to light by a German historian, M. Bergenroth, who derived them from the autograph letters of Charles V, hitherto kept secret in the archives of Simancas, and published them.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

We have received the printed minutes of the Montgomery, the Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences We shall be obliged to some one for a copy of those of the Mobile Conference. We know of no publication which presents so much "food for reflection" in so small a space. The digest which a correspondent gives of two districts of the Mississippi Conference furnishes an excellent hint for the thorough analysis of all stations and circuits. It is important to know who are doing work, who are supporting their ministers, and who are starving them; to know what amount is going forward for the conversion of the heathen, and who sends it; what sums are raised for the establishment or enlargement of our Sabbath schools, etc. The Mississippi minutes are defective in not giving the membership of 1867; nor do we find any of the "totals" for that year. Whether the Conference is advancing or going back cannot be estimated without a copy of the last year's minutes of the Mississippi Conference. This we never have had. If they were not published we hope the secretary of that Conference will forward us the statistical totals of membership for 1867.

THE MINUTES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE have been forwarded to all the subscribers—about double the number promised them. The entire matter was published without abridgement, at the suggestion of Brother Montgomery. We have provided sufficient to supply others who may want them, at twenty cents each, prepaid by mail.

NOTICE.—THE FAMOUS CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.—By notice elsewhere in our columns Mr. G. W. W. Goodwyn advertises that he will henceforth keep the Charter Oak in stock, and his endorsement of this justly celebrated stove places it at once above all others. Mr. Goodwyn is a practical man, and no one is better competent to judge of the merits of a cooking stove. He is one of the oldest and most reliable stove dealers in the South, and keeps a full line of every description of stoves, manufactures tin and Japan ware, and our readers may place full confidence in every word that he says. Send your orders to G. W. W. Goodwyn.

A NEW department for Indian affairs has been agreed upon in committee.

EVIL COMMUNICATIONS.

In the connection in which the Apostle Paul introduces the well known maxim, that "evil communications corrupt good manners," the reference is chiefly to corruption of doctrine. Eminently true in its application to the outward behavior, the style of language and the moral life, it is not less true of the religious faith. The ordinary association with unbelievers in the social and business relations of life imperceptibly affects the religious convictions; and the moral sensibilities become blunted by the habitual exhibition of Sabbath breaking, profanity and other vices. While there is no actual indulgence in these sins, the moral feeling becomes impaired. The vices are by degrees less and less offensive, and those who commit them cease to excite either our compassion or repugnance.

The same process takes place in relation to denominational convictions and preferences. In a certain direction this result may be good as leading to a wider charity, and to diminished bigotry. Beyond this it sometimes leads to the loss of all strong and wholesome attachments, and finally to the loss of all faith. Indifference upon this subject, though it may look like enlightened liberality, is really but a step from infidelity, and the denial of Christianity altogether. The powerful influences of the various forms of indifference and of "liberal Christianity," and of infidelity in general, exerted especially upon the young and the more ignorant, is incalculably great. Contact with these elements of unbelief and error in the affairs and pursuits of life, and their fruits, as exhibited in vicious amusements, are surely working corruption. The very fountains of society are being poisoned by these evil communications. There is a subtle influence at work among us, the aim of which is to destroy all religion and to unsettle all faith.

But from the uprooting of all belief let us pass to the perversion of sound religious doctrine. How many forms and aspects there are of serious error and heresy we know not. They are, however, many, and these corrupting effects may be seen by the careful observer. We are kept in continual and unavoidable contact with Romanism. The usages and worship of this church, and many of their doctrines, are thrust upon the attention. The feasts and fasts are trumpeted through the calendars, and the secular papers, and the whole community, to some extent, feel the influence. Doctrinal errors sometimes obtain a stealthy lodgment through these outward demonstrations. Protestants sometimes are brought under the perverting power of the most extravagant errors. In many instances they have imbibed these false doctrines because they have not been thoroughly instructed in the Scriptures. We have found instances of praying for the dead, and other errors equally gross, in persons connected with Protestant churches. The same influence of doctrinal corruption is going on from other sources. The practical denial of future retribution, the spiritualistic refinements of the followers of Swedenborg, involving the denial of the resurrection and the atonement, are no doubt slowly operating to destroy the foundations of the truth.

A vast deal of this corrupting influence is owing to social contact with those who have imbibed error and are ever seeking to spread it. So strong and pernicious is this influence that the ignorant and unstable are often seduced from the faith and practice of the Gospel by persuasion of personal friendship and the ties of society. Where it does not lead souls away from their connection with our churches, false views of the ordinances and doctrines of religion are implanted, and the depth of piety is injuriously affected. One obvious application of this train of thought is to put the pastor upon his guard against the doctrinal corruptions which threaten his flock, and which may be already among his people.—There is need of instruction, doctrinal instruction, by the circulation of our books, by thorough catechetical examination in the Sunday schools, and by the careful exposition of sound doctrine in the pulpit.

"REVELINGS AND SUCH LIKE."

Mardi Gras, Tuesday last, was celebrated with more than usual splendor. During the day masqueraders appeared in large numbers on the principal streets, on foot, in carriages and on horseback, and many of them were quaintly attired. The peculiar costumes of the different nations, savage and civilized, were displayed, and the spirit of the day seemed to penetrate the remotest place, and to pervade all classes. The procession of the "Mystic Krewe of Comus," at night, was a most brilliant and gorgeous representation of the five senses. The whole city seemed moved and drawn out to see the novel exhibition, and the night wound up or passed into the morning with ball and masquerade.—Thus ended the carnival—a scene of revelry, with all the usual concomitants of extravagance, intemperance and licentiousness.

And now is the lenten fast. There are to be forty days of moderate penance, church-going and confession. The dissipation of past months is to be atoned for by much church-going and much denial of meat; and, that when the forty days are ended, "the same excess of riot" may be again indulged. A religion of carnivals and lents is necessarily most unspiritual and worldly. It is a system of compensations to the flesh and of accommodation to the carnal appetites. The temporary restraint imposed is relaxed at length into unbridled license, and sin is winked at, if not openly commended and allowed. Of course such a faith as this raises no barrier against worldly dissipation, but rather tends to encourage and foster it.

We may hope that our churches are measurably free from this cursed and pernicious, but fashionable and fascinating vice of reveling. The set of the current in this city, and in all large cities, is powerfully in this direction; and is, we believe, strengthened by these days, given up religiously to sinful and pleasurable excess. This phase of worldliness, indeed, has reached the maddening strength and blinding whirl of the maelstrom, and is drawing many of our people into its destructive vortex. Lent may cause a slight lull in the rounds of pleasure with some who are connected with the Anglican and papal communions, but the sanctioned excesses which precede and follow more than balance the temporary moderation. The difference is scarcely perceptible. The theaters are always full, and fashionable and promiscuous dances and hops are not allowed to languish.

Some of the weak and worldly-inclined members of our churches are drawn into these whirlpools of dissipation, under social influences and their love of pleasure. The young of our churches and Sunday schools are often led away by these seductive influences. Often these breaches of Christian duty may arise from want of due consideration as to the vicious tendency of the theater and the dance; sometimes, also, from ignorance of their character and history. But more generally it is doubtless owing to the want of a converted and spiritual mind. Where there is not satisfaction and joy in religion the soul will be apt to seek it in frivolous and sinful amusements.

This is the time and place for true believers, friends of Jesus and Protestants, to bear faithful testimony for truth and purity. Here the world, the flesh and the devil are in alliance with religious formality and superstition, in such a manner as almost to deceive "the very elect." Self-denial and separation from the world are specially demanded, if we would not have all spirituality swept away by this flood of ungodliness. Touch not this unclean thing, however commended by the elegance, fashion and worldliness of society, and be not "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." We would caution professors of religion, visiting the city, from being led away by the wiles of the tempter. Bring your religion with you, and "whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." *

SOUTHERN VITALITY.

The present cotton crop and the general return of our agricultural prosperity must go hard with the intense haters of the South, who have been so long "making out" to legislate for its welfare, but have in reality done all that could be done to check and repress every symptom of its recovery from ruin. But nature is more generous and forgiving than man. Despite the breaking of levees, all kinds of interference with labor, and the wholesale corruption of conventions and assemblies, put and kept in place by military force, the rich soil of our valleys and the monopoly of our agricultural products have steadily lifted us into a prosperity great and solid enough to make the Sumners and Butlers hang themselves. What will they do next? Hoist the tariff another altitude? Well, let them do it. The higher and the heavier this protection the sooner will the West come to its reason. We can stand a tariff as well as any other non-manufacturing part of the Union. It will possibly grind some economical and political wisdom into us—that is, induce us, in self-defense, to begin to open the iron and coal deposits in our territory, and to attempt the cultivation of those industrial arts which distinguish the nineteenth century from the thirteenth. We suppose that the civilized world cannot show anywhere else so wealthy and intelligent a population with so little mechanical and nautical enterprise.—We have, so to speak, no foundries, no machine shops, no factories of woolen or cotton goods. With immense fields of coal, iron and copper, with endless forests of live oak and pine, we have no vessels. Nor have we any skilled workmen in these departments of human progress. The Japanese, who have but lately been introduced to the locomotive and the sea steamer, will have soon outstripped us in this race for independent life. For as certainly as liberty depends upon the power to maintain it, so certainly does the possession of life and property depend upon skilled labor. Money cannot command skill—no, not at the very time we most need it. That lesson the wayfaring man, though a fool, has learned.

The brain cannot supply the place of the hand. Our sons may be well trained mentally, but mental power alone cannot express itself in these days of iron, lightning and steam. The genius which discovers the electric signal would be futile without the skill to make wire, and the greater skill to construct some Great Eastern to lay it. Colleges alone will not save us. We need workshops and technical schools, where our youth can at once learn the theory as well as the practical art of manufacturing. And without this knowledge and skill the more money we have the worse it will be for us. We shall be the prey of the all-devouring hordes—that "have not, but desire to have"—that press us on several sides.

There is nothing peculiar in this. This has been the fate of all nations who have become wealthy and have not been as strongly fortified in iron, and all the machinery of force, as their neighbors. This fate we need not complain of; it is one of the evils which a good Providence does not protect us from, that we may derive from it all the manhood and growth developed and implied in self-defense. No amount of hardihood and bravery can supply the place of iron, copper, live oak and aqua fortis. Indeed we found that flouring mills, tanneries and spinning jennies had as much to do with defense as saltpetre and sulphur. We know that our fellow-citizens of other latitudes feel grieved that any one should still suspect them of barbaric proclivities, or think it worth while to seriously guard against their love for constitutional law, and their enlarged spirit of humanity—of universal brotherhood; but they must excuse us if we see something more than that in the torch, and blood and fury with which they preach their Gospel.

Our people are of the right temper, but they need some new molds. Invest your money so as to educate your children up to the practical life and intellect of the nineteenth century, or else expect them to suffer the fate of the millions of India, who, for want of the educated muscle and the practical science of this present age, now lie at the feet of England, a misery and a prey.

THE NEGRO MANIA.

Is there to be no end to the philanthropy of New England? Is the world to be forever tortured with its hideous dreams of a uniform humanity? One would suppose that the fearful cost of realizing these theories would arrest any further conception. The death and financial ruin which were the price of its boasted achievement, the liberation of the slave, should give some pause to the wildest enthusiasm. But we find men who are exponents of the mind and opinion of that region still glowing in the intensity of their admiration for the black race. The editor of the Zion's Herald is determined to be the advanced leader of the whole Northern Methodist Church in this crusade against those natural instincts and affinities which distinguish and preserve races. We are certainly at a great distance from him, and regard his advocacy for amalgamating whites and blacks with no other feeling than that of intense horror and disgust. That an enlightened man should so far forget his call to a holier and higher nature as to consent to entail the abasement of countenance and form upon his own offspring are evidences of gross vice or positive mania. A few sentences from Dr. Haven's repulsive and monstrous sermon, as it appeared in the New York Independent, of the 14th January, will suffice our readers. It will be seen that he has worked himself up into the highest pitch of admiration for negro blood and muscle.—"We shall see Helen's beauty in the brow of Egypt." This is a very concrete view of the doctrine of abolition; but Egypt is as far from negro-land as Greece is from Egypt. We suppose that the doctor is making some compensation for refusing to sleep with a colored brother at Conference.—Now he would put Europe to bed with Africa. We think that this "contract" is a shade too strong to "whet the appetite" of even the lecherous Yankee.

"But equality at the polls is not the only work laid upon the coming government. There must be such a disposition of its patronage, such a steadfast expression of its conviction, such an employment of its influence, as will tend to the abolition of the whole mass of prejudice that still defiles the national heart. I am aware that this evil cannot be utterly abolished by any enactments. The leprosy lies deep within. It dwells in our churches, in our souls, in our education, in society. It still makes us look at a face with repulsion which is of the very complexion of the mother of our Lord—nay, of the Lord himself. It still leads us to erect barriers between us and our kindred, and to make us and them talk of "our race" as if they and we had a different parentage, Saviour and eternity. It must come to an end. It is coming to an end. This election is a great advance toward that end. If the administration as faithfully adhere to its ruling idea, and put men into office everywhere without regard to color and with regard only to capacity, it will greatly prosper this reform. Let him make Frederic Douglass a member of his cabinet, and the nation will commend and imitate his courage.

"We shall be attracted to this hue because it is one of God's creatures, and a beautiful one too; because it is the favorite hue of the human race; because, chiefly, we have most wickedly loathed and scorned it. He will have his revenge, and will yet compel us to discern the loveliness of this most abhorred virtue, and to become enamored of it. The Song of Songs may have a more literal fulfillment than it has ever confessedly had in America; and the illegal but divinely implanted admiration of Southern Solomons for black but comely maidens be the proudly acknowledged and honorably gratified life of Northern and Southern gentlemen.

"But this law rests on no mere quip of the fancy, nor is it a rebound of a vehement passion, as wrongfully right as it had been wrongfully wrong. It is the grand undertone of all marriage. It is the Creator's mode of compelling the race to overleap the narrow boundaries of families and tribes, into which blood, so-called, invariably degenerates.

"Amalgamation is God's word declaring the oneness of man, and ordaining its universal recognition. Who art thou that fightest against God?"

GENERAL BUTLER ON CHARITY.

The speech of this notable philanthropist upon the almshouse reports of Massachusetts presents a striking view of the morals of that State. If the war will only prevent us for a century from becoming like that people we shall have gained something. They have a satanic dislike to children. They kill them in the womb, or strangle them at the birth, or thin them out in childhood by starvation.

According to the statistics furnished by the present Legislature, as a report of their committee, it is more dangerous to spend a year in a Massachusetts almshouse than it would have been to have led the charge of the Zouaves at Magenta. I see that this statement strikes some of you almost with dread.—Let me repeat. There was a larger proportion of the regiment which led the attack of the battle of Solferino came out from the battle than there were of the paupers of 1858 who came out alive from the State almshouses of Massachusetts. (Sensation.)

Allow me to give you the figures. How many was the average number of paupers in the State almshouses during the year 1858? Twenty-seven hundred and some odd. How many died in the year ending October, 1858? Six hundred and sixty-six—one in every four. Every fourth man, woman and child that went into the State almshouses of Massachusetts died and was buried in the potter's field of the paupers' burying ground. Three hundred and forty-one children, under the age of five years, died in those charnal houses, and the physician of one of these houses says he does not expect to rear but three per cent. of the children brought there under one year old! Three out of a hundred—all the other ninety-seven go to a nameless grave.

Why, this whole commonwealth felt outraged because there came a report from Kansas that six or eight men had been killed, and yet our mothers and wives and daughters scoured the country for old clothes and other comforts to send to the people of that territory. (Laughter.) In the same year three hundred and odd children of Massachusetts soil died like dogs in a kennel in our own almshouses, while we were weeping over the imaginary wrongs of Kansas. (Cheers.) Again I ask, my friends, is it not time that we look at home? Where is Mrs. Stowe? Where is Greeley in the Tribune? Where is the extra philanthropy of the humanitarians? Where is that denouncer of great and good men, Wendell Phillips? Where are all those men who regulate the affairs of the people afar off? Is there not ample room for their charities here at home? One hundred and sixty-five children died at Bridgewater, one hundred and fifteen at Tewksbury, and one hundred and one at Munson! Forty infants dead in two months! Oh! but they were white children. [Laughter.] Why look after them! I do not wish to harrow your feelings further by going into statistics. I only ask you if it is not time we ceased to look after the wrongs of the negroes of the South, and look a little after the people at home? But if any Know Nothing friend of mine will say that is of no consequence, that these people, or the largest portion of them, were mere Irish paupers, to him I answer, that the great majority of them were native-born citizens of Massachusetts, entitled to every protection that Massachusetts gives to any of her citizens, [applause,] and the very largest proportion of them born on this continent. If I am told that "oh, these were the old, the infirm and the sick," I have to say of these 662,341—more than half—were under five years of age; immortal souls brought into this world and placed in the care of Massachusetts charity and Massachusetts philanthropy; and they have gone to God who gave them, and it is for us to render an account for them.

DR. PIERCE.

BY REV. DR. HAMILTON.

The churches in this city have recently been favored with a visit, of some two weeks, from the venerable Dr. L. Pierce, who preached some seven or eight sermons during his stay, greatly to the delight, and, I trust, to the profit of the church and community. I do not like fulsome eulogy anywhere, but Dr. P. is truly a wonderful man; and it is right, if not a duty, to "glorify God in him." He is now about eighty-four years of age, and, for aught I can see, he preaches with as much clearness and vigor as he did thirty years ago. I think he has more system than formerly, and no less strength. One of his discourses while here, on the design and purposes of God in the creation of the world and the redemption of man, gave very great satisfaction to those who heard it. He so put the case that the common mind took in its leading features, and many had difficulties removed.

When we were colaborers in this city, in 1843, I heard the Dr. preach very often; and I was frequently at a loss to decide whether he had the plan of his sermon in his mind when he went into the pulpit, or whether it was, as a sermon, impromptu. I can now see very clearly that he has a plan each time.

The thought that came into my mind at once, on seeing the sainted Fisk in the pulpit for the first time, was, "God made that man for a minister." This is the thought that comes to my mind whenever I hear Dr. Pierce preach; and he has answered the end of his creation; preaching is emphatically his work and forte. You may try sounding him on any text or subject, and though there appears no indisposition to communicate his ideas, you never see the man fully until he announces his text, and gives you the points he intends to make.—Then you see what the text has in it, and what the subject embraces. I have never heard a man who could put as much into a proposition as Dr. Pierce can, except it was Dr. Olin; and that prince of preachers could not surpass him. It is in this, especially, that great thinking appears, and great preaching largely consists. The Dr.'s case illustrates strikingly to my mind two things: that the power to "preach," in the proper sense, is a special gift of God; and also what can be achieved, under many disadvantages, by a life devoted to one work. Dr. P. commenced his ministerial career under as many difficulties and discouragements as are often met with; but he felt from the beginning that it was a work worthy of all his powers, and that he was the honored party in being put "into the ministry." With a proper sense of responsibility to God, added to the convictions, a man must make a preacher. How those little twenty minute effusions—mild preparations of rhetoric and morals—that so readily satisfy the demands of many congregations, sound, compared with one of the Dr.'s sermons! Such people never know what they lose in not hearing preaching.

The Dr.'s voice and lungs promise to be available for six years to come. May he be spared to stand in the pulpit and do his favorite work on his ninetieth birthday, and I be there to hear.

OBITUARIES.

MEMORIAL OF DR. NEELY.

Nearly two months have elapsed since the writer was requested by some of the most intimate friends of the late Dr. NEELY to prepare an obituary of that gifted and beloved minister of the Gospel; but such have been his engagements that he could not devote proper attention to the subject. Besides, the want of sufficient data has been an insuperable difficulty, which is even now only partially remedied. Yet he feels it almost a sacred duty to comply with the request, and thus to contribute to the perpetuation of the memory of one whom he has long known and loved.

Philip Phillips Neely was the fifth son of Major James and Eleanor Neely, born in Rutherford county, Tennessee, six miles from Murfreesboro, in 1818, and died at the residence of his old and most devoted friend, Major A. H. Ryland, near Mobile, Alabama, November 9, 1868. His father was a highly respected planter, and was a tried and trusted officer of General Jackson during his campaigns. His maternal grandfather was Philip Philips, Esq.—hence his baptismal name. While yet in his boyhood such were the indications of the unusual sprightliness of his mind that his elder brother, Rev. Thomas J. Neely, urged their father to give him a liberal education; and when the claims of a large family and the expense of a collegiate course were pleaded as an excuse for not doing so, his brother asked permission to assist him. Consent having been given, he took him to his house and entered him as a student in Lafayette Academy. Here the hopes of his family were fully realized. His thirst for knowledge and his aptitude to learn soon placed him at the head of a large class in Latin. He seemed to learn, as if by intuition, and presently became the pride of his teachers and fellow-students. Here also he developed, in the academic debating hall, a remarkable talent for elocution. We can readily conceive the pleasure and the profit which such a mind as his would derive in imbibing knowledge at the venerable and classic fountain of Roman and Grecian literature. Doubtless his facility of expression, his fine taste and exuberant imagery, as well as his self command and graceful manner, evinced in all his addresses, were greatly due to his early training in this humble academy.

In 1837 he became awakened to a sense of his sinfulness, and presently professed conversion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. In the fall of that year he was admitted on trial in the Tennessee Conference, and was appointed junior preacher on Jackson circuit, Arthur Davis being in charge. The result of their joint labors that year was the conversion of eight hundred souls. Thus began a career of usefulness and labor unvaryingly pursued, and closed only by death. Trenton and Mill Creek circuits, and Franklin, Huntsville and Columbia stations were afterward the fields of his labors in the Tennessee Conference. In the latter he founded and presided, for two years, over the "Conference Female College."

In 1847, at the solicitation of Dr. Bascom, he accepted an appointment from the bishop as agent for Transylvania University, which position he held for a year or two. In the following year he was transferred to the Alabama Conference, and was the presiding elder of Tuscaloosa district. Subsequently he repeatedly filled the stations of Columbus, Marion and Mobile, and during his seventh year's pastorate in the latter city he "ceased at once to work and live," amidst the respect and regrets of the whole community.

Dr. Neely was twice married. In 1841 he married Miss Henrietta Parks, in Franklin, Tennessee. Two children were the fruit of this marriage, one of whom survives. His second was Miss J. Alice Towler, of Columbia, Tennessee, who, with their daughter, live to lament their bereavement.

As a preacher Dr. Neely had few equals. He was keenly alive to the beautiful and the sublime, and his rare powers of description enabled him to portray his vivid conceptions with thrilling effect. He was always attractive and instructive, and sometimes was almost overwhelming. His pleasing and impressive person, his tall and erect form, his easy and graceful manners, and his clear and musical voice, like a fine-toned instrument in the hands of a skillful musician, gave him great advantages. He had read and studied much, and his mind was stored with various knowledge.

He was a persuasive preacher. The wisdom, power and goodness of God, as seen in creation, providence and grace, his infinite love, as displayed in redemption, the holy consolations of true experimental piety, and the bliss and raptures of heaven were his favorite themes. He rarely dwelt upon the terrors of the law, but when he did the enormity of sin and the terribleness of hell were fearfully depicted.

He was a useful preacher. His labors were often crowned with revivals, and wherever he labored long many were added to the church, and his return was always desired.

Owing to an affection of his throat, and at the suggestion of his physician, he was in the habit, especially in the latter part of his ministry, of reading his sermons; but such was his facility of reading them, and so thoroughly did he prepare himself, that they were delivered in so natural a manner that most of his hearers were not aware of the fact that they were written. Doubtless it detracted from the efficiency of his discourses, and can only be excused, as an invariable practice, upon the score of the necessity which required it.

Dr. Neely's piety, simplicity and zeal increased with his years. The writer's acquaintance with him began in his youth. He is familiar with all the important incidents of his life, and early predicted for him a high position as an orator and a useful minister; and while he does not claim for him an exemption from imperfection, he firmly believes that his motives and character have been untainted throughout his ministerial life—a life unvaryingly and zealously devoted to the highest and noblest ends. He was ever true to his church, liberal toward all Christians, and no one was ever more loved as a friend and pastor. In his private life and social intercourse he was warm-hearted, amiable and confiding. His dying words, expressing "unwavering trust in his Saviour," were a fit finale to such a life.

Dr. Neely, at the urgent solicitation of many of his friends, has published a "First Series of Discourses." They are worthy of him, and inferior to none published in our country. May we not hope for another "series." Surely Winans's, Bascom's and Neely's discourses deserve the first place among works of their kind in the libraries of our people. They are the memorials of great and good men.

HUMAN BLOOD!

ITS MYSTERIES.

It must be admitted by every rational mind that the man who contributes the most toward promoting the happiness and welfare of the human race must of necessity be the most highly esteemed by his fellow-men; and acting upon this principle it appears that Professor R. L. Hamilton, of New York, has, by patient investigation and vast experience, solved the uncertain question in relation to the vexed and important subject of Liver complaint and other chronic diseases.

It will be remembered by the readers of this paper that, a few days ago, Dr. Hamilton's Theory of Liver, Lung, and other diseases, was published in connection with many other vital facts, in which all diseased persons are interested; many wonderful cures were published from all parts of the country. Others of a startling and interesting character are given below, which seem to us are evidences that cannot be questioned for a moment, and we advise those who are suffering from the diseases he makes a specialty of to write their full symptoms and get Professor Hamilton's opinion and advice at once.

STRONGLY CORROBORATED!

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 20, 1869.

TO THE AFFLICTED EVERYWHERE.

During my labors in publishing and editing a newspaper for many years in this city, and also in the performance of my duties as a clergyman in this and other cities, I have become thoroughly and intimately acquainted with R. Leonidas Hamilton, M. D., the justly celebrated Liver, Lung and Blood Physician of this city, who is located at No. 546 Broadway. The doctor was for many years a regular practicing physician, and also for some years a professor in one of our best medical schools, and during such extensive experience he fully realized the inadequacy of the ordinary treatment made use of in all chronic diseases, more especially that class of troubles arising from deranged functions of the Liver and digestive organs. He at once set himself about the study of this class of diseases, determined to make them a specialty. Laying the vegetable world under tribute, he has made discoveries and compounded specifics on sound philosophical principles, which have made the most wonderful cures in the annals of medicine. Liver, Blood, Lung and Nervous diseases are now virtually under his full control, and yield to the magic subtle power of his remedies. I have myself seen numbers of those who have been saved from the hand of death by his power, when the unfortunate sufferers seemed doomed to an early grave, and all other treatment was of no avail. In addition to what I can vouch for personally, I have ample evidence from other clergymen, physicians and eminent men of the highest character, who have also been saved by this wonderful treatment, and who speak in the highest praise and gratitude of Dr. Hamilton as a physician and a gentleman of honor and integrity. It is but simply stating the positive truth when I say that if is well known throughout this country that where his works are known and the fruits of his skill have been witnessed, he is highly esteemed by the people as the most eminent and remarkable physician in the treatment of chronic diseases, of the age. As the result of a long personal and familiar acquaintance with Professor Hamilton and his unparalleled success as a professional man of the highest order, I frankly express the hope that diseased humanity in every part of our land may avail themselves of his most remarkable skill, and thus share the noble blessings so kindly and freely bestowed upon all. Most respectfully,

REV. W. B. JACOBS,
No. 41 Park Row, Room No. 4.

THE WORK GOES BRAVELY ON!

ANOTHER CLERGYMAN CURED.

The eminent divine, Rev. J. W. Hinkley, of Athens, Maine, writes:

My health has so far improved from the effects of your treatment that I am able to resume my pastorship. Had it not been for your medicine I should not have been living now. To you, with God's blessing, do I owe my worldly existence. I am a living exponent of the worth of your matchless remedies, and I shall hereafter deem it a part of my religious duty to recommend all suffering with diseases of the Liver or Lungs to speedily apply to you. May God's blessing attend your worthy efforts for the relief of diseased and suffering humanity.

CONCLUSION.

It would seem to us that, after carefully looking over the evidence given above, all reasonable persons must be led to the conclusion that there can be no good reason for doubting the fact that Dr. Hamilton is just what he is represented to be—a very successful physician in the treatment of Chronic Diseases. It is useless to cry "humbug," for the above parties have volunteered to give their evidence for the benefit of the suffering, and for no other purpose. All of these testimonials are genuine—are guaranteed to be so, in fact—and it is easy to write to them, and get from their own pens the facts. Any of them will answer all inquiries of this character, either in person or by letter.

NOTICE.

Prof. Hamilton has now in press and nearly ready a pamphlet containing a biographical sketch of his remarkable life, with a fine lithograph picture of himself. This book also contains a complete history of Prof. H.'s wonderful cures—his theory of diseases, and the only natural, safe and positive treatment for all chronic diseases—a valuable work for everybody. WHAT ADVERTISERS SAY.

The firm, whose letter we print below, gave us in 1867 what was then the largest contract we had ever received for our "Lists of One Hundred Local Newspapers." The fact that they this year renew the order and increase the amount is the best argument we can give that these "Lists" are good advertising mediums.

LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL,

MANUFACTURERS OF

AXES, SHOVELS, SAWS, ETC.,

No. 118 WATER STREET,

PITTSBURG, PA., Dec. 7, 1868.

MESSRS. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.—Gentlemen: One year ago with much hesitation we gave you an advertisement for one of your Lists of One Hundred local papers; a very short time thereafter we unhesitatingly added two more Lists of One Hundred papers.

But a short time elapsed before we were inquired of on every side for "Colburn's Patent Red Jacket Ax," proving to us that your plan of Lists had reached the very parties to whom we wanted to introduce the new patent Ax.

The year having now nearly gone by, we cannot but believe your system of advertising by "Lists of Local Papers" is just the kind of advertising we want, and we to day forward you an order still adding one more List of One Hundred papers, making the number now altogether four (4) Lists of One Hundred (100) local papers.

The more we talk with newspaper agents and editors' agents the more satisfied we are that the arrangement we have made with you is preferable to any we have ever heard of. The merit of the Ax itself has, of course, something to do with the great demand for it, but we are satisfied that by your system of advertising by "Lists" we have accomplished in one year what would have ordinarily taken us five years to accomplish. Respectfully,

LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL.

The National Publishing Company of Philadelphia have been among the largest advertisers in our "Lists of Local Country Newspapers." Their bills for these alone amount to not less than $20,000. The testimony of their letter may be taken as an answer to those who inquire if these "Lists" can really be good advertising mediums.

MESSRS. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., 40 PARK ROW, N. We have tried every possible mode of advertising, having dealt with the press direct, and through nearly every advertising agency in the country, and have no hesitation in saying that your Lists have paid us fifty per cent. better than any other way. Respectfully,

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

JACOB'S LADDER.

The following stanzas are from a recent prize poem, delivered at the University of Oxford, England, by the Rev. William Alexander:

Ah! many a time we look, on starlit nights,
Up to the sky as Jacob did of old,
Long looking up to the eternal lights,
To spell their lines in gold.

But nevermore, as to the Hebrew boy,
Each on his way the angels walk abroad,
And nevermore we hear, with awful joy,
The audible voice of God.

Yet to pure eyes the ladder still is set,
And angel visitants still come and go;
Many bright messengers are moving yet
From the dark world below.

Thoughts that are red crossed Faith's outspreading wings,
Prayers of the church are keeping time and tryst—
Heart-wishes, making bee-like murmurings,
Their flowers, the Encharist—

Spirits elect, through suffering rendered meet
For those high mansions—from the nursery door—
Bright babes that climb up with their clay cold feet
Unto the golden floor:

These are the messengers, forever wending
From earth to heaven, that faith alone may scan;
These are the angels of our God, ascending
Upon the Son of Man!

THE GOURD PIANO.

BY REV. J. D. STRONG.

I sometimes think that music is the strangest thing in the world, and wonder how men discovered the art of making it. I never hear a sweet song or a grand march without feeling like bowing down in reverence before all the musicians that ever lived, since Jubal invented the harp and the organ; and I never see a boy or a girl with more than ordinary talent for it without saying to myself, God has given you a rare and beautiful gift, that is a richer mine of wealth than the Ophir or the Almaden.

I once saw such a boy at Virgin Bay. Do you know where that is? Get your map, and I will show you. First find San Juan, sometimes called Graytown, at the mouth of the San Juan river, on the Mosquito coast, in Nicaragua. Then sail up that river on the miserable and badly-managed raft which they dignify there with the name of "steamer." You pass through one of the strangest looking yet pleasantest countries you ever saw. Vines of all kinds and sizes, from those no larger than a pipe stem to those as thick as a man's arm, trail over the bushes and hang from the trees in gay festoons; gigantic plants with leaves twenty or thirty feet in length shoot up as thick as grass in a meadow; an almost endless variety of trees, plants, bushes and shrubs are so packed and jammed together everywhere, in one great tangled mass of foliage, that you would think even a Central American gray and white squirrel could not crawl through it; and from the water's edge, all along on each side of the river, these two splendid walls of perpetual green rise up like grand ramparts of beauty, as if to guard an enchanted region; here and there, too, in little cleared spots, like islands in this vast sea of leaves, banana and orange groves smile upon you with their golden treasures; and monkeys of all sizes, with tails and without tails, swing and chatter in the trees and grin at you as you pass; parrots and paroquets, little and great, and in all sorts of gay plumage, sit as wise as owls and stare at you from the branches; and huge alligators are sleeping lazily on every old log and mud bank, while the sun pours down such brilliant floods of radiance as make these strange and novel scenes seem more like a fairy vision or a dream than reality.

Before you know it, you have sailed a hundred and fifty miles amid this grand and beautiful scenery, and have reached Lake Nicaragua. Seventy miles more, and you are half way up the lake, in a charming little bay on its western shore, behind a large, round island, that rises up out of the water like a great dome shaped mountain. This is Virgin Bay, and the fifty droll-looking houses on the shore make the famous town of the same name.

While walking through the principal street one evening I heard with astonishment what seemed to be the sound of a third-rate piano. On looking in through the open door I saw the drollest-looking machine that ever made music. It was a rude frame, like that which holds a grindstone, about six feet long and a foot wide, and stood on four rough legs, like those of the slab benches so common in country school houses when our fathers and mothers were young; and in the frame were fixed, mouth upward, in a row, long, slim gourds, which in Central America often grow three or four feet in length, without being thicker than a man's arm. The first was about three inches long, the next an inch longer, and so on, each increasing in length to the end of the series. Across the frame, over the mouths of these gourds, flat little sticks, like short but wide paper rulers, were placed and fastened loosely with strings; and when they were struck with a kind of rude drumstick the sounds echoed in the hollow gourds below, and seemed almost exactly like the notes of a cheap piano. The shortest gourds, of course, gave out the sharpest sounds, and the whole were so arranged as to give exactly all the notes in the octave.

Before this primitive piano, organ, banjo, or whatever you call it, sat a modern Orpheus, in the person of an Indian boy. He was tall, straight as an arrow, and bronzed just enough to give him a clear nut-brown complexion; he had black eyes and hair, thin lips, a long sharp nose, and white teeth. His face wore a kind and amiable expression, and his tone and manner showed that he had a refinement of feeling which one would not expect amid the rude scenes around him, nor from a boy wearing the scant dress of a shirt only.

The handsome little fellow sat and beat with the drum sticks as rapidly and skillfully as a lady at a piano uses her fingers, and out rolled the sweet sounds in such songs, marches and waltzes as might put to shame many a well-trained player. When he saw me, as a compliment, I suppose, he struck up "Yankee Doodle," "Hail Columbia" and "Old John Brown."—When the drumming ceased for a moment, I said to the young operator:

"Where you get him?"

"Me make him," was the reply.

"Is it possible!" I exclaimed; "where did you learn how!"

"Me feel him in here," he said, laying his hand on his breast; "so me make him."

That was the only explanation he could give of his remarkable achievement; but I understood it perfectly. The music was in his heart, and it would come out; and it had come out in this original and wonderful way.

To get the heart right, then, should be the first aim of every boy and girl; and how can you do it? One wiser than either you or I has said, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; and the knowledge of the holy is understanding." God is the author and the source of all that is wise and beautiful and true in the universe; and to think as he thinks, and feel as he feels, and have him in your heart, is to have your whole being full of the truest and noblest wisdom. A genius for good is the highest kind of genius. If your heart is on fire with that, it will show itself in a thousand heroic deeds, and make the very highest style of man or woman of you.—Sabbath at Home.

THE GREAT LESSONS.—The first great lesson a young man should learn is, that he knows nothing. The earlier and more thoroughly this lesson is learned the better. A home-bred youth, growing up in the light of parental admiration, with everything to foster his vanity and self-esteem, is surprised to find, and often unwilling to acknowledge, the superiority of other people. But he is compelled to learn his own insignificance; his airs are ridiculed, his blunders exposed, his wishes disregarded, and he is made to cut a sorry figure, until his self-conceit is abased, and he feels that he knows nothing.

When a young man has thoroughly comprehended the fact that he knows nothing, and that intrinsically he is but of little value, the next lesson is that the world cares nothing about him. He is the subject of no man's overwhelming admiration; neither petted by the one sex nor envied by the other. He has to take care of himself. He will not be noticed till he becomes noticeable; he will not become noticeable until he does something to prove that he is some use to society. No recommendations or introduction will give him this; he must do something to be recognized as somebody.

The next lesson is that of patience. A man must learn to wait, as well as to work, and to be content with those means of advancement in life which he may use with integrity and honor. Patience is one of the most difficult lessons to learn. It is natural for the mind to look for immediate results.

Let this, then, be understood at starting, that the patient conquest of difficulties which rise in the regular and legitimate channels of business and enterprise is not only essential in securing the success which a young man seeks in life, but essential also to that preparation of the mind requisite for the enjoyment of success, and for retaining it when gained. It is the general rule in all the world, and in all time, that unearned success is a curse.

THERE are eight daily and eight weekly journals printed in New Orleans. They are published in German, French, Spanish and English.

SCIENTIFIC:

IT IS calculated that Mount Vesuvius emitted during the recent eruption about twenty million cubic feet of lava.

THE deepest coal pit in England is at Wigan, and is one thousand eight hundred feet deep; and they are sinking it yet deeper, to reach another seam of coal, which is two thousand four hundred feet below the surface.

DURING a recent exploration of the Himmalayan mountains, the two brothers Von Schlagintweit spent two nights at an altitude of more than nineteen thousand feet, without experiencing any serious inconvenience. Mount Blanc is less than sixteen thousand feet high.

THE first bar of tin ever produced in the United States was gotten out of a quantity of ore taken from the Temescal Tin Mines, December 11, by Mr. Mosheimer, of San Francisco. It weighed eighty-five pounds. The tin of commerce nearly all comes from Cornwall, England, or from Malacca.

THE deepest artesian well in the world is that in St. Louis, which has reached a depth of three thousand two hundred and thirty-five feet. It is practically a failure, as the water does not rise to the top by one hundred and twenty-three feet. As the rocks below are parallel, there is no hope that a greater depth would bring water to the surface.

THE recently corrected error in the computed distance of the sun was caused by an error in its parallax of one-third of a second. That is, the error was about that which would be made by a rifleman who should attempt, at a distance of twenty miles, to shoot at the right edge of a copper cent, and should hit it by mischance on the left edge.

IT IS stated that the best substance for producing light with the oxyhydrogen blowpipe is a cylinder or plate of zirconia, the oxyd of zircon. It is the only infusible metallic oxyd yet discovered, and develops a more intense light than lime or any other substance. It has also the very valuable property of being easily molded, like plumbago, into sticks or cylinders.

THE longest artillery range on record—namely, ten thousand three hundred yards, over five and three-quarter miles—was lately attained at Shoeburyness, by Mr. Whitworth's nine-inch muzzle loader gun of fourteen tons, firing a shot of two hundred and fifty pounds with a charge of fifty pounds. This range is two hundred and twenty-five yards over that of the seven-inch Lynall Thomas gun, which in 1861 ranged ten thousand and seventy-five yards.

A BEAUTIFUL sirup of grape sugar is being hawked about the towns of Germany, under the name of Swiss land-honey. It does not contain a particle of honey, and is made of starch which is converted into grape sugar by the action of sulphuric acid. The sulphuric acid is afterward precipitated with marble or chalk. It can be detected by the fact that a little of the sulphate of lime remains in solution, though perfectly harmless.

THE new steamer just introduced into Edinburg for highway locomotion is a complete success. The most important improvement consists in having the tires of the wheels made of thick vulcanized India rubber. There is less loss of power than with rigid tires, and the wheel goes with no difficulty over plowed ground, and noise and jolts are avoided. It is found quite easy to guide it even on the crowded streets, and to draw a heavy load up a gradient of one in twelve.

WHEN near the horizon the more brilliant stars show the beautiful phenomenon of colored scintillation. The colors thus exhibited exceed in purity those of the solar spectrum; and the light which flashes from the emerald, sapphire or topaz seems dull in comparison. The most brilliant scintillator is Sirius, the famous dog star. These tints are due to the strata of air near the earth, unequally charged with moisture. In the tropics, where the moisture is more uniform, the scintillation is far less brilliant, and hardly observed at all except close to the horizon.

DR. TYNDALL has been investigating the effect of concentrated light on vapors. He finds that many vapors, as those of hydrochloric acid, nitrite of amyl, etc., are precipitated into minute globules, such as are familiar in the case of the precipitation of the transparent vapor of steam when issuing into cold air. These are often exceedingly brilliant, and form clouds of peculiar forms and gyrations. In the case of some substances, a period of nearly half an hour is required to develop the cloud in its full beauty. The method employed by Dr. Tyndall is to pass a beam of concentrated solar or electric light into a glass tube filled with the desired vapor. The room is darkened, so as not to obscure the result by extraneous light.

THE report of M. Janssen on the spectroscopic observations of the late solar eclipse shows that it is quite possible to observe the protuberances about the sun at any time. They are proved to be vast clouds of incandescent hydrogen gas, subject to the most violent movements, such as nothing terrestrial can compare with. One such cloud was observed forty-five thousand miles distant from the sun's disk, which was fifty five thousand miles long and half as wide, parallel to the sun's limb. An hour later it had risen rapidly and was circular; ten minutes later it was enormously elongated in a direction at right angles to its first position—so rapid were the changes in shape of a cloud many hundred times the size of the earth. Mr. Lockyer, of England, made the same discovery, independently and with the same results.

DR. DILKE believes that the banana plant is one of the great curses of tropical countries, because it will support life with no labor. It grows as a weed, and hangs down its bunches of ripe, tempting fruit into your lap as you lie in its cool shade. "It will make nothing; you can eat it raw or fried, and that is all; you can eat it every day of your life without becoming tired of its taste; without suffering in your health, you can live on it exclusively." "The terrible results of the plentiful possession of this tree are seen in Ceylon, at Panama, in the coast lands of Mexico, at Auckland, in New Zealand. At Pitcairn's Island the plantain grove has beaten the missionary from the field; there is much lip Christianity, but no practice, to be got from a people who possess the fatal plant. The much abused cocoanut cannot come near it as a devil's agent."

HYDROGEN gas, when heated so as to be luminous, emits about six thousand millions of millions of pulsations of light in each second. Those travel at the rate of about one hundred and eighty-five millions of miles a second. If this rate of travel be in the slightest degree varied, it perceptibly changes the position of the blue line which hydrogen exhibits on the spectrum. Mr. Huggins, of England, conceived the brilliant idea of examining to see whether the position of the hydrogen line as given by the star Sirius agreed with that of the same line as produced by hydrogen burning in a chemist's laboratory. To his surprise, he found an appreciable difference, showing that fewer pulsations reach us from Sirius than from his stationary hydrogen flame. This shows that, inasmuch as the velocity of the light is precisely the same in each case, Sirius must be receding from the earth at the rate of twenty-nine miles per second. An extension of the same method would bring to our knowledge the long concealed but suspected movements of the whole stellar universe, showing conclusively whether there is in it a grand system of revolution about some common center, analogous to the revolution of the planets about the sun.—Independent.

PROF. GRAHAM, one of the most celebrated chemists of England, announces the discovery of a new metal, called hydrogenium, being the metallic base of hydrogen. It is white, magnetic, with a specific gravity of 2. If this announcement is correct, it will be the most remarkable chemical discovery of late years, and do much to open to our view an understanding of the intimate nature of elements. Hydrogen has long been suspected to be metallic, but supposed to be a gaseous metal, just as mercury is a liquid metal. The specific gravity of hydrogenium, being twice that of hydrogen, would seem to imply that the metal was less simple in nature than the familiar gas. If we understand the imperfect notices of Prof. Graham's asserted discovery, he regards palladium and some other metallic forms as properly alloys of hydrogen. A year ago he showed that hydrogen is found to a large amount incorporated in meteoric irons, which have absorbed a large bulk of it, and platinum is known to possess the same power. Hydrogen might be expected in connection with the meteoric iron, as it is an element of many of the stars and forms the bulk of the protuberances about the sun.

RAISING CANE.—The Ouachita Telegraph of the 6th says: Several planters in Morehouse, during last year, raised cane and made it into molasses. Their profits will justify them in doing it again the present year. We saw a mill going up to Morehouse a few days ago. We are told that the sirup raised in Morehouse is equal to the very best golden sirup. Our people are learning to raise what they consume, and also a surplus sufficient to pay the expense. Our farmers will, after awhile, become independent if they will pay attention to this, and not stake everything on cotton.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE OF THE CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

EVERY CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 11th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA COLLEGE,

AUBURN, ALABAMA.

The Spring Session will begin on the 20th of January, and close on the 14th of July, 1869.

The educational facilities here furnished to students are equal to those of the best colleges in the country. Young men may take a regular or partial course, but will be required to have at least three studies.

Auburn is situated directly on the Montgomery and West Point Railroad. Its health and social advantages cannot be surpassed.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, Spring session,	$18 00
Tuition, Fall session,	32 00

Board in private families, from $15 to $20 per month.

Students in indigent circumstances, by applying as such, will be required to pay in advance only half the price of tuition, and by messing they may greatly reduce the expense of board.

THE THIRTY FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W C Hasl, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwariz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75; Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of instrument $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,
sep5 tf President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CENTENARY MALE INSTITUTE Summerfield, Alabama.

The twenty seventh annual session of this school will begin on the

FIRST DAY OF OCTORER, 1868,

and continue nine months, with no vacation, except one week at Christmas.

The expense for tuition, incidental fees, board, washing, fuel and lights, will be $230, one-half to be paid on entrance and one-half on the 15th of February, 1869.

Persons wishing to patronize this school may address JOHN MASSEY,

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN,

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as, by means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent, as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even Baking Stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, AT Greensboro, Alabama.

The next session of this Institution begins the first Wednesday in October, and is divided into two terms.

TUITION,

Academic Department, per term	$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term	30 00
Contingent fee, per term	2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Coleman and A. Benners.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

We have again to notice a fair degree of animation in the general market, but without any great activity. A moderate business has been done in most branches of the wholesale trade, principally in the execution of orders from the country. There are, however, a considerable number of country merchants in town replenishing their stocks, and city dealers are buying to a moderate extent. The receipts of sugar and molasses have been to a fair extent, and, with the exception of some interruption from the weather on Monday, have met a ready sale from the landing at steady prices. We have but little movement to notice in Western produce, excepting in corn, in which a moderate business has been done at about previous rates. Provisions, generally, continue buoyant, and pork, in particular, has further advanced.

The accounts from the country continue to bring complaints of the bad condition of the roads and the difficulty, if not impracticability, of hauling cotton to the landings. Most of that which had accumulated at the shipping points has come forward. The receipts show a further falling off, and we notice that at Memphis the general opinion favors a reduction of crop estimates to less than 2,500,000 bales. As the receipts at this port for the current week last year amounted to 33,378 bales, we may expect a material decrease at the close of the current week, and also an additional falling off in the general receipts.

The river remains about the same, being three feet below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 5th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ..... bales..	10879
Lake	26
Arkansas	891
Mobile	01
Florida	108
Texas	145
Total	12100

On Saturday the market opened with a slack demand, and at prices showing no material change from Friday, but toward noon the movement became more animated, and although factors advanced their pretensions ¼ to ½c., yet buyers operated freely until the close, taking fully 12,250 bales, and prices in the later part of the day showing an improvement of ¼c., low middling being quoted at 28 to 28¼c., and middling at 29c. On Monday the immediate demand having been pretty well supplied, and the weather being moreover dark and rainy, operations were partially suspended, the sales being confined to 1,300 bales, while prices eased off, although hardly quotably lower. On Tuesday the market opened with no improvement in the demand. Buyers generally stood aloof, being unable to go on unless at a reduction, to which factors would not submit. The latter, in fact, in the face of light receipts, evinced unabated confidence, and were unwilling to make any concessions. Under these circumstances the movement was without spirit, and the business embraced barely 2 200 bales, part at a reduction of ⅛ to ¼c., and part at prices fully up to previous rates.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 15,750 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 598,361 bales, against 379,943 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 61,299 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 28,112 bales to France, a decrease of 125,237 to Great Britain, and of 5,440 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	25½ to 26
Good ordinary	27 to 27½
Low middling	27½ to 28¼
Middling	28¾ to 29
Strict middling	— to 29¼

SUGAR.—The demand has exhibited less activity since our last review, and prices are not as full as they were, yet the supplies have sold quite readily. On Saturday 500 hogsheads, all the receipts, sold at 8½ to 9½c. per pound for inferior; 10¼ to 10½c. for common; 11 to 11¾c. for fair; 12¼ to 12½c. for fully fair; 12¾c. for prime; 13 to 13¼c. for choice; 14¼ to 14¾c. for yellow clarified, and 15 to 15¼c. for white.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 16

General Longstreet was upon the floor of the House this afternoon, at first sealed, writing at a desk vacated for him by a Republican member. In a short time he was discovered and soon surrounded by both Republicans and Democrats, and cordially shaken by the hand. One Republican member said to Longstreet: "General, we have admired your courage and bravery in the field, but we esteem your recent course in matters of political interest to the South as of a higher order of courage than that which you displayed in battle." Longstreet bowed in acknowledgment of this and other compliments bestowed upon him.

House Committee on Elections today formally and finally disposed of the contest for the seat from the second district of Louisiana, deciding that none of the applicants are entitled to the seat. They decide that Mann, the deceased member, was legally elected and qualified, so that it follows that Jones, who contested Mann's election, is not entitled to the seat. For the rest, including Menard, the colored man, who claims to have been elected to fill Mann's unexpired term, the committee decides that election was violated by various frauds, such as changing the boundaries of the district, etc. The second district of Louisiana will not, therefore, be represented at this session of Congress; and, unless there be a very decided change of sentiment among Republican members, it will stand a poor chance of representation in the next Congress, for it is the very general opinion of these members that the whole election in Louisiana, last summer, was fraudulent and void.

EFFECT OF GENERAL GRANT'S SPEECH

Washington and New York specials, of the 13th, to the Louisville Courier-Journal, say:

The speech of General Grant today on the occasion of receiving the certificate of his election as President has created a decided sensation among the members of the Republican party, especially the senatorial wing.

His declaration that he will not make known his cabinet until he nominates them respectively to the Senate, on the 5th proximo, is accepted by Radical Senators as fair notice that he will listen to no advice on the subject—a notice that is not even received with concealed regret by prominent members of the party, but with openly expressed dissatisfaction, in that the course he intends to pursue is contrary to that pursued by Lincoln and previous Presidents, and betrays at once a reflection on the Senate for its virtual refusal to repeal the civil tenure of office act.

The Pacific railroad and other lobbies are startled at his expressed determination to insure economy and retrenchment, and look upon it more seriously than as the usual catchwords of political professions.

It has thrown the office-seekers also in a commotion, scores of whom he refused to receive today, and opened their eyes to protracted hotel bills and other heavy expenses incident to great delay in Washington.

On the whole the speech has excited more interest than any of General Grant's previous declarations.

But, notwithstanding his reticence, nearly everybody feels assured that he will retain General Schofield as Secretary of War, and nominate E. B. Washburne, of Illinois, as minister to France.

The especial friends of General Grant are alarmed and disgusted with the discovery that the principle of the tenure of office law has been injected into a great variety of law regulating the appointment of Federal officials, and that the repeal of the tenure of office law itself will but partially remove the embarrassing restriction of the Senate upon the action of the President. They threaten war and vengeance if laws are permitted to remain as they are.

General Grant's speech, in connection with the impression that is gaining ground that aspirants for office will be compelled to undergo a competitive examination, is exciting great disgust among the common herd of office-seekers. They assert that the whole is but a pretext for shaking them off entirely.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The Reconstruction Committee reported an amendment to the Mississippi bill, extending the time of the convention to sixty days and erasing the per diem restrictions.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—Evening. It is stated again that the Senate Judiciary Committee are about reporting the Virginia bill by which the people can vote for or against the disfranchising clauses while voting for the constitution itself.

The Senate Judiciary Committee report that after careful examination of the subject they have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the President's proclamation of December 25 was wholly beyond his constitutional power, and that it can have no efficiency to the end sought to be reached by it. The Constitution permits the President to grant reprieves and pardon, but no pardon and amnesty.

The following is the resolution offered by the Judiciary Committee:

"That in the opinion of the Senate the proclamation of the President of the United States, dated 25th December, 1868, purporting to grant pardon and amnesty to all persons guilty of treason and acts of hostility to the United States during the late rebellion, with restoration of their rights, etc., was not authorized by the Constitution or law."

The Committee on Public Lands reported a bill authorizing the construction of railroad and telegraph called the Memphis, El Paso and Pacific Railroad. The bill simply gives the right of way, no lands.

THE infamous thing called a civil rights bill having passed the Senate—what a desecration of the name to apply it to such men as now compose the Senate of Louisiana!—yesterday passed the House. It was amended, as we have already stated, by ordering that it should take effect from the 1st of April, instead of immediately upon its passage, the members fearing to face the outbreak which must be the result if it is attempted to be enforced. The bill came up yesterday on its final passage. Mr. Faulkner, of Caldwell parish, who was elected on the Radical ticket, first took the floor on it. He opposed it as injudicious and unnecessary, declaring himself more the friend of the blacks than were those who were engaged in thrusting such a law upon the people of Louisiana

A darky named George Washington next got up and ventilated his opinions, which were for the bill, though he claimed that the negroes only want their rights, urging his hearers to strike for their rights then and there, or never deserve them. Then under the gag of the previous question the bill was run through and finally passed by the following recorded vote of 61 to 15:

Yeas—Abbott, Alexander, Antoine, Adolphe, Belot, Brewster, Burrell, Calhoun, Carr, Cuny, Deslonde, Dewees, Dufresne, Dupart, Douglass, Evans, Esnard, Guignonet, Garstkamp, Guidry, Hill, Honore, Harper, Hutchison, Hall, Heidenhain, Isabelle, Le Blanc, Lee, Leroy, Lott, Lang V. M., Lang R., Morris, Mahier, McMillen, McVean, Murrell, Mansion, Moran, Mathews, Noble, Pearce, Page, Raymond, Reese, Rey, Simms, Sterrett, Taylor, Tureaud, Tounoir, Umphreys, Walsh, Washington, Williams Wm., Williams H., Yorke, Young D.—61.

Nays.—Bryant, Corell, Faulkner, Haskell, Hanlon, Kent, L'Hoste, McCullen, Magee, Pratt, Wren, Waters, Wiltz, Young N., Zoelly—15.

Mr. Noble, a Democrat, it will be noticed, voted yea, but we will here state that he did so for the express purpose of moving a reconsideration. Debate had been all cut off by a call for the previous question, and to vote yea and move a reconsideration was Mr. Noble's only method to obtain a hearing.

Of those voting against the bill, two, Faulkner, of Caldwell, and Wren, of Bossier, are Republicans. But in this instance they displayed a freedom from party trammels and a regard to the true interest of the people of the State which will go far toward obliterating their past political records.

As to the men who voted for the measure, when the dark hour of discord and confusion closes in upon our State, as close it will if it is attempted to enforce this bill, let the people remember who created the law. "It is given to the women to weep," says the German apothegm, "and to the men to remember."—Crescent, February 18.

THAT old Lamartine, despite his weakness, is still popular in Paris, is proved by the fact that during the first four days after his return to his villa, in Passy, upward of fifteen hundred persons left their cards at his house.

THE constitution of Texas is to be submitted to a vote of the people of the State on the first Monday of July.

Burning of the Steamer Mittis Stephens.

THE TRIP.

At the time the accident occurred the Mittie Stephens was on her way to Jefferson, Texas, with a large consignment of government stores on board, some $30,000 in specie, perhaps some money in greenbacks for paying off two or three regiments upon the frontier, and a large amount of hay. The hay was placed, as is frequently done, four tiers deep upon the hniler deck. The danger from the accidental ignition of this mass of inflammable material was not unknown to the passengers, but appears to have occasioned no protest.

On Thursday the Mittie Stephens had reached Shreveport, (the last point on Red river navigable owing to the raft thirty miles above,) and had now turned aside into the network of bayous, lakes and lagoons which connect Shreveport and Jefferson City. It was to this latter point and the last one attainable by boats from this city, that the Mittie Stephens was making when the accident occurred.

At that time she had already gone more than half the distance between Shreveport and Jefferson—that is, had left the now choked up current of Red river altogether, and sailed through DeSoto Lake into Lake Caddo. The latter body of water lies partly in Louisiana (the extreme northwest portion) and partly in Texas, and is fourteen miles long and seven wide.

On Thursday night supper had been served at an early hour on the unfortunate boat, and the passengers—a hundred in number—after occupying themselves in the manner usual to those who have been several days on board of a boat, had retired. As early as nine o'clock the saloons had began to grow thin; at ten they were deserted.

The boat was, it is now supposed, sailing, although the water was ten feet deep in various parts of the lake, through the main channel; that is, through what, in dry weather and when the lake is to a large extent dried up, constitutes a bayou. The fact that a large number of cypress treestumps are just out from the water and render the navigation otherwise extremely dangerous supports this supposition What confirms the belief that the main channel was taken is that boats in high water push straight through it with but little trouble to the pilots.

THE ALARM OF FIRE

It was precisely at the hour of midnight, when the passengers and crew were buried in slumber, that the cry of fire was heard on the doomed boat—the most startling and terrible that can be raised upon any kind of vessel cut off from communication with the shore. The fact that any alarm at all was given meant certain death for a large number. The situation was such as almost to preclude escape, from the inflammable character of the cargo, and the fact that no other boat was in sight.

The Mittie Stephens had at the time of the accident more than a hundred souls on board in the passengers and crew, and of that number only forty-three were saved. The remaining sixty-three perished by drowning, or still more miserably in the general holocaust of the vessel; and the corpses of these, as those who traveled upon many other well-known steamers, are doubtless at this moment beneath the sluggish and sullen waters of the lake.

THE PASSENGERS AND CREW.

The following are those known to be lost: Of the crew—Geo. Reimer, first clerk; Charles Weir, first engineer; Thomas Mulligan, second engineer; M. McGill, striker; Peter Fisher, James Gardner and John Batteze, colored firemen.

Passengers.—Mrs. Jackson and three children; Mrs. T. L. Lyon and son, Frank; Mr. and Mrs. Lewis and three children; one unknown lady from Grand Ecore; W. A. Broadwell, of New Orleans; Mr. J. C. Christian, Mr. Boynkin, Mr. Ash and Mr. New.

Deck passengers.—James Johnson, Nancy Bradford and child, William Morris, Martha Williams, Henry Ashly, Sidney Ashly, Robert Phillips, John A. Phillips, James Phillips, Martha A. Phillips, Alexander Phillips.

Deck Crew.—William Murphy, Joseph Ganes, Andrew Gallighan, Thomas Ryan, Pat. Ryan, Nat. Buchanan, William Buchanan, Jim Hill, Henry Hicks, Peter Engine, and six not known.

Cabin crew.—Varissa Baptist, pantryman; Napoleon Washington, texas tender; Charles Redford, John Smith and Dennis Williams, cabin boys; Robert Franklin, second porter; G. W. Hughes, first cook; Chas. Crano, baker; Ann Collins chambermaid.

List of survivors.—H. Kellogg, captain; T. M Hetherton, George Klein, clerks; John Polaod, mate; Peter Sutherland and William Swain, pilots; Joe Lodwick and Joseph West, steersmen; J. H Covert, steward; W. R. Guyan, barkeeper; Samuel Wilcox, striker; Samuel Underwood, watchman; Philip Hill, carpenter; John Wilson, porter; Edward Chaplin, barber; William Adams, Nat. Adley, Peter Beck, Tony Foster, Geo. W. Hughes, and thirteen others of the crew.

Passengers saved.—Ole Bierke, S. J. Johnson, J. B. Senzeman, A. McRae, W. F. Gobb, A. Pace, G. W. Peterson, George L. Coyle, G. A. Williams, Elizabeth Johnson, Mary Johnson, Ann Ashly, Beulah Ashly.

The survivors, forty-three in number, are now in this city.—New Orleans Times.

ROMANISM A FAILURE.

If any man doubts that Romanism is a failure, let him turn to those countries where it has long had supremacy. Not a single instance can be found where it has elevated the masses, or purified the public morals. Liberty has nowhere advanced under its influence, nor has science or literature been promoted. In Europe, to day, the traveler can tell when he has crossed into a Catholic country by the neglect and squalor that confront him, in melancholy contrast with what he has just left within the borders of Protestantism. Romanism has failed as an antidote even for paganism. While Protestantism can point to nations redeemed and elevated by its power, and to a renovating influence wherever it prevails, nothing of the sort has, in any instance, attended the papacy. The death of Dr. Elliott reminded us, a week ago, that the Wyandottes, under Roman Catholic care, became only more and more imbruted. There was not power in priests or penances to even retard the tide of moral corruption that was flowing in upon them. A pure Gospel, from the lips of itinerants, was shown to have in it much greater efficacy. So it has been in all quarters of the globe. In the East Indies, in Africa, far up toward the poles, in Spain and Italy, in a word, everywhere. No calamity that could befall our own country could be greater than the supremacy of this vile heresy. No wonder, therefore, that the bold effrontery with which the decline of Protestantism is asserted should awaken concern and inquiry. By the year 1900 Father Hecker expects to find that the Roman Catholics have a political majority in this country. He intends to make it the mission of his life to educate his people up to the idea that they must then assume the government, and conduct its affairs in the interest of their church.

At the very outset of an investigation of this subject, we are confronted with an almost entire absence of Romish statistics, while ours are most detailed and exact. So far, too, as we know their numbers, they embrace about all the attendants upon their ministry: every baptized one, child or adult, is a Catholic. Protestants, for the most part, count only those who make a distinct profession of faith in Christ, and become formally connected with the church. Counted as the Church of Rome counts her members, the Methodist Episcopal Church would number at least five millions; thus, though but a single sect, outnumbering the Romanists. The most favoring estimates do not give their numbers at more than five millions, while, excluding the children, some place the figures at considerable less than two millions. This difference between their way of reckoning and ours we sometimes forget, and they always do.

We might suppose a time of great spiritual dearth, when a decrease should be reported through successive years, without at all affecting the relative numbers of Romanists and Protestants. A Catholic may be profane, a drunkard and riotous, but he counts; but if Protestants are only worldly, they cease to count. A church of formalists and nominal Christians can thus always outcount a spiritual church with a vital membership.

They have but a little over three thousand priests in all the country, while Methodism alone has some seven thousand ministers, and general Protestantism four times this number. Our men are as talented, as laborous, as earnest, better educated, and with a better cause. Surely this does not look discouraging.

They have but seventy colleges in the country, while aggregated Protestantism can boast five hundred. Their most important educational institutions are for women. They have one hundred and thirty-four "schools for girls," while their documents hardly speak of schools for boys They have thus a sharp eye on the education of the race.

They have two thousand five hundred and fifty church edifices. Methodists (of all classes) have nineteen thousand eight hundred and eighty-three, and combined Protestantism has forty thousand four hundred and twenty-nine, or nearly sixteen for each one of theirs. Is that like decadence? like perishing? The Methodist churches will seat over six millions, the Romish not one and a half millions. The value of the Methodist churches, notwithstanding the vast expenditures of Romanists on architectural display, exceeds theirs by six millions. The average value of each Methodist church is but $1,660, while that of each Catholic church is $10,491; this being to our credit, and a sign of hope. We build for the people.

The following statistics, given by Mr. Collyer in a recent discourse, are, we think, reliable:

"The Evangelical sects have steadily gained upon the increase of our population. Within a century the Methodists have grown from 15,000 to 2,000,000 communicants; the Baptists from 35,000 to 1,700,000; the Presbyterians from 40,000 to 700,000; the Congregationalists from 75,000 to 275,000, and the Episcopalians to about 170,000. The population has increased sixfold, and the church communicants more than tenfold. In 1800 there was one communicant to every fifteen of the population, and now in these sects there is about one to every eight of the population."

One method in which they "whistle to keep their courage up," is to select some city, at first almost exclusively Protestant, and show by the census how Rome has gained on Protestantism. They say nothing of immigration, by which they are weakened in all the Old World to be strengthened in the New. They take no pains to make it evident that they save these emigrants and their children to their church. They know full well that, as the children grow in years, and become educated, in multitudinous cases, they break loose from ritualistic shackles, and become infidel, rationalistic, or Protestant. American Romanism gives birth to devotees by shiploads, and mistakenly thinks it grows, as compared with increase, almost solely by increase of population. This march of papal Europe to our land indicates that the scarlet woman is to exhaust herself in one last struggle on American shores. Everywhere else the system is perishing; and her last hope is here. If we are true, the sanctuary will be purged, and the dim cathedrals that rise in such gloomy grandeur around us will become illuminated with truth, and vocal with divine praise.

Here and there we find some fashionable or literary pervert to Rome, but the common people, who so gladly heard Jesus, cannot be satisfied with mummeries, vestments or departed tongues. They have so little respect for the immaculate conception that they hesitate not, if they wish, to name their children Mary, and the sweet name will never die out. On the other hand, there is scarcely a Protestant church located near to Romanist neighborhoods that has not received into its pale, converts from Rome. In our own pastorate we are quite sure we have received a score. Of the domestics that have served us, nominally Romanists, about half had no respect for their priests or peculiar doctrines. There is a perpetual loosening of the fetters that bind the people of Rome. By this kind of informal statistics we are all convinced of Rome's decline.

But, again, if New England was at its settlement almost exclusively Puritan, and now contains a considerable papal population, Baltimore, with Maryland, was settled mainly by Catholics, and contains as considerable a population of Protestants. By turning the tables, therefore, we find in Maryland the same evidences of the decline of Romanism that are given of the decline of Protestantism elsewhere. In the whole State of Maryland there are now scarcely more than eighty Roman Catholic churches, while the Protestant churches of the State exceed a thousand, or are twelve times as many, and the ratio of church members is not less at variance with what it once was.

If this old harlot is not in her senility, and near to her end, then the trembling veteran on the papal throne belies the state of the church. Once he disposed of kings and sceptres, now few so poor as to do him reverence. The utmost vigilance is required to maintain his uncomfortable seat. But for foreign bayonets he would long since have fallen. It seems to us folly is completed when men talk of the vigor, expansion and triumph of the papacy. Its triumph here may be the ruin of our liberties, but even then it is itself doomed. There is no need, however, of its triumph here. This boasting that fills our ears is for effect, this boldness is but desperation. We are closing in for the last struggle. The battle is for the race; the victory will be final.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

The Florida Conference held its session at Jacksonville, January 13-17, 1869. Bishop Wightman presided. We are much obliged to the secretary, the Rev. F. A. Branch, for plain and correct manuscript minutes; from which we gather that J. H D. McRae, G. C. Level, were admitted on trial; J. T. Payne, C. P. Murdock, were readmitted; J. A. Wiggins was received from the South Georgia Conference; J. E. Dodd, A Holcombe, G. R. Frisbee, (local,) were ordained deacons; E. S. Tyner, (traveling,) W. A. McLean, L. J. A. Brun, (local,) were ordained elders; D. Roberts, R. H. Rogers, M. A. Clontz, located; E. L. Blake, A Johnson superannuated; J B. Jackson, W. McKay, died; members, 5,837 white, being an increase of 301 the past year; 649 colored, a decrease of 81; local preachers 73, a decrease of 1; baptized 340 white, 25 colored infants, 223 white, 49 colored adults—a very imperfect report, of course; Sunday schools, white 68; colored 4; teachers, white, 425; colored, 5; scholars, white, 2,180; colored, 50. These are meager figures; but the colored people have been coaxed and driven from us in Florida, as elsewhere. When the Colored Annual Conference is organized in Florida they will doubtless come home. Collected for superannuated preachers, etc., $627 55; domestic missions, $818 15; foreign, $135. We venture to predict a better showing at the next session, in Lake City. Our brethren in Florida have been passing through a severe ordeal, but God will bring them out triumphant.

A SABBATH MORN.

A Sabbath morn—softly the village bells
Ring out their welcome to the sacred day.
The weary swain has drunk of longer sleep,
And now, his children clustering round him, leads
The happy group from under his low porch,
And through their little garden, where each plucks
A rose, or pansy, to the school they love;
The busy bee delights his ear; and soon
The morning hymn floats heavenward; but himself,
Holding the youngest prattler in his arms,
Waits in the church yard, where about him lie
His father and his father's fathers, till
The children, following in their pastor's steps,
Whose gray locks flutter in the summer's breeze,
All pass beneath the hallowed roof, and all
Kneeling, where generations past have knelt,
Pour forth their common wants in common prayer.
A rural Sabbath—nearest type of heaven;
Yet scarcely less beloved in toil-worn courts
And alleys of the city. What true heart
Loves not the Sabbath? that dear pledge of home,
That trysting-place of God and man; that link
Betwixt a near eternity and time;
That almost lonely rivulet which flows
From Eden through the world's wide waste of sand
Unchecked, and though not unalloyed with earth,
Its healing waters all impregned with life—
The life of their first blessing, to pure lips
The memory of a by-gone Paradise,
The earnest of a Paradise to come.

Who know thee best love best, thou pearl of days,
And guard thee with most jealous care from morn
Till dewy evenlog, when the ceaseless play,
Hour after hour, of thy sweet influences
Has tuned the hearts of pilgrims to the songs
And music of their heavenly Father loved.
But mortal ears are heavy; and mortal eyes
Catch only glimpses, dim and indistinct,
Of things unseen, beauteous but far away;
Enough to quicken, but not satiate love:
And the soon weary spirit exhausted sighs
For wings to flee away, and be at rest,
Or solaces its musings, there remains
A Sabbath for the toiling church of God.

SUGGESTIVE FACTS AND FIGURES FROM THE STATISTICAL REPORTS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFE'E, FOR THE YEAR 1868

Mr. Editor: Not in my official (statistical) capacity, but on my individual responsibility, not "with malice aforethought," but with a sincere desire to accomplish good, I propose to furnish you and your readers with a few extracts from the statistical reports of the Mississippi Conference for the year 1868. I am aware that the bare statement of the plain truth will have the appearance of a criminal indictment against the Methodist Church, but let "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" be told, and nobody can be hurt. I shall not furnish the whole report, as it will appear on the published minutes, but at present shall confine myself to the Brookhaven and the Jackson districts, that the church and the world may know what is being done in these lands, by the followers of Wesley, for the extension of Christ's kingdom. I have before me full returns from six appointments in the Jackson district, served by six preachers, and numbering six hundred and sixty members. These paid their preachers the aggregate sum of $2,104 65, or $350 66 to the preacher. One thousand seven hundred and twenty-one members in Brookhaven district paid ten preachers $3,843, or $384 30 to the preacher.

The six hundred and sixty members in Jackson district paid for all church purposes—say preachers, missions, widows and orphans, and bishops' fund—the aggregate sum of $2,271 80. This makes an average of $3 44 to the member per annum, or a little more than six cents per week. The one thousand seven hundred and twenty-one members of the Brookhaven district paid the total amount of $4,008 27. This is an average of $2 33 per member per annum, or four and one-half cents a week. Thus it will be seen that while the preachers on the Brookhaven district received, on an average, each about $30 more than the preachers of the Jackson district, the members in the latter district paid fifty per cent. more per capita than those of the Brookhaven district, while the average amount paid per member in the two districts combined—say two thousand three hundred and eighty-one persons, paying $6,280 07—was $2 51 per annum—less than five cents per week. Verily, a cheap Gospel. Let us compare some of the stations and circuits:

Jackson station paid $8 21 per member to the pastor.

Brookhaven station paid $6 per member to the pastor.

Crystal Springs station paid $1 38 per member to the pastor.

Hazlehurst station paid twenty-nine cents per member to the pastor.

The two last were circuits, pivoting on the railroad towns, which gave them their names. The two towns are now united into a station, a parsonage having been erected last year at Crystal Sprigs. In Scotland circuit, Brookhaven district, with four hundred and sixty-two members, contributed for all purposes $684 25, or less than $1 50 per annum per member—about three cents a week; while Bayou Pierre circuit, with two pastors, four local deacons, four local elders and two hundred and ten members, gave for all purposes $880 25.

Now Scotland and Bayou Pierre circuits embrace the best farming lands in Jefferson, Copiah and Claiborne counties, and I could tell how much cotton the Methodist people of this section sold in Brookhaven, Wesson and Hazlehurst, and how much they got for it, and what per cent. of it went into the Lord's treasury; but it won't do, perhaps, to be too personal. With the same emphasis that Antony, in his speech over Cæsar's dead body, lays on the word "honorable," so we may say "they are liberal, all liberal people." And if we were inclined to be classical we might dwell on that same dead body of Cæsar, suggesting the thought of another dead body, pierced by the generous daggers of liberal friends; and Cæsar's exclamation, "Et tu Brute!" or Brutus' hypocritical remark, "Not that I loved Cæsar less," etc.—merely substituting church for Cæsar, and mammon for "Brute," Brutus or Rome, which ever you please—might adorn the tale. But I forbear.

I merely give the foregoing significant facts. I accuse no one—fix the blame nowhere. The apology will be offered: The times are hard; we will do better when we get richer. Stay one moment. You didn't do better, nor even as well, when you were richer.

But this is enough for the present, and perhaps too much. These same statistical tables tell many o'er true tales, showing truth to be stranger than fiction, and they will show that I have selected the two very best districts. The general averages for the entire Conference will fall far below the above figures.

Brethren, these things ought not so to be.

P. S.—I note that the average amount per member paid by the Methodists in Georgia for all purposes, last year, was $3 20. Mississippi will fall below this. And the Georgia Conferences number sixty-one thousand nine hundred and thirty members; and Mississippi how many? Tell us, Mr. Editor. You have the minutes.

Brookhaven, Miss., Feb. 3, 1869.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Mansfield, La., Feb. 1, 1869.

Mr. Editor: We have commenced in order the labors of another Conference year. The first quarterly conference—or "agony," as Post Oak would have it—was closed last night. It wound up by organizing a Bible society.—Rev. B. F. Alexander, presiding elder and Bible agent, was on hand. The claims of the Bible cause were presented by one and another in appropriate addresses. A society was formed, consisting of fifty-seven members, and between $50 and $60 raised.

There has been a good deal of changing about with the freedmen for several weeks past. Many good planters have found it difficult to get labor. Some depredations have been committed among us by bad men, but they have been promptly dealt with and punished by the civil authorities. Things are now settling down.—Freedmen in the main have found homes and gone to work, and we have quiet and peace, and expect another prosperous year.

The only fears now entertained are that your Legislature will force upon us a State militia, which will doubtless have a tendency to disorganize the labor of the country, and destroy the quiet and peace of both white and black.

It is true there are some bad men in the country, made reckless by the loss of property and the demoralizing effects of the war, who do occasionally disturb the peace of society by their malicious deeds; but the civil authorities and law-abiding people have formally vowed and pledged themselves to punish the guilty and to protect the innocent. They can do this much better, much more successfully, than any organized militia. Such a force would exasperate bad men, interfere with the labor of the country, and disturb the quiet and prosperity of the whole State. We have never witnessed a greater disposition among the people to be law-abiding, to stay at home, and by faithful industry make an honest living and develop the resources of the country, and all they ask is to be let alone.

We are in process of organizing a temperance movement in De Soto to promote the cause of temperance.

Our plan is to get as many men as we can secure—at least one dozen—to lecture and preach on the subject, who will go at our bidding to any point or place, and harangue the people on the subject and present to them a total abstinence pledge.

This evil has grown to be a huge one in its proportions. The people make it, drink it, buy it and sell it, and the devil gets the gain.

The colored people of this place who left our church en masse, two years ago, have recently—a portion of them—requested us to take them back, and we are serving and preaching to them as before. They are finding out who are their real friends.

A Wonderful Preacher.—Another Munsey.—We copy the following from the Bristol (Tennessee) News:

"On Sunday and Monday last the Rev. W. W. Bays preached a series of very remarkable sermons at the Methodist church in this place. The fame of the young pulpit orator had preceded him and his position was one fraught with much anxiety to his friends. The public expectation was great, and we hazard nothing when we say he filled it. He is such a wonder as is perhaps not seen by many of the generations of men. While his imagination and command of language are truly startling, he takes high rank as a thorough thinker and reasoner. There is yet about his language some of the extravagance and redundance of early life, and when age shall have tempered the fires of his mighty intellect, it may be said of him that for glowing and vivid power of imagery he has had no equal since the days of Bascomb. His descriptions of the creation, the advent of light, the work of the sixth day, when man flashes into existence, that mighty act of Jehovah when he flung the sun and stars into the field of heaven, each drawing about him a retinue of worlds, was unsurpassed by any effort within our memory. His depiction of the murder of Jesus, of the descent to hell and of the dark valley of the shadow of death, upon whose crags the angels of God perched and sang the songs of heaven, were only surpassed by that of the journey of the redeemed soul up beyond moon and sun and stars, into and over the plains of heaven. This young man is one of the wonders of our time. He is only twenty-nine years of age, is a native of Russell county, and in 1866 was a class mate, at Emory and Henry College, of the junior editor of the News."

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Mrs. Tennessee Deborah Davenport, daughter of Rev. W. B. Johnson and wife of J. D. S. Davenport, of Jefferson county, Mississippi, was born in Franklin county, March 2, 1835, was married in 1849, and died December 13, 1868.

Being the daughter and granddaughter of itinerant Methodist ministers and their pious, godly wives, she was trained from her infancy to love God and follow the teachings of our Master. The seed of this instruction took deep root in the "good ground" of her heart. She was baptized in her infancy, and in the earliest days of her discretion, in the full exercise of her volition, she ratified her connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. But though a child in years, she was a woman in her faith and integrity. As proof of this her husband states that soon after their marriage he called upon her to join with him a denomination which held, as essential, doctrines which she could not believe. With a heart filled with strong but tender love for her young husband, and burning with an earnest desire for his salvation, she replied: "My dear husband, I am willing to do anything that is right and possible to have you in the church; but how, ah how can I ignore the religion of my fathers?" He afterward changed his mind and joined the church of which she was a member.

Though a vail of temporal care or spiritual gloom would at times obscure the bright approbation of her Master's face, yet there was perhaps none more constant and unwavering in faith. She died signifying her way as clear and her hope of salvation. She lived to be the mother of seven children, one of whom has preceded her to the glory land. The others, young and tender, are left to the care of a true father, endeared with the prayers of a devoted mother, and in the kind hands of our God, who is Father over all. Their mother has gone from them a little, and though only a little, yet they miss her.

The gentle, kind and good,
With thoughtful face and brow,
A model of true womanhood,
Oh! how they miss her now.

Farewell, departed one,
Not an everlasting farewell;
We feel, we know that thou hast gone
Among the blest to dwell. G.

Thomas S. Wall, son of James A. and Rebecca J. Wall, was born on the 24th of March, 1811, in Greenville county, Virginia, and died at his residence, near Nixbury, Coosa county, Alabama, December 5, 1868, aged fifty seven years, eight months and nine days.

He came and settled in Madison county, in the northern portion of this State, when it was the Mississippi Territory, and married Miss Nancy Dunsmore in 1834.

In 1834 he settled in Coosa county, and remained there, as an active citizen in all its public enterprises, until his death. For two full terms he filled the office of high sheriff of the county, with much credit to himself and great acceptability to the people.

He joined the church in the year 1855, and remained a member of the same until his death. He was liberal in its support, and his name is no doubt embalmed in the hearts of all the preachers who have since traveled the work for his acts of kindness to them.

God kindly revealed to him, six months before his death, that his days would be few on earth, and he told me he was setting his house in order. His death was triumphant. He was a kind husband, a devoted father, a true friend. Only those who know him well could estimate him properly. Many poor have been fed by him when no sound of the trumpet was heard on the street. But he is gone, and gone to heaven. He leaves to mourn for him a pious and affectionate wife, a family of good children, and many friends. May God bless and take care of the widow and orphans.

William A. Edwards.

Born, in the city of Tuscaloosa, Alabama, May 5, 1849, and died in Tuskegee, Alabama, July 2, 1868, Miss Mary C. Ferguson, second daughter of the late Rev. F. G. Ferguson, of the Alabama Conference.

Before me, as I write, lies a valuable edition of Milton's Poetical Works, upon the fly leaf of which are written the following lines:

"My Dear Teacher: As a slight token of my esteem, and to show you, in some degree, that I most highly appreciate the toil and labor expended on me during my collegiate course, I proffer for your acceptance these volumes of 'Milton.' While reading them, be reminded of the evening repasts in literature we once enjoyed, and may it please you to think that there, and in the study for that joyful time, they were thus worn. 'Think of me at my best.' M. C. Ferguson."

Fondly and vividly do I recall the beautiful girl who wrote these lines. It is a memory of unmixed pleasure. I think of the unflagging vivacity of her spirits, the geniality of her temper, the cheerfulness of her disposition. I remember the activity and acuteness of her intellect. I recall the hearty zest with which her receptive mind, in its early quickenings, welcomed the influx of knowledge and the conscious growth of her awakened faculties. I think of her studious assiduity, and her worthy ambition in the pursuit of learning. The charms of her personal presence rise to my memory, the dignity and gracefulness of her carriage, the eye that sparkled, and the cheek that bloomed; the grave earnestness of her thoughtful face in hours of serious discourse, and the sunny smile that lighted up features radiant with intelligence and gentleness. I dwell with pleasure upon the gracious results of her collegiate training, which fostered her natural aptitude for learning and brought her to the tasks of life with disciplined intellect, elevated tastes, and ennobling aspirations. It is delightful to think that in the many years of my intercourse with her in the school room her conduct was always marked by sweet subordination, dutiful reverence, confiding attachment and cheerful obedience.

Mary's religious character was early developed. Several years since she joined the Methodist Church. Her course was marked, for awhile, by the fluctuations which usually attend inexperienced Christians. In the fall of 1867, however, during a remarkable season of revival in the community, Mary became deeply persuaded of the necessity of a more thorough work of grace in her heart. She came promptly to the altar, and soon rejoiced in a new and deeper experience of divine mercy. From this period a great and notable change was wrought in her. She became, according to the testimony of her associates, more serious, took more thoughtful views of life, manifested a loftier consecration to duty, and exhibited in every relationship the depth and genuineness of her improved religious experience.

One of the most pleasing proofs of her true religious character was seen in the anxious concern which she evinced for the happiness of her widowed mother, and for the welfare of her younger brothers and sister. She labored to lighten the burdens of her mother. With all the plans of the household for the improvement, maintenance and comfort of the children, she was in ardent and active sympathy. She was her mother's tender adviser, the sweet, companionable ministrant of her daily life, and the partaker of her sorrows and her joys. In her dying moments the thought that cast the only shadow across her way was the anxiety which she felt for the welfare of the younger members of the family.

The latest literary work of her life was the preparation of a catechism, in conformity with the wishes of the late General Conference of the Methodist Church South, embodying the history, doctrines and usages of Methodism. To qualify herself for this task, Mary took a wide range of reading and study. The manuscript was exhibited to Rev. O. R. Blue, of the Montgomery Conference, a man whose deliberate opinion is entitled to the highest respect. He pronounced it a work of unusual merit, and for one so young as the writer, a performance of extraordinary interest and v

Assumptions Concerning the of Infant Baptism.

The January number of th tist Quarterly contains an ar "Infant Baptism," by Profe N. Arnold, D. D., of Hamilto York, which opens with the ing paragraph:

FALSEHOOD.

Mr. Editor: I trust that my communication will find admittance to your columns, since, as a seeker after truth, I desire information.

The question I propound, and to which I would have a plain answer, is this:

Are there any circumstances under which a willful falsehood is excusable?

In the Bible I have always thought there were plain, positive commands against a willful falsehood. I have never thought for a moment that even death itself was allowed by inspired writers as a justification.

Please bear in mind that I do not ask the definition of a lie. I do not ask whether a man is excusable for strategy and such like things as to save his life when in danger. Any man can save his life by hiding in disguise, so that his enemies are deceived as to his whereabouts, I have regarded it justifiable; but I think that the Bible commands against lying have no bearing upon such cases.

The question is whether, when one knows that he is telling what cannot be tortured into anything else but a lie, can he, under any circumstances, find excuse for it?

It seems strange to me that I am writing such a question, for, as before said, I had supposed the matter definitely settled by the highest authority, viz, the Bible. The cause of my writing, however, is this: Not long ago I was assured that a minister, in whom I have great confidence, had said: "If a robber meets you in the road and demands your purse, but leaves it to your honor to say whether you had a purse, you were justifiable in saying that you had no purse, though you really had one, in order to save it." This is not the first time I have heard similar doctrine from the high in office.

Now, sir, is there any excuse for a lie?—any situation in which a man can be placed that will so justify him in a known falsehood that he will escape the condemnation of God's word? If so I should like to be assured of it.

In that case, instead of reverencing the martyrs as Christian heroes, who died for the truth, I shall regard them as old fools, who might, by a little excusable lying, have escaped a great deal of pain, and spared the world a tremendous amount of loss!

Moreover, I shall never be troubled about the sale of an injured horse, for a little lying will save me, in his sale, more than I ever carry in my purse on the road.

Oh! that some of the wise ones would answer my question and set my mind at rest.

Reader of Ohio.

THAT IS THE MAN.

Mr. Editor: Considerable notice has been taken by the papers of the effusions of Dr. Ewer, who has informed the world that "Protestantism is a failure!" Probably this man could not tell what Protestantism is, to save him from the ignominy he deserves. I have been sorry to see so much attention bestowed upon him, for it has a tendency to give importance to a very unimportant person. Notoriety is what he has been seeking for years. Let him gain it by his own follies, and not by the attention of sensible men. I should attach no more importance to his opinions upon Christianity than I should to those of Ralph Waldo Emerson or Greeley. The following brief sketch will give the public some idea of this man:

"The Rev. Dr. Ewer, of New York, who has been preaching a series of sermons on 'the Failure of Protestantism,' is thus described by the editor of the Pacific, a paper published in San Francisco:

"'We knew him when, in Sacramento, he was one of the editors of a political paper. In those days, being a graduate of Harvard, he was addicted to Emersonian poetry and philosophy, and regarded Christianity only as one of the religions, and believed in Buddh or Brahm as much as he did in the Trinity. He went to no church at all. After a few years he moved to this city, and here engaged in various literary and business pursuits. He was publishing here a not very brilliant magazine, upon the model of the old Knickerbocker Magazine, 1856, and plunged into Spiritism when that issue first came along this way. He filled many pages of the magazine with the silly marvels of that 'beautiful faith.' But the magazine died of it, and he himself declined from the power of it. The next we knew of him, to our surprise, we learned he was engaged in study preparatory to taking orders under Bishop Kip. He preached in this city a year or two subsequent to 1860, and then returned to New York. There it seems that he has in these days become an advanced Ritualist, with the prospect of becoming a Romanist. It would not be very strange if back of Romanism he should find something more congenial still, and end life where he began it—in the Pantheon—where Buddh and Brahm are not without honor.'"

This sketch suggests several reflections, as:

1. It reveals to the world the material of which the doctors of divinity, who fill the high places in some churches, are made. Here is a man who has been in "the church" little more than seven years, who had all his previous life been wandering in the barren wastes of skepticism and folly, and of whose conversion to Christ we have neither any account or evidence—a grave D. D., giving forth oracular utterances from a New York pulpit. But the real nature of the animal that is wearing that lion skin is easily detected.

2. It is but a just retribution upon the church that will hurry such crude and unregenerate characters into the office of the ministry, upon a simple belief of the succession dogma, that they should turn upon and rend their mother. What else could be expected?

3. We should like to ask evangelical churchmen, who yet attach importance to the "church dogma," which they think best: To be in the supposed succession and teach such abominations as Dr. Ewer is setting forth, or to be out of that supposed line, and preach the gospel of the blessed Saviour?

4. Let the friends of truth and Christ never be alarmed or surprised when men of any profession give out their skeptical or Romish utterances. Let them be assured that there is always a reason in the moral condition and history of such men for the opinions they advance. They may be certain that such are strangers to the grace of God.

"Be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled." Peter.

Does the Priest Pardon?—Catholics frequently complain that they are misrepresented when we say the priest claims to have power to pardon sins. The following description of the fearful condition of the Protestant is taken from the recent Catholic publication entitled, "Plain Talk about the Protestantism of to-day," which bears the endorsement of Archbishop Spalding. On page 232 we read the following:

"As for him who becomes a Protestant, no hope of control when passion rages, yet great comfort at the moment he repents; no guide when doubt tosses him about, yet a more bountiful pardon after his fall, a more merciful confessor to console him and to pardon him in the name and with the authority of God. Poor apostate! For him no more the beautiful ceremonies of the church. The images of our Lord, of the Blessed Virgin, and of the saints become emblems of idolatry! No more crucifix, no more the sign of the cross, it is idolatry; no more the prayers; no more respect or love for the mother of God—idolatry! no more trusting the intercession of saints, patrons in heaven, advocates, protectors near God—idolatry! And when the hour of death is drawing near, when the unfortunate man is left to himself, about standing before God covered with the sins of his whole life, no priest to administer the last sacraments of the church, no priest to tell him, with all the power of divine authority, "Poor sinner, take courage; thou canst die in peace, because Jesus has given me the power to forgive thee thy sins, and I pardon thee in his name."

Formation of Character.—Have you ever noticed an icicle as it is formed? You noticed how it froze one drop at a time, until it was a foot long or more. If the water was clean, the icicle sparkled brightly in the sun; but if the water was slightly muddy, the icicle looked foul, and its beauty was spoiled. Just so our characters are forming. One little thought or feeling at a time adds its influence. If each thought be pure and right, the soul will be lovely, and will sparkle with happiness; but if impure and wrong, there will be a final deformity and wretchedness.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

MOVEMENTS OF THE ENGLISH RITUALISTS.

The adjourned meeting of clergy and laity belonging to the Ritualist party to consider the course to be pursued in consequence of the recent judgment in the case of Martin vs. Mackonochie, was held on the afternoon of January 12, at Freemason's Hall. Admission was by letters of invitation only. Archdeacon Denison presided, and an elaborate report prepared by the committee appointed at the previous meeting was read, which concluded with certain resolutions which appeared by the committee to be required. On these a long discussion took place, the Hon. C. Lindle Wood, the Rev. T. W. Perry and others counselling submission to the law of the land, under protest, while the Rev. W. J. Bennett, of Frome, the Rev. C. J. Le Geyt, of St. Matthias, Stoke Newington and others, opposed this course, and supported an amendment, which was worded as follows: "Therefore this meeting is unable to reconcile submission to the present decree with its paramount and primary duty of obedience to the church, and can only wait in patience the providence of God." Ultimately a resolution was passed, declaring that the meeting did not consider the existing Court of Final Appeal "qualified to declare the law of the Church of England upon either doctrine or ceremonial;" but, with respect to the particular judgment of the court in Mr. Mackonochie's case, the meeting, "feeling the great difficulty of the present case, thinks there are many reasons why those who have used the ceremonials or practices now condemned by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council may be anxious to wait rather than to give immediate effect to the decision so pronounced, and considers it is a matter best left to the individual judgment and circumstances of each priest who has been accustomed to use the ceremonials in question."

A resolution was also adopted declaring the condemnation of Mr. Mackonochie in the costs of the case to be "a course of unusual and exceptional severity," and the meeting broke up after having sat nearly six hours.

There was another meeting of Ritualists on the morning of January 13, at Freemason's Hall, composed almost exclusively of those who are in favor of continuing the altar lights, and other practices, condemned by the Judicial Committee of Privy Council. A long and very earnest conversation took place, in which Mr. Bennett, Mr Orby Shipley, Mr. Edwards, Mr. Lowder and other gentlemen joined. It was generally admitted that it would be very unwise to bind the clergy as a body to any particular course, inasmuch as circumstances differed in various parishes, and some might feel it to be their duty explicitly to obey the law of the church on those points where it differed from the law of the land as recently expounded by the High Court of Appeals. Several clergymen have determined to continue the lights, at all events until they receive a monition from a spiritual authority. The question of the prosecution of Mr. Bennett on doctrinal matters was alluded to, and it was generally admitted that, in the event of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decreeing that the real presence in the Eucharist is antagonistic to the doctrines of the Church of England, the High Church party must, as a body, secede.

THE ART OF POCKET-PICKING.

The late Mr. De Quincy wrote a curious and elaborate paper on "Murder considered as one of the Fine Arts." Had he lived a half a century later, he might have extended his inquiries so as to include pocket-picking in that category; for an art it has certainly become.

Your artistic pickpocket is a gentlemanly-looking fellow, wears neat boots and gloves, always has a new looking hat, and is altogether the last man you would suspect of any sinister designs on your pocket. He lives in first class hotels and boarding houses, often frequenting the same house for years, totally unsuspected, and remarkable only for his quiet and gentlemanly demeanor. He carefully chooses four companions, equally respectable in appearance, to form what is called a mob, each one producing a certain sum to make a hank, to be used in case one of them falls (taken by the police,) in order to provide bail or to pay his counsel fees. They then frequent railway stations, public meetings, or any place where they can find a crowd. A victim is quietly selected as a probable find. Two of the mob then place themselves in front of him, and two remain behind occupying, as it were, the angles of a square, of which the victim is the center. These are called the front and back stalls. The unfortunate victim is then fanned; that is, his pockets are softly padded to find out the one in which he keeps his wallet; the sign is passed to the operator, who is termed the wire, who immediately proceeds to work. He does not place his hand in the pocket; that is a fatal error; but with the two first fingers he gently draws up the lining of the pocket to the opening, and with it the wallet, and the trick is done. This system is called reefing. The wallet is immediately passed to one of the back stalls, who quietly, though quickly, levants. The most dangerous place for money is undoubtedly the pocket of the pants. Again, one of the front stalls passes his arm before your face to touch the other front stall on the shoulder, only to say "How are you?" but the wire from behind has your diamond pin in his possession. If possible, they will return the empty wallet to the pocket to avoid detection in its possession, or the dangerous necessity of throwing it away. For instance: two gentlemen sitting at one end of a car get into an angry altercation, high words ensue, the attention of the other passengers is attracted to their dispute, and the young lady who sat next to that nice looking man at the other end of the car finds, on arriving at Stewart's, that her purse is empty. The angry gentleman and the nice looking man are simply confederates. This is termed weeding. A correspondent of a newspaper lately lost $800 in this way while riding in a Fourth avenue car. Pickpockets are necessarily very migratory in their habits, finding a long residence in one place inconvenient. This renders it almost impossible to make any estimate of their probable numbers in this city.—New York Tribune.

Hugh Miller's Appearance.—We have just spoken of Hugh Miller's genius, nor are we disposed to recall the expression; but certainly he was less like a man of genius than any of that class we ever encountered. His face was "dry as the remainder biscuit after a voyage," his eye and brow bespoke a dull determination, his lip a stern but somewhat sluggish pugnacity; the expression of the whole was rather sour than strong; and had you not known it was the author of "My Schools and Schoolmasters," you would have deemed the man himself a middle-aged schoolmaster, a Scottish country dominie, who had spent too many of his days in lashing learning into boobies, and industry into truants, and who had got a little cantankerous in the process. Rugged power there was on the brow, which seemed, however, rather drooping under a burden than radiant with hope and conscious mastery. And when he opened his lips to lecture the impression was not mended. As Hall said of Foster, "His words, fire within, so soon as they reach his lips, get frozen, and drop down at his feet." His manner was stiff, his manipulations on the blackboard he used for his diagrams were of the last degree awkward and helpless, and his utterance destitute of emphasis and energy. Miller's real power was a strong common sense, sustained by an iron determination, by incredible industry, and by an amount of fancy which enabled him to color his style with faint but chaste and beautiful hues. His style, which has been often and justly praised, was the result of painstaking, persevering, and certainly most praiseworthy labor. He used words as he had in his early days used stones, with a careful selection, and with a severe architectural purpose. He was strong by nature, and strong writing to him was easy; but he aimed besides at simplicity, and even at grace, and with very considerable success. To an ease like Addison's, or a purity like Goldsmith's, he never attained; the effort to be easy was too obvious to permit of this; but few modern writers, particularly considering his early disadvantages, write such a clear and classical, as well as firm and massive style.—Gilfillan.

Progress of Protestantism in Italy.—Gavazzi has been reported dead. The Christian Work in Italy says, however, that "as nearly as can be ascertained, he has preached and lectured in Venice seventy-nine times, in Leghorn forty-six, in Milan twenty-two, in Gustalla twenty-six, in Florence fifteen, in Lucca twelve, as well as repeatedly in Pistoia, Como, Verona, Paduca, Mira, etc. And his discourses are not short essays, quietly read in twenty or thirty minutes to a regular congregation, but orations in which the speaker's whole nature—body, and soul, and spirit—is earnestly engaged, frequently occupying two hours, and delivered in the midst of excessive heat to immense and excited crowds. There is probably no preacher in Italy who, in the same period, has been listened to by half the same number of persons."

The full assurance of faith, always attended with the full assurance of hope, never fails to be productive of perfect love, even the love that casteth out fear.—Benson.

FARM AND GARDEN.

The Treasures Within the Waters.

We were pleasantly impressed, a few days ago, with an article in our leading journals, entitled "A Session of the Fish Commissioners at the Fifth Avenue Hotel." At last, thought we, are the finny tribes receiving civilized treatment in the headquarters of refinement and civilization, and men are beginning to appreciate the mine of wealth that lies in store for them within the waters on the condition of sensible and judicious treatment.

Hitherto we have been worse than savages toward the fish—they, though paying no attention to their propagation and increase, and simply catching them in large quantities as a means of support, have at least not destroyed them in countless millions by reckless and cruel means of entrapping them, or by damming up rivers and obstructing the passage to their spawning grounds, or by pouring into the streams volumes of poisonous matter from manufactories, that would either slay them in countless numbers, or drive them from their accustomed haunts.

We are rejoiced to know that the government is now paying attention to this important subject, and that we are soon likely to have laws all over our territory that will protect our fruitful waters from being slaughterpens of the rich gifts that God has placed within them. We predict the day when the names of Norris, Green, Ainsworth and others will be enrolled among the lists of our national benefactors for the inestimable services that they are now rendering the nation in the cause of fish culture.

It is quite incomprehensible that whole nations have struggled for centuries in endeavoring to wrest from the soil, often barren and unproductive, a meager subsistence, without ever thinking of a rational treatment of the waters, which would yield, with little trouble and no great expense, a sufficient and wholesome nourishment for the millions. As a question of social economy there is not one at the present day more likely to be influential in appeasing the hungry and placing cheap food within the reach of the poor and destitute.

And, indeed, some of those nations that we imagine to be in a state of semi-civilization in comparison with ourselves, are prepared to teach us valuable lessons in this regard. The Chinese, who invented gunpowder and the art of printing before the so-called civilized nations, have for ages understood and practiced the artificial culture of fish; and with the immense population of their country, it has been, perhaps, a necessity with them to call upon the waters as well as the land to feed them. Fish and rice are the staple food of millions of Celestials, and are afforded at so moderate a rate that half the care and burden of life are removed.

The trade of fish eggs has for centuries been one of the most important industries of that country. Numerous boats cover all the rivers at certain seasons, not so much engaged in taking fish as in gathering spawn for transport to the interior, where they find a ready market in those who would stock their own pools, and raise fish, as they do fowls, on their own premises. And the paragraphs that we now find floating in our journals, of the safe transport of a basket of fish eggs for several hundred miles, is the most ordinary and natural occurrence in the world in China. May it soon be so with us! The Chinese arrange wicker-work structures in their streams, on which the fish like to deposit their spawn, which is then easily obtained. This they generally carry to the interior in large vessels, and place in pure, soft water, where the eggs, by proper care, easily hatch, and after a few weeks of attention the young fish are perfectly able to provide for themselves. The spawn of some fish that requires more delicate treatment, is taken from the lakes and rivers after natural impregnation, and cunningly placed into the cavity of fowls' eggs, the contents having been previously blown out through little openings. These eggs, with their thousands of embryo fish, are then carefully closed and placed under a sitting hen, whose natural warmth soon causes such development of the spawn within them as to burst the shell, when the fish eggs are emptied into the water warmed by the sun, and the process of hatching is soon safely completed.

In short, the Chinese have given as much thought, attention and experiment to fish culture, as have we to some of our most boasted inventions, and they have certainly found their account in it, and given us a lesson, in social economy that we might well profit from. It is not at all improbable that the hosts of Chinamen that our Pacific steamers and Pacific roads will distribute among the Rocky mountains and the plains at their base, may be influential in extending this branch of industry throughout that region, for their own benefit primarily, and ours finally.

As our population increases, the most significant questions of the day are those which have regard to the means of avoiding social destitution, and providing cheap food for the poor and needy; and while we hail with satisfaction any movements on the part of government that will abolish thoughtless and sinful abuses, we look for private enterprise to stimulate production, confident that judicious exertions will be generously rewarded. Our country is becoming so populous, and our sportsmen have been taught from boyhood to be so reckless and wanton in the destruction of all the gifts of the forests and the waters, that without preventive laws regarding all the natural sources of supply, we shall soon find ourselves short of many of the greatest luxuries of the table and necessaries of life. The days of boundless plains, interminable forests, and waters of unknown extent, are fast drawing to a close, and the sooner we realize the fact and begin to husband our resources the better. We have been riotous children long enough; it behooves us now to become thoughtful men, and to cease to deal wantonly with the rich inheritance that God has given us.

No nation on earth is so blessed with immense lakes, with teeming rivers and countless water-courses; and while proudly gazing on these as features of natural beauty, or pointing to them as facile means of transport and avenues to commercial prosperity, we have forgotten that they are gardens in which God cultivates rich blessings for our welfare, and is ever laying up store of sustenance really for our support.

The Psalms.—There is no one book which has played so large a part as the Psalter in the history of so many human souls. By the Psalms Augustine was consoled at his conversion and on his deathbed. By the Psalms Chrysostom, Athanasius, Savonarola, were cheered in persecution. With the words of a Psalm Polycarp, Columba, Hildebrande, Bernard, Francis of Assisi, Huss, Jerome of Prague, Columbus, Melancthon, Jewell, breathed their last. So dear to Wallace in his wanderings was the Psalter, that during his execution he had it hung before him, and his eyes remained fixed upon it as the one consolation of his dying hours. The unhappy Darnley was soothed in the toils of his enemies by the 55th Psalm. The 68th Psalm cheered Cromwell's soldiers to victory at Dunbar.—Locke in his last days bade his friend read the Psalms aloud, and it was while in rapt attention to their words that the stroke of death fell upon him. Lord Burleigh selected them out of the whole Bible as his special delight. They were the framework of the devotions and of the warieries of Luther; they were the last words that fell on the ear of his imperial enemy, Charles the Fifth.—Dean Stanley.

Do it Over Again.—A theological student once called on Dr. Archibald Alexander, in great distress of mind, doubting whether he had been converted. The doctor encouraged him to open his mind. After he was through, the aged disciple, laying his hand on his head, said:

"My young brother, you know what repentance is—what faith in Christ is. You think you once repented, and once believed. Now, don't find your doubts; go it over again—repent now; believe in Christ now; that's the way to have a consciousness of acceptance with God. I have to do both very often. Go to your room and give yourself to Christ this moment, and let your doubts go. If you have not been his disciple, be one now. Don't fight the devil on his own ground. Choose the ground of Christ's righteousness and atonement, and there fight him."

We must beware we presume not to sit as God in judgment upon others, and rashly as our conceit and fancy doth lead us, so to determine of this man he is sincere, or of that man he is a hypocrite, except by their falling away, (separating themselves from the church,) they make it manifest and known what they are. For who art thou that takest upon thee to judge another before the time?—Hooker's Sermon on St. Jude, verse 19.

Some employments may be better than others; but there is no employment so bad as the having none at all. The mind will contract a rust and an unfitness for everything, and a man must either fill up his time with good or at least innocent business, or it will run to the worst sort of waste—to sin and vice.

"GODLY WOMEN."

In a private letter Bishop McTyeire speaks in memory of two noble spirits, of whose death our readers have had notice: "To-day we read, in the family circle, with sad yet pleasing interest, of the death of Sister Bodley. She was a great help and comfort to me during my pastorate of St. Mary's church, and subsequently of Felicity street. Brother Parker has rendered a most fit tribute. And in the same paper is recorded the death of another 'elect lady,' Mrs. Tarkington. She was the first subscriber we got for the ADVOCATE west of the Mississippi. Well do I remember her name, as sent in by Brother Philo Goodwyn. The days of godly women, 'who helped in the Gospel,' are not yet passed."

REV. JOHN M. HOFER.

This clergyman of the New Jerusalem church, formerly of the Louisiana Conference, died in this city on the 14th instant. He leaves behind him an industrious and interesting family, who have our sincere sympathy in their bereavement. For two years previous to his death he had been preaching to a Lutheran congregation in Carrollton.

JUBILEE.

The jubilee anniversary of the Felicity street Sabbath school of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will be celebrated in the Felicity street church, corner of Chestnut street, on Monday next, February 22d, exercises commencing at seven o'clock P. M.

THE MINUTES OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE have been forwarded to all the subscribers—about double the number promised them. The entire matter was published without abridgment. At the suggestion of Brother Montgomery we have provided sufficient to supply others who may want them, at twenty cents each, prepaid by mail.

DIGEST.

The minutes of the Montgomery, Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, for 1868, have tables of statistics, financial and other, by which a comparative estimate of their year's work can be presented. The minutes of the Mobile Conference scrupulously avoids figures in the direction of missions and ministerial support. We are therefore unable to place before our readers what that part of the field has been doing and suffering in its effort to furnish the Gospel to the people at home or the heathen abroad. In the tables below the average contribution per member in each district of the three Conferences is given. In these only the white membership is taken as a basis of calculation, and only the amounts given—first, for foreign missions; second, for support of the Gospel, including bishops' support and widows' and orphans' collection. We shall be obliged to the secretary of the Mobile Conference if he will make the same tabular exhibit of its several districts, that the whole truth may be before us. We set forth this general average that the presiding elders may at leisure analyze farther, and ascertain what each station and each circuit is actually doing for the cause of Christ.

The whole amount sent forward for foreign missions by the Montgomery Conference is $410 85; by the Mississippi, $713 07; by the Louisiana, $924 90.

The widows' and orphans' and superannuates' claims were paid as follows: The Montgomery Conference paid forty-four per cent., the Mobile fifty-two per cent., the Mississippi thirty per cent., the Louisiana sixty per cent.

These tables are subject to various allowances; for instance, the Montgomery Conference raised a much larger amount for home than for foreign missions; while the Mississippi raised twice as much for the foreign as for the home. The Louisiana raised about an equal sum for each, the foreign being slightly in excess. Some stations have been building parsonages and some have built churches. Some single places of a district have given a very large part of the whole amount contributed by it for the support of the Gospel, and the average of what they have given has been sadly reduced by the average of what the rest have not given. But when you add it all up and look at it in the best lights, it is amazing on what a small substance our graces feed. It is surprising that upon these figures we can keep any religion at all. Think of one mill to the spread of the Gospel; of prayer—"Thy kingdom come"—uttered daily, earnestly, upon the basis of one mill in a whole year! Can such a prayer make its way to heaven? Or even less than this; not one mill, no never a cent to the sublime message of life upon which the risen Saviour sent his disciples.

By the side of such parsimony let us place the offerings of the Hebrews, when as yet the glory of the Spirit rested dimly in cloud upon the mercy seat. With how much force should the command of the Holy One ring in our ears: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, * * and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord!" It is indeed a wonder that the Holy Spirit has not left us to the leanness of our own hearts. We may not be surprised that the work of repentance and conversion does not abound among us; but rather, if there be any relation existing yet between our offerings and the outpouring of the Lord's Spirit, that he has been vouchsafed to us in any appreciable measure. The unfaithfulness of a Christian, as set forth by these cents and mills, is to our mind sufficiently alarming. If property has any use or meaning in connection with Christianity, we cannot find in these figures any escape from the burning sentences of the Saviour against the man who wasted his Lord's goods. There is possibly some apology to be found in the poverty of the past year—the severest the South has ever known. But poor, indeed, must that region be which is reduced in its gifts to a less sum than is anywhere mentioned either in the Old or New Testaments.

The importance of keeping the attention fixed upon what each one is doing is clearly demonstrated by this actual result, and the fact that any financial "plan," to be worthy of notice, must look after the individual member. If each person could be seen, and his offering received every week, the very poorest in the church would contribute ten times as much as its membership now averages.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

On last Wednesday night, by appointment, and adjournment from a previous meeting, a goodly number of our city Methodists met in the basement of Carondelet street church, and formed the "New Orleans Church Extension Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church South." A constitution was reported by a committee, and was adopted with various modifications. The officers for the year were then elected: H. F. Given, president; J. L. Dunnica, vice president; W. H. Dameron, treasurer; J. C. Miller, secretary; and the following directors: J. G. Parham, B. H. Moss, R Jones, W. H. Foster, L. Fash, R. L. Robertson, J. J. Lyon, E Booth, R. Wamsley, E. T. Merrick, J. P. Harrison and J. C. Keener. The terms of membership were an annual subscription of $20, life membership $200, life director $1,000. It was set forth in the constitution that the principal object of the association is to purchase lots eligible for churches and parsonages, and to build churches and parsonages on them, in portions of the city where there are no Methodist churches. It is expected the New Orleans District Sabbath School Union, and the Home Missionary Society of our church, will be important, indeed necessary, co-operative aids to this enterprise. It will take all these organizations to start and establish churches in complete working order.

The attendance indicated the deep interest which all of our churches feel in this step. The discussions were business-like and earnest, and the action harmonious and deliberate. Dr. Kelly, president of the Carona College, Lebanon, Tennessee, was present and; at the request of the president, W. H. Foster, Esq., addressed the meeting in a very pertinent, sensible speech, upon the importance of Methodism keeping abreast with all other churches in the large cities. This he thought we had not done in the item of buildings, though in point of moral and spiritual force we were before them. He impressed upon the Sabbath School Union, which was present, the importance of thoroughly indoctrinating our children in the peculiarities of our church. He made a good point upon the evil of multiplying indifferent structures of small value instead of substantial houses of permanent and imposing character. Whatever is done should be projected upon a much more solid and extensive style of church architecture than that of former days. The size and solidity of the house will affect the prosperity of a society for a whole generation.

We have given but a few of the doctor's points.

The centers of life, of commerce of influence were of course the places toward which the Master first directed his attention. His great ministry revolved around and received its great consummation in a city of more than a million inhabitants. And it was also at Jerusalem that the Holy Spirit first gave those breathings of power which were as the rushings of a mighty wind charged with flame. Ever since that time the church has planted her feet upon these citadels of earth, the cities, the capitals of empire and population, as the keys of the position. The church of the Lord of Hosts belongs to the habitable parts of the earth, not to the wilderness. It is the principle of abiding harmony and government among men. The Spirit of love, of life, and of truth is the universal and only power of law which can bind in one the thousands of earth and the myriads of heaven. And this he works to accomplish through the agencies of those who feel that they have been bought by the blood of the Lamb. Heaven itself is a great city, full of pure spirits.

A large city being the normal condition for the highest development of spiritual life, we may expect the especial blessings of God upon this society, and hope to see a rich harvest from its propitious beginning.

The St. John M. E. Church South, of Galveston.

We are glad to publish the fact of the laying the corner stone of this building, and to congratulate the pastor and church upon this grand success of Methodism. A friend tells us that $20,000 was paid to the contractor, in advance, by the subscribers to the enterprise. They have a wholesale way of doing things in Texas in all money matters. The largest amount ever collected at a missionary anniversary meeting, in this country, was at the Texas Conference, in 1863. Bishop Marvin and Doctor Boring were the speakers. Texans are wonderfully individual and self-reliant; they fight alone, live alone, and trade every man for himself. When they do come together and harmonize, the force of these self-asserting particles, by action and reaction, is prodigious. All that Texians need, in church or State, is union—to be at peace among themselves—to be a great power. It is a grand machinery and requires a good deal of oiling. We sympathize with all preachers and trustees who are engaged in church extension schemes. Even the poorest frame building house that ever was implies at least one noble public spirited soul; and church-building has shortened many a life. To ask for money to build a free-seated house requires more grace than is demanded to give it. Covetousness never bristles so fiercely as when called upon to give for a house of worship. The amount is evidently expected to be something worth while—no mere bone or crumb; then it is a public affair—every one that does not give can be known; and then there is no raising a doubt by the usual arts, and so all escape is cut off. The process is severe all round, and will be so long as men are tempted to be unfaithful stewards.

SPAIN AND SLAVERY.

The New York Tribune announces that the government will submit to the Cortes, about to meet in a few days, a bill for the total abolition of slavery in the colonial possessions of Spain. Such a movement would greatly enhance the value of the sugar lands of Louisiana. Whatever may be the effect upon the negro, the advantage of the abolition of slavery is a benefit to the white man.

CHURCH ORGANS, PIANOS, ETC.—We recommend Mr. Philip Werlein, No. 80 Baronne street, to churches and individuals who wish to purchase instruments. "The times" have been improved somewhat of late, and possibly many are beginning to think of affording music to their daughters and sons. Mr. W. has an excellent assortment of all manner of "stringed instruments" of the latest and best make. See his full advertisement in this number.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from the Rev. R. J. Harp, Southern Publishing House, No. 112 Camp street:

THE ORPHAN'S TRIUMPHS. The story of Lily and Harry Grant. By H. K. P. New York: M. W. Dodd, No. 506 Broadway. 1868. 16mo, 295 pp.

This is a well-woven story, setting forth the doctrine of the new birth and the introduction of the young to that precious gift of the Holy Spirit. It is a good book for a Sabbath-school library.

The next work from the same house:

GENEVA'S SHIELD. A story of the Swiss Reformation. By Rev. W. M. Blackburn, author of "Ulrich Zwingle," "William Farel," etc New York: M. W. Dodd, No. 506 Broadway. 1868. 16mo, pp. 325.

We have read this historical story with much interest. It portrays the rise of the Reformation in Geneva and Switzerland. It is a history of those stirring events which have given color to the fortunes of Europe and America, until this day. The standard works have been used in its preparation. It is for the instruction of young people.

Southern Colored Conference.

Bishop Pierce has written a letter to the Southern Christian Advocate, in which he describes the recent session of the Georgia Colored Conference. Of its composition he says:

Among the preachers present were many whom I knew longe years ago. I had been with them as a friend and counselor and fellow-laborer, and their kind allusions to former services and associations were pleasant to me, and assured me of an influence which might still be used for their benefit. One old man, who had been besieged by white and black to quit us and go over to the Methodist Episcopal, or the African Methodist Episcopal, Church, said to me in the old time style, "Mas' George, they needn't talk to me—you put your hands on my head, and I ain't going to take them off to please any of 'em. I am satisfied to stay right where I am."

In the Conference there was a good deal of talent. Several speeches were made that would have done credit to any assembly—some passages of genuine eloquence—conception, imagery, language, all fine. Some telling strokes on the times—on proselyters and certain philanthropists. A correspondent of the Methodist Advocate reports a brief address of mine to the Conference, and says I was followed by two or three of the brethren, who used to be my "goods and chattels." He substitutes his language for mine, but the sentiments are fairly represented. I should have put a higher estimation on his truth and candor if he had reported the speeches of my former "chattels." Those speeches were creditable to the intellects of the brethren—more so to their hearts. They magnified the Southern Church—her zeal and labors for the black man's salvation and their confidence in her present sympathy and care. They called her "mother," and pledged to her filial affection and devotion.—Said one of the reverend speakers—referring to the fact that the Methodist Church, North and South, was once one body, and then to the nonsensical cant of those who beg them to come back to the old mother church—"If they divide my mother—ain't one half as old as the other?" Ah, my brethren, if there were no greenbacks at the bottom, some people wouldn't be as friendly as they are." They told how Southern preachers had labored for them and with them, how they loved us and trusted us, how they meant to live and die in fraternal fellowship with us; but all this was overlooked for the sake of a fling at me and my former "goods and chattels." Well, I suppose anything is fair that helps to feed a vicious sentiment at the North.

* * * * *

During the Conference every wheel in the machinery of Methodism which could be made to turn was brought into play. So, in making the appointments, I had my "cabinet," as the preachers call it. The presiding elders and a few of the old brethren were invited to meet me in council. It was surprising how naturally they fell into line—caught the very verbiage of the place and business. "Bishop, I must have Brother A. for such a place." "Hold on, there," says another, "that brother must go to Z.; I can't do without him—how about Brother D.?" "Well, I thought I would put him back at C. He has done well and the people want him." And thus through the list they went, showing that certain phrases are natural as well as official. At one point we balked for lack of a man. Said I, "Brother Sandy, can't you recommend me a man for T——?" "No, sir; I am done recommending preachers." "Why?" "I come across one not long ago—I thought he was nice and smart, and encouraged him; told the people what a promising man he was, and he got up to preach and told the congregation that the Lord ordered Jonah to go to Connecticut, and he went off to Arkansas or Texas. He didn't know which.—Since then I quit recommending preachers."

* * * * *

On the whole, we had a good time, a religious time. God was with us. I enjoyed myself in public and private, in praying and preaching, in hearing and doing. I wish you had been there. The Conference is to meet in your city the next time. The preachers expressed the wish that I should be with them again, saying: "You know us, and we know you, and we want you to help us get fairly afloat." If other duties will allow, God willing, I shall be present and expect to see a grand development as to number and results. In the meantime let us lend a helping hand, by proper co-operation and encouragement.

OUR NEW CHURCH EDIFICE.

On the 2d instant the corner stone of the St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church South was laid with the impressive ceremonial of the Masonic fraternity. The crowd of citizens that witnessed the scene gave evidence of the deep interest felt by all in such enterprises.

The congregation that has worshiped at Ryland Chapel for so many years needs room for development, and the old house has long been too small for the successful upbuilding of Methodism in this community. The pastor, Rev. L. M. Lewis, has labored with unabated zeal to this most desirable consummation, and is now about to be rewarded by one of the most imposing and commodious edifices to be found in our connection. His congregation are in earnest, and intend, ere the twelve month has passed, to be domiciled in a house that will do great credit to their liberality. Our enterprising citizens, Messrs. Journeay & Colbath, have the contract, and will push the work rapidly to completion. This church is located on the southwest corner of Broadway and Bath avenue. It is to be one hundred and ten feet long, by sixty-five feet wide, with a basement divided into Sunday school room, class rooms and pastor's office, above which is the audience room. The tower rises from one corner of the front, terminating in a steeple, the entire height of which will be one hundred and eight feet. The structure is to be of the gothic order of architecture, and when completed will cost forty thousand dollars. Over three hundred Sunday school children, with their officers, was not the least noteworthy object of the occasion. Rev. Dr. Bunting, of the Presbyterian church of this city, delivered an able and appropriate address, and as we listened to his words, and drank in the symphony of the music made by the children as they executed some of their inimitable songs under the leadership of the indomitable Edgerly, we were swept back in imagination through the centuries to the time of laying the corner stone of the second temple, which was to echo the tread and resound with the voice of him who spake as never man spake. Seldom, if ever, have we witnessed a more imposing scene. The Grand Master, P. W. Grey, Esq., officiated in his place. Our beloved presiding elder, Dr. Alexander, was with us on the occasion, and offered prayer to the great Head of the Church for his blessing on our enterprise. At the conclusion the vast assembly joined with the children in singing the doxology of "Praise God from whom," etc.,

and as the swelling notes rolled out upon the air, it seemed to presage that last grand anthem of a redeemed world, when all hearts and voices shall join in ascribing to the Redeemer the praise of our salvation. Texas Christian Advocate.

Denominational and State Systems of Education.

The article on the "Catholic View of Public Education in the United States," which originally appeared in the American Educational Monthly for January, and on which we recently made some comment, has since been published in the Catholic World. Information which we have no reason to doubt, attributes its authorship to the editor of the latter periodical, and we may accept it as an accredited exposition of Roman Catholic opinion. Its positions are in the main these: 1. That all education should rest on the basis of doctrine, the term "doctrine" being taken to mean theology, as distinguished from ethics. 2. That the denominational system of education can alone meet the requirements of this fundamental principle. 3. That Roman Catholic children cannot be safely educated in association with those of a different religious faith. 4. That, therefore, it is but reasonable for Roman Catholics to ask from the State special appropriations for the support of their own schools.

This plea for education by the State of Roman Catholic children in denominational schools is temperately written. It is plausible, and yet both erroneous and dangerous. It does not, however, tell the story of Roman Catholic practice where Romanism has full sway in the State, of the denial of liberty of teaching, of the placing of the entire system of public instruction under the control of the priesthood—the evil from which Austria has so recently set itself free—and of the condemnation of all education which is not directed by "the church" in the Encyclical of the pope. To rule supremely over the human mind is the fundamental principle of the Roman Catholic faith; and this may safely be assumed to be meant, even though less be expressed.

The State has, however, in America very wisely solved the problem of public education, by refusing to recognize the differences of theologic opinion as they prevail among the churches. It has placed the Bible upon the teacher's desk, to be daily read. It has sanctioned the use of the universal prayer taught by Christ. The fatherhood of God, the mission of Jesus to the world, the responsibility of every human creature to the all-seeing One, the duty of love to our neighbor, the necessity of purity of thought, as well as of outward propriety of conduct, are lessons which cannot fail to be conveyed by a daily reading of the inspired volume. And we submit that these will be more effective as lessons for youth than the doctrine of the sacraments, predestination and free will, or the divine authority of the successors of St. Peter, or the invocation of saints, or purgatory. "To read the Bible," says this Roman Catholic writer, "without note or comment, to young children, is to abandon them to dangerous speculation, or to leave them dry and barren of all Christian knowledge." We hold that to read the Bible thus is to convey to the young child the idea of Christ, to impress upon his mind that image of purity and all-loving tenderness which is in itself an invaluable possession.

In England the denominational system of popular education has proved a failure. With all the aid of government subsidies, the masses of the people are still in a condition of pitiful ignorance. We cited recently the total of Wesleyan efforts in this field, and the confession of their leading journal, that this active body of Christians, even with government aid, has scarcely two dozen schools in London, two only in such a city as Birmingham, and in some of the counties none at all. Even so good a churchman as Mr. Gladstone has recently said in a public address: "It has become increasingly desirable that the State should stand clearly apart from the responsibility for the teaching of particular and conflicting creeds in schools aided by grants from any national fund." Thus the system which has been in operation in England since 1840 is confessed by high authority to be unsatisfactory. Under it clerical inspectors are appointed for the Church of England schools, lay inspectors for other Protestant schools, and Roman Catholic inspectors for Roman Catholic schools. The results are that the Church of England inspectors give most of their attention "to enforcing the systematic teaching of the liturgy and catechism of the Church of England," and that the schools are carried on less with reference to the inculcation of general knowledge than to denominational advancement. A leading English paper says candidly that in these schools "reading, writing and arithmetic are not ends, but means to the higher end of advancing the interests of the denomination."

We say, therefore, with Mr. Gladstone, that it is not the business of the State to assume the responsibility of teaching theological dogma. We go further, and say: it is not the business of the State to assume the support of schools, the chief aim of whose existence is the inculcation of theological dogma. That the interest of the Roman Catholics in this question is denominational chiefly, is evident from the whole tenor of this discussion. The editor of the Catholic World says: "It would be simply impossible to adopt any religious teaching, whatever, in mixed schools, without at once interfering with the Catholic conscience." And he claims that Roman Catholic and Protestant children cannot study the same history, cannot read the same travels, poetry or romance. Why not extend the exclusion, and assert that these two classes of children cannot study the same arithmetics, and that we must have a Catholic and also a Protestant Euclid?

No! The State has done well to disregard doctrinal differences in educating its children. Let the teaching of dogma be given to the churches. The mingling of the children of the State in its great schools dissolves prejudices, takes off the edge of bigotry, and daily impresses on the youthful mind the lesson of charity. Must we believe that for these very reasons these schools are dreaded by the Roman Catholic hierarchy!—New York Methodist.

Letter from British Honduras.

MR EDITOR: Our former fellow-townsman, Mr. J. M. Putnam, chairman of the British Honduras "Putnam Immigration Association"—now in our city—has furnished us with a copy of a letter from one of the settlers, Mr. T. A. Watrous, which he has just received.

FOREST HOME, January 10, 1869.

In respect to our settlement, we are all getting on smoothly. All, I believe, have finished planting for the second crop. The new corn looks better than the first crop we made. It is now from six inches to six feet high; it looks fresh and flourishing, and some of it will soon be silking and tasseling.—Very little rice is planted as yet. Our plantains, yams, cacao, potatoes, etc., are as promising as they possibly could be. We are all eating yams, sweet potatoes and cacao, and I assure you they are fine.

I had forgotten the poultry question. We have abundance of chickens. This is the best country for chickens I have seen; they are easily raised and are in abundance.

We are enjoying delightful spring weather, with plenty of rain.

I am in hopes we will be able, by next week, to finish our church and school house.

The Simpson family, who came out last November, are getting on finely. They have about ten acres of corn planted. It looks well; the most of it is knee high.

We are well pleased with the country, and are in fine spirits and good health. T. A. WATROUS.

WHERE ARE THE FORTY-NINE?

MR. EDITOR: Please acknowledge, through the ADVOCATE, the receipt of $10 from Brother C. Barnett to aid in the education of the young preachers at Summerfield. If forty-nine more good brethren would respond, by each giving $10 to make up the $500, it would be most acceptable at this time. Dr. Hamilton, of Mobile, is aiding one. Prof. Massey is giving nearly all the tuition free, which amounts to near $400. I am sure, from what I know of the liberality of the church, that if they only knew the facts they would, like Brother Barnett, respond at once. S. P. RICHARDSON.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., Feb. 9, 1869.

Montgomery Conference.—Statistical Table.

MR. EDITOR: From the minutes it seems that in this Conference there has been a decrease of 254 whites and 1,474 colored members; total, 1,728. But when the column of accessions speaks, it reports 3,554, while the united columns of removals, expulsions and deaths report a loss of only 1,524. This certainly leaves an increase of 2,030, while the decrease is reported at 1,728, a discrepancy of 3,728. Who can explain these figures? S.

OBITUARIES.

IN MEMORIAM.

Died, at Natchitoches, October 20, 1868, after a long illness, JANIE BALDWIN, youngest daughter of W. A. Sharp and Priscilla D. Athins, aged thirteen years, three months and eleven days.

"The rose-bud off in spring,
The lily gathered all too soon."

Vain regrets and a sorrow which will not be comforted avail naught now. She is gone. Not again will her lovely countenance light up at our approach, and kindle into intenser glow at our greetings. The wail of love cannot resuscitate that lifeless form, nor can the bitter tear reanimate that lovely eye. Hushed is that voice we so loved to hear. Never again on earth shall we listen entranced as it pours forth its notes of thrilling melody, rivaling the nightingale in its sweetness. Hushed in the dark gloom of the tomb—gone, gone forever. In bitterness of spirit I can exclaim:

By death's winged arrow pierced she lies,
All pulseless now and low;
Alas! these unavailing cries;
Alas! this hopeless woe.

In paying this last tribute to the memory of our beloved child, I feel that I cannot do her memory justice. A love of right seemed innate in her. An atmosphere of truth and purity surrounded her. She was the pride and joy of the domestic circle, ever faithful in the discharge of all her duties. Truthful and affectionate, she was beloved by all.

Bright hopes were in their gayest bloom
When called thus to an early tomb;
The young heart struggled—then a tear—
And Jesus whispered, "Do not fear."

"Cling not to earth; give me this heart;
I'll bear thee where thou'lt never part,
Where all thou lov'st will meet again,
Free from all sorrow, care and pain."

Friends may mourn thy early doom,
Affection rear a hallowed tomb;
They feel their loss hath bought for thee
Bliss in a long eternity.

Had love the power to call again
Thy spirit to this world of pain,
They would not, though their hearts were riven,
Deprive thee of one hour in heaven.

HOMES IN BRITISH HONDURAS.

FREE FROM TAXATION.

THE PUTNAM IMMIGRATION ASSOCIATION (Limited) of Belize, British Honduras, has been founded, under the laws of that Colony, with a Capital Stock of $500,000, coin, in five thousand shares of $100 each.

The Association has purchased of the Colonial Government an area of about 500 square miles of territory, comprising some of the choicest Sugar, Tobacco, Corn, Rice and Cacao lands in the Colony.

The Association will sell to each family that will locate upon and occupy the land between this and the 12th of July next, 160 acres at 50 cents per acre, payable in Five Years from date of settlement, without interest. The Association will donate to every Parent and Child of each family, who may be living on the land at the end of the second year from date of settlement, one Share of the Association's Stock, the value of which will be greater than the price paid for the land.

An adult male member of each family who will locate, put up a cabin, and clear enough land to provision his family, will be recognized as a bona fide settler.

These lands will produce from three to five hogsheads of Sugar per acre, without cultivation. Sugar boiling can be carried on during eight months of the year. Two crops of Tobacco, Corn, Rice, Plantains and many kinds of vegetables can be made in a year. The country is healthy, and white men can work to better advantage in the warm months than in the Southern States. These facts are demonstrated by the experience of 350 Southerners now settled in the Colony.

No family should go that has not means sufficient for its support for twelve months after locating on the land.

The steamship Mexico will leave New Orleans for Belize on the 20th of February, the steamship Trade Wind on the 21th of February, and make the trip in five or six days. First class passage, $10, greenbacks; second class, $25. The Trade Wind makes a monthly trip.

HUMAN BLOOD!

ITS MYSTERIES.

It must be admitted by every rational mind that the man who contributes the most toward promoting the happiness and welfare of the human race must of necessity be the most highly esteemed by his fellow-men; and, acting upon this principle it appears that Professor R. L. Hamilton, of New York, has, by patient investigation and vast experience, solved the uncertain question in relation to the vexed and important subject of Liver complaint and other chronic diseases.

It will be remembered by the readers of this paper that, a few days ago, Dr. Hamilton's Theory of Liver, Lung, and other diseases, was published in connection with many other vital facts, in which all diseased persons are interested; many wonderful cures were published from all parts of the country. Others of a startling and interesting character are given below, which seem to us are evidences that cannot be questioned for a moment, and we advise those who are suffering from the diseases he makes a specialty of to write their full symptoms and get Professor Hamilton's opinion and advice at once.

STRONGLY CORROBORATED!

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 20, 1869.

TO THE AFFLICTED EVERYWHERE.

During my labors in publishing and editing a newspaper for many years in this city, and also in the performance of my duties as a clergyman in this and other cities, I have become thoroughly and intimately acquainted with R. Leonidas Hamilton, M. D., the justly-celebrated Liver, Lung and Blood Physician of this city, who is located at No. 546 Broadway. The doctor was for many years a regular practising physician, and also for some years a professor in one of our best medical schools, and during such extensive experience he fully realized the inadequacy of the ordinary treatment made use of in all chronic diseases, more especially that class of troubles arising from deranged functions of the Liver and digestive organs. He at once set himself about the study of this class of diseases, determined to make them a specialty. Laying the vegetable world under tribute, he has made discoveries and compounded specifics on sound philosophical principles, which have made the most wonderful cures in the annals of medicine. Liver, Blood, Lung and Nervous diseases are now virtually under his full control, and yield to the magic, subtle power of his remedies. I have myself seen numbers of those who have been saved from the hand of death by his power, when the unfortunate sufferers seemed doomed to an early grave, and all other treatment was of no avail. In addition to what I can vouch for personally, I have ample evidence from other clergymen, physicians and eminent men of the highest character, who have also been saved by this wonderful treatment, and who speak in the highest praise and gratitude of Dr. Hamilton as a physician and a gentleman of honor and integrity. It is but simply stating the positive truth when I say that it is well known throughout this country that where his works are known and the fruits of his skill have been witnessed, he is highly esteemed by the people as the most eminent and remarkable physician in the treatment of chronic diseases, of the age. As the result of a long personal and familiar acquaintance with Professor Hamilton and his unparalleled success as a professional man of the highest order, I frankly express the hope that diseased humanity in every part of our land may avail themselves of his most remarkable skill, and thus share the noble blessings so kindly and freely bestowed upon all. Most respectfully,

REV. W. B. JACOBS,
No. 41 Park Row, Room No. 4.

THE WORK GOES BRAVELY ON!

ANOTHER CLERGYMAN CURED.

The eminent divine, Rev. J. W. Hinkley, of Athens, Maine, writes:

My health has so far improved from the effects of your treatment that I am able to resume my pastorship. Had it not been for your medicine I should not have been living now. To you, with God's blessing, do I owe my worldly existence. I am a living exponent of the worth of your matchless remedies, and I shall hereafter deem it a part of my religious duty to recommend all suffering with diseases of the Liver or Lungs to speedily apply to you. May God's blessing attend your worthy efforts for the relief of diseased and suffering humanity.

CONCLUSION.

It would seem to us that, after carefully looking over the evidence given above, all reasonable persons must be led to the conclusion that there can be no good reason for doubting the fact that Dr. Hamilton is just what he is represented to be—a very successful physician in the treatment of Chronic Diseases. It is useless to cry "humbug," for the above parties have volunteered to give their evidence for the benefit of the suffering, and for no other purpose. All of these testimonials are genuine—are guaranteed to be so, in fact—and it is easy to write to them, and get from their own pens the facts! Any of them will answer all inquiries of this character, either in person or by letter.

NOTICE.

Prof. Hamilton has now in press and nearly ready a pamphlet containing a biographical sketch of his remarkable life, with a fine lithograph picture of himself. This book also contains a complete history of Prof. H.'s wonderful cures—his theory of diseases, and the only natural, safe and positive treatment for all chronic diseases—a valuable work for everybody. Letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia:

CRAWFORDSVILLE, GA., Sept. 29, 1868.

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is an article of little cost, but great value. Its domestic as well as medicinal uses are numerous, while its sparkling are most wonderful. I have not been without it for ten years, and no head of a family who can afford to have it should be without it.

ALEX. H. STEPHENS.

The Wonderful Family Medicine.

Letter from the Surgeon General of the late Confederate States:

RICHMOND, VA., Jan 14, 1869.

JOHN DARBY & Co., No. 160 William St., N. Y.—Gentlemen: I have received your letter of the 15th of December, 1868, calling my attention to your (Darby's Prophylactic) Fluid.

I most cheerfully state that the Fluid was furnished to and extensively used by the Surgeons in charge of General Hospitals in the Confederate Service, with great benefit to the patients, all the surgeons making a favorable report. A great deal of it was used in the hospitals.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAML. PRESTON MOORE, M. D.,

The Astonishing Disinfectant.

EMORY COLLEGE, OXFORD, GA., December 23, 1868.

PROF. DARBY—Dear Sir: Having not been engaged for many years in the active duties of the medical profession, I am only superficially acquainted with the claims of your Prophylactic Fluid, but am well acquainted with its chemical elements.

While, therefore, I cannot speak experimentally of the value of the compound, yet the disinfecting and Therapeutic properties of the agents employed in its composition, together with the well known reputation of its discoverer as a chemist, authorize me to regard its merits as of a high order. On the whole, it must be considered as a valuable contribution to the class of articles to which it belongs.

These views, I may add, are sustained by the testimony of many competent judges who have tested its properties.

Believe me, dear sir, your's respectfully,

A. MEANS, M. D., LL. D.

Cures Burns, Wounds, Stings, Etc.

ALABAMA INSANE HOSPITAL,
Tuscaloosa, December 22, 1868.

MESSRS JOHN DARBY & Co., 160 William St., N. Y.—Gentlemen: I received your circulars of the 10th instant, asking an expression of opinion from me as to the merits of your Prophylactic Fluid. The preparation has been so generally used by the profession and public at large, and so universally esteemed, that it seems to me to need no further recommendation.

As a disinfectant, and remedial agent too, when indicated, it is not excelled by any similar preparation. We use permanganic preparations very extensively in this Hospital, and could not do without them. I consider yours the best and most elegant preparation of the kind manufactured.

Respectfully yours, etc.,

P. BRYCE, M. D.,
Supt. and Phys'n Ala. Insane Hospital.

A Perfect Pain Killer.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,
Staunton, Va., Jan. 9, 1869.

PROF. DARBY: When I was President of the Lagrange Female College, of Georgia, I used your Prophylactic Fluid in the College with decided success. Both as a disinfectant and as a remedy for sores and burns, etc., it was efficacious and proved to be what it is represented. Every family and public institution ought to have it. I wish you great success in the sale of it.

WM. A. HARRIS, D. D.,
Pres. W. F. College, Staunton, Va.

Never was there a family medicine so highly recommended as this. Try it and you will never regret it.

Let every country merchant visiting New York this spring put this article on his list. But don't wait. Order it at once.

And so we might fill this entire paper with recommendations from the very best men in the country.

There is no question that this is a most wonderful and useful article as a disinfectant, and for wounds, sores, burns, poisons, colic, as a tooth wash, general purifier, etc.

Every Druggist or Country Merchant has it for sale.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE KITTEN.

She lies on the braided rug,
Before the crackling fire,
Watching with sleepy eyes
The flames mount higher and higher.
The kitten yellow and black,
With a throat as white as milk,
And a pair of ears as soft
As the very flossiest silk.

She can sing, and frisk, and play,
And toss a mouse or a rat,
She can spit, and put up her back,
Like any wise old cat;
Her claws are sharp as the briar
That grows on the sweet wild rose,
But the little paw is like velvet moss
That covers her yellow nose.

She follows the children out,
And watches them while they play,
Or climbs to the very top
Of the elm so merry and gay;
She can leap the brook at a jump,
And scamper so fast away
That you couldn't catch her, my little girl,
If you tried the livelong day.

"MY WATCH."

Mr. T. P. Bishop contributes to the London Sunday School Teacher, for October, a very spirited outline talk about his watch:

The other evening I was thinking what I would talk about to day, and looked to see the time; my watch said half-past five. I knew it was nearly eight. I looked at face—hands—listened—no ticking—examined works—watch had stopped—mainspring broken. I said I will tell the Sunday school children about my naughty watch.

Why are watches like boys and girls? They have faces—hands—anything else? I listen of a night and hear ticking; I come into school and hear a great clatter; children and watches have tongues also.

The face of my watch was wrong—not right time; but the fault was not in the face. There is a little spring shut up in a barrel right inside, out of sight—the mainspring—sets all the work going—that was wrong.

I saw a boy in the street with an angry face—eyes flashing; I said there is something wrong inside. When I look at a child's face I can often tell what is going on inside—girl pouting and cross in Sunday school class—wrong inside.

When I looked at my watch I found the hands all wrong, not moving, and pointing to wrong figures. I put them in the right place, but that did not mend matters; something was wrong inside.

Girl idle—hands not moving—ought to be helping mother; boy in street fighting—hands all wrong; or fingers in the cupboard, picking and stealing, or doing mischief—something wrong besides hands—mainspring wrong.

I listened to hear if my watch ticked; but no, it was silent. Watches and clocks can talk, and tell us many useful things in the stillness of the night; they remind us of how time is going on—on toward eternity. Church clock instructs all the parish; Big Ben would talk to all London, if the noise would let us hear him. A good clock only speaks when it has something to say, and that something wise and useful. I wish girls and boys were as wise. But some clocks tell lies and talk nonsense. One I knew that struck nineteen at three o'clock, and at four o'clock it struck twenty-seven, and some are lazy and won't speak at all. But why? Because their works are wrong.

Some children tell stories, or say naughty words, or won't say their lessons; is it only their tongues that are out of order? No, there's something wrong in the works—there's a mainspring broken. What do we call it?

When I found my watch stopped I first shook it, then put the hands right, tried to wind it, looked at the works, touched the wheels, got it to tick for a minute or two, but all was no good. I was not so stupid as to pull it to pieces and look at the mainspring. I knew it was broken, and the watch must have a new one.

Suppose I had taken the angry boy and the pouting girl, and tried to put their faces into a pretty shape. Suppose I had taken the lad that was fighting, and unclasped his fists and put his hands in the attitude of prayer; or the mischievous boy, and kept his hands still. Or suppose I could shut up the mouths that bad words and lies come out of. Would that set them right? No; for in such cases it is all because the mainspring is wrong, and there must be a new one.

Of course I took my watch to the watchmaker, and he put in a new mainspring, and now it goes all right; face and hands are all right; it ticks all right. And so for naughty words and deeds, and evil habits and tempers, the only cure is the new heart, and for that you must go to the great watchmaker. Jesus says to you, "My son, give me thine heart;" and what does he want it for? Why, to give you a new one instead, and then hands, and face, and tongue will be all right.

But do all want the new heart? In a village in one of the Western States lived little Annie Gale. She was brought to know and love the Saviour. A friend said to her father, "I don't believe in your Annie being converted; she was like a little angel always. If old Dan Hunter now were converted, I would believe in it." Annie heard it, and she went to Dan Hunter's cottage to tell him about Jesus. Dan had been a wicked man, and now he was taken ill, and he was glad to have Annie come and read to him; and Dan found that he could be saved in just the same way as little Annie Gale, just by believing in Jesus, and praying for the new heart.

Children may seem good, bright, and happy children, and yet all want the new heart. I bought an apple once, and it was so large and round and had such rosy cheeks, just like many a little boy and girl, and looked so good—and I expected such a treat—and so I cut it, and, O dear, I found that the inside was all rotten—just good for nothing. So, dear children, you may seem smiling, and happy, and fair outside, but yet you all have a heart by nature just like that apple, and you must get a new one.

GOOD COMPANY.

It was a very dark, rainy night. Our boys' prayer-meeting had just closed, and Henry stopped to tell me a word of hope about one of our class for whom we had long been praying. As I went to the door and looked out into the darkness and rain, I said:

"Harry, I am almost afraid to have you go so far alone this dark night. Is there no one going your way?"

He looked up with a bright smile and answered.

"O, I am to have good company. I shall not be alone."

"Then your father or your brother are in town, are they?"

"No. Better company than that."

"Who can it be?"

"Why, the one whom we met in prayer meeting. The Saviour. You know he says—(you read it to-night)—'I am with you alway.'"

"So you think you will not be lonely or afraid?"

"No, indeed. Christ is good company, and he has promised to take care of me always. Good night."

As I stood looking out into the darkness after Henry's departure, I thought this is not the first time a child's faith has reproved me. Henry is not afraid to go anywhere, for Christ will go with him. Why should he fear? Why should I? He believes Christ is ever at his side, though unseen to his natural eye. Christ is real to him—truly present; and so he will be to all his children, as they walk through the darkness of this world.

The next day, meeting Harry, I said:

"Did you have a pleasant walk last night?"

"O, delightful," he answered. "It seemed as if Christ was with me all the way. He is blessed company in the darkness or in the light. Isn't he, teacher?"

"Indeed he is, Harry; and may his presence always go with you as now."—Sunday School Times.

SCIENTIFIC.

PROGRESS OF ASTRONOMY.

NUMBER ONE.

Not to fatigue the reader's attention with the comparatively dry details of the Chaldean, the Egyptian, the Chinese and the Indian astronomies, we shall proceed at once to that of the ancient Greeks, from whom the science has descended to modern times. The astronomy of Greece begins with Thales, and the philosophers of the Ionian school, which was founded by him six hundred years before the Christian era. Thales is the first who is known to have propagated a scientific knowledge of astronomy among the Greeks. He taught them the movements of the sun and moon; he explained the inequality of the days and nights; and he showed the Greek sailor, who had only observed the great bear, that the pole star is a far surer guide over the wide waste of waters. But that which rendered him more celebrated than anything else was the prediction of a solar eclipse. For easy as it is to calculate an eclipse at the present day, the astronomer who could, at that early age of the world, merely predict such an event, was regarded more as a god than as a man.—Hence it is that Pliny, having mentioned the name of Thales in connection with that of Hipparchus, bursts into one of his fine strains of enthusiastic praise. "Great men!" says he, "elevated above the common standard of human nature, by discovering the laws which celestial occurrences obey, and by freeing the wretched mind of man from the fear which eclipses inspired. Hail to you and to your genius, interpreters of heaven, worthy recipients of the laws of the universe, authors of principles which connect gods and men!" Hence also the admiration of Josephus, who calls astronomers "the sons of God."

Next to Thales, Pythagoras, who founded the school of Crotona, about five hundred years before Christ, was the grand luminary of astronomical science in ancient Greece. Whether he reflected the science of the East, or shone by an inherent and original splendor of his own, we are amazed at the extent and the sublimity of his views. His name is forever associated with the true system of the universe. For he is the first, at least among the Greeks, who maintained that the sun is the center of the planetary orbits, around which the solar system revolves. In one word, he is the first Greek astronomer who is known to have taught the system which now immortalizes the name of Copernicus. It was Pythagoras, too, who conceived the sublime idea that the planets are inhabited, and that each star which twinkles in the immensity of space is a sun like our own, and the center of a splendid retinue of planetary worlds.

It has always seemed wonderful to us that after the true system of the universe had been broached, and embraced by a large school of philosophers, it should have passed away and sunk into almost total oblivion. Various causes may be assigned for this strange fatality of the Pythagorean scheme; but the chief cause, no doubt, is to be found in the domination of the Aristotelian philosophy. It is to the authority of Aristotle's mighty name, no less than to the force of his deceptive arguments, that we should ascribe the temporary downfall and oblivion of the true system of the world.

If the opinion of Sir William Hamilton be just, that "Aristotle stands the Copernicus and Kepler and Newton of the intellectual world," his most enthusiastic admirers should be satisfied with such exalted praise. He is certainly neither the Copernicus, nor the Kepler, nor the Newton of the material world. Hence if he were all of these to the philosophy of mind, then may the metaphysician crown him with glory and honor; he certainly deserves little at the hands of the astronomer. For in this department of knowledge he not only extinguished the lights which his predecessors had kindled, but he laid down laws and maxims which would have made the universe a profound enigma for all time to come, and the science of astronomy an eternal puzzle. His philosophic dream, that it becomes such divine objects as the heavenly bodies are, to move always with a uniform velocity, and that therefore they never move slower or faster, is a fair specimen of the spirit and manner in which he determined the most important questions pertaining to the order of the universe. The scholastic jargon, too, by which he affected to demonstrate that the planets must revolve in perfect circles, is one of the most remarkable instances on record of a great intellect striving to appear profoundly learned on a subject, in regard to which it knew—just exactly nothing. The truth is, that Aristotle did not address himself in right good earnest to study the world which God had made; but he came with his matter, and his privations, and his forms, to show how it must have been made. Hence darkness was the result, and his errors were legion.

Yet with all his errors, Aristotle had one true astronomical idea.—He maintained the spherical form of the earth. Though this doctrine had been taught before his time, yet is it so distinctly conceived by him, and so strongly argued, that he almost deserves the credit of an original discoverer. From the shadow of the earth, as seen projected on the moon during a lunar eclipse, and from the gradual elevation of the stars toward the north or south as we approach them, he inferred the spherical form of the earth. Better arguments have not since been invented; and better it is not easy to conceive.

We cannot even allude to all the names which adorn the annals of astronomy. We shall, however, in passing, mention that of Aristarchus, because of his attempt to determine the distance of the sun from the earth. Though his method was ingenious in theory, it proved false in practice. For he concludes that the sun is eighteen times the moon's distance from the earth; we know that it is four hundred times that distance. Indeed, the greatest astronomers of antiquity could not determine the distance, nor the magnitudes, of any of the bodies of our system; but such have been the improvements in the methods of the science, that the mathematician can now calculate them with exactness and ease.

Among all the astronomers of antiquity, Hipparchus stands pre-eminent. Endowed with one of those vast intellects which, by its compactness, its vigor, its comprehensiveness, its acuteness, its originality and its depth, was destined to make an impression on all succeeding ages, he has ever been the admiration of astronomers, to whose favorite pursuit his immortal powers were almost exclusively devoted. Even Delambre, though usually so severe in his judgments, relaxes into praise as he approaches the name of Hipparchus; pronouncing him "one of the most extraordinary men of antiquity, the very greatest in the sciences which require a combination of observation and geometry." And M. Auguste Comte, by grouping Hipparchus and Kepler and Newton together, as the three great lights of astronomy, has, if possible, still more impressively expressed the estimation in which he held "the father of astronomy." You will naturally ask, then, what constitutes his title to so proud a distinction, to so high a niche in the temple of fame, to so imperishable a chaplet of glory as that which encircles his lofty brow?

We answer, the theories of the sun and moon, as propounded by him, were far more perfect than those of his predecessors. In the second place, he reformed the calendar and introduced greater accuracy into the computations of time. Thirdly, he found the science of trigonometry, a branch of the mathematics without which the very alphabet of physical astronomy could not have been constructed; for it is by the application of trigonometry that the distances and the magnitudes of the various bodies of our system are determined. Thus, the real facts of astronomy, which are so amazingly different from the apparent ones, are due to the method first invented by Hipparchus.—Fourthly, his grand discovery of the precession of the equinoxes, which was made one hundred and twenty-eight years before Christ, was indispensable to the future progress of astronomy. Fifthly, the astronomical observations which were made by him alone, and transmitted to posterity, exceeded in number and value all the observations he had received from all his predecessors. And, lastly, his sixth great labor, which in that early age Pliny regarded as pertaining to the Deity rather than to man, consisted in a construction of a catalogue of the fixed stars. By this labor alone he created an era of light in the history of the science; and if the labor was immense, its results have been of incalculable benefit to all succeeding astronomers.

But, if we mistake not, he deserves as much credit for what he did not attempt, as for what he actually accomplished. Having proceeded as far as the light of nature seemed to guide him, he there resolutely halted, and refused to advance or bury himself among the obscurities of nature. "The art of talking unintelligibly on matters of which we are ignorant," is one of the fine accomplishments which he does not seem to have learned from Aristotle, or from any of his predecessors. In one word, his object seems to have been, not so much the illustration of his own name, as the discovery and propagation of truth. Hence, the miserable weakness of pretending to know all things, and to explain all things, formed no part of the intellectual character of Hipparchus. In this respect he presents a glorious contrast to many of the most renowned philosophers of Greece; and, as the bright and morning star of astronomical science, he will ever be, even as he now is, most reverently admired. The astronomical dreams of a Plato and an Aristotle have passed away; the discoveries of Hipparchus will live forever.

From the mind of Hipparchus, who flourished one hundred and twenty years before Christ, down to that of Ptolemy, a period of about two centuries and a half, no real astronomer appeared. The works of Hipparchus have been lost; not so with those of Ptolemy. It is to these works, says Mr. Whewell, that we owe ninety-nine hundredths of all our knowledge of the Greek astronomy.

Ptolemy possessed not only a great, but also a versatile mind; yet it is as an astronomer that he has ever been held in the highest estimation among men; for it was to this noble science, then languishing in the schools, that he gave a new and lofty impulse. He brought together and united the scattered materials existing in the works of Hipparchus and others; which, combined with his own discoveries, formed a complete system of astronomy as the science was then understood. The publication of his work forms a great epoch in the history of the science. This work, which fortunately escaped the barbarism of the middle ages, formed the basis of all the astronomy of the Arabians, and, for a considerable time, that of modern Europe. If our design would permit, we should be glad to give an outline of the contents of this great work; but we must hasten on to the more important and more interesting eras of the science.—Southern Review.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association, at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments. oct17 1y

WHAT ADVERTISERS SAY.

The firm, whose letter we print below, gave us in 1867 what was then the largest contract we had ever received for our "Lists of One Hundred Local Newspapers." The fact that they this year renew the order and increase the amount is the best argument we can give that these "Lists" are good advertising mediums.

LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL,
MANUFACTURERS OF
AXES, SHOVELS, SAWS, ETC.,
No. 118 WATER STREET,

PITTSBURGH, PA., Dec. 3, 1868.

MESSRS. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.—Gentlemen: One year ago with much hesitation we gave you an advertisement for one of your Lists of One Hundred local papers; a very short time thereafter we unhesitatingly added two more Lists of One Hundred papers.

But a short time elapsed before we were inquired of on every side for "Colburn's Patent Red Jacket Ax," proving to us that your plan of Lists had reached the very parties to whom we wanted to introduce the new patent Ax.

The year having now nearly gone by, we cannot but believe your system of advertising by "Lists of Local Papers" is just the kind of advertising we want, and we to-day forward you an order still adding one more List of One Hundred papers, making the number now altogether four (4) Lists of One Hundred (100) local papers.

The more we talk with newspaper agents and editors' agents the more satisfied we are that the arrangement we have made with you is preferable to any we have ever heard of. The merit of the Ax itself has, of course, something to do with the great demand for it, but we are satisfied that by your system of advertising by "Lists" we have accomplished in one year what would have ordinarily taken us five years to accomplish. Respectfully,

LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL.

The National Publishing Company of Philadelphia have been among the largest advertisers in our "Lists of Local Country Newspapers." Their bills for these alone amount to not less than $20,000. The testimony of their letter may be taken as an answer to those who inquire if these "Lists" can really be good advertising mediums.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 10, 1868.

MESSRS. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., 40 PARK ROW, N. Y.—Gentlemen: It is more than three years since we began advertising in your "Lists of One Hundred Papers" each, and in that time have given the "List System," as originated by you, a thorough trial, and we can now say it is the cheapest and best general advertising medium we have any knowledge of.

We have tried every possible mode of advertising, having dealt with the press direct, and through nearly every advertising agency in the country, and have no hesitation in saying that your Lists have paid us fifty per cent. better than any other way. Respectfully,

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 614 and 616 Broadway.
NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA COLLEGE,

AUBURN, ALABAMA.

The Spring Session will begin on the 20th of January, and close on the 14th of July, 1869.

The educational facilities here furnished to students are equal to those of the best colleges in the country. Young men may take a regular or partial course, but will be required to have at least three studies.

Auburn is situated directly on the Montgomery and West Point Railroad. Its health and social advantages cannot be surpassed.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, Spring session,	$18 00
Tuition, Fall session,	32 00

Board in private families, from $15 to $20 per month.

Students in indigent circumstances, by applying as such, will be required to pay in advance only half the price of tuition, and by messing they may greatly reduce the expense of board.

OWNED BY THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Fall Session of this well-known institution will open on WEDNESDAY, the 30th day of September, with a full corps of experienced teachers.

The following are the terms for a session of four and a half months, payable one half at entrance and the remainder on the 1st day of December:

Board, including washing, fuel and room-rent, in gold	$67 50
Tuition in English and Latin, in currency	25 00
French, in currency	15 00
Music, in currency	30 00
Use of instrument, in currency	7 50
Incidental fee, to be paid by every pupil, in currency	2 00

Ornamental branches at usual prices.

Traveling ministers of Louisiana Conference charged no tuition in English and Latin.

Every boarder will furnish a pair of blankets, a pair of sheets, a pair of pillow slips, a counterpane or spread, and towels and lights.

For catalogues, containing full particulars, address the President. july25 3m

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev J M Bonnell, D D, President.
Rev C W Smith, A M, Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev W O Bass, A M, Professor of Natural Science.
C Schwartz, A M, Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs A R Leak, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs E T Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of Instrument, $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,
sep5 tf President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION. — TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar, etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS—Board and Tuition per session, $300.
PAYMENTS—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN COOKING STOVE.

The great and serious objection to Stove Ovens has been entirely overcome in the

GOOD SAMARITAN.

by the adoption of a New Principle of Heating and Ventilating the Oven, as the means of the Hot Draft formed by the Ventilation of the Oven, the temperature of the fire is so much increased that a large supply of fuel is never necessary, as the Oven can be thoroughly heated, and all the different operations of Cooking performed with a saving of fuel of

At Least Thirty per Cent. as Compared with any other Stove.

and at the same time rendering it the most perfect and even baking stove now in use. For Roasting, the Tin Kitchen or Roaster, generally known as the "Dutch Oven," is most admirably adapted to THE GOOD SAMARITAN, as its height above the hearth is such that a large and capacious one can be used. That meats roasted in such an oven are always preferable in every way to those baked in the Stove Oven, we believe no one will deny, and we therefore do not deem it necessary to dwell upon these advantages, which are peculiar to this Stove.

It also has a most complete arrangement for Broiling on the front hearth, thus enabling this very important branch of the culinary department to be successfully carried on without interfering with the other work, and thus avoiding the serious objection made to those Stoves which possess no other convenience for Broiling than on the top. One trial of this apparatus for Broiling will be sufficient to commend it to the approbation of the operator, as it works well, and the food retains all its flavor and tenderness. Believing, as we do, THE GOOD SAMARITAN to be all, and even more than it is here described, it is confidently recommended to all. A fair and impartial trial is all that is necessary to any unprejudiced mind, to satisfy them that it is in all respects the

BEST STOVE EVER INVENTED.

For sale only by the undersigned.

In addition to the above, I also have a large and complete assortment of COOKING STOVES, comprising all of the leading Stoves of the day, equal to any offered in any other house in this city.

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

The Law School has been organized under the management of Hons. Judge Colomen and A. Benners.

For further information apply for circulars to
O. F. OASEY,
aug15 2m Secretary of Faculty.

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTItute, Staunton, Virginia.

The next session begins on the 21st day of SEPTEMBER, 1868, and closes on the 24th of June, 1869.

Rev William A. Harris, President, with a Faculty of twelve professors, teachers and matrons.

This is a Female College of the first rank; one of the most flourishing in the South; young ladies here from nearly all sections of Virginia, and various Southern States. Method of teaching like that pursued in the University of Virginia. Health and comfort of pupils promoted. Those from the Gulf States, especially, have greatly improved in health. No social dissipation. The population of this great Valley is nearly all white. This institution is an educational home for the daughters of the South.

Charges for the entire scholastic year, board and tuition, in collegiate course, embracing

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has shown increased animation since our last issue. Country merchants and planters have come forward more freely, and most branches of the wholesale trade have participated in the prevailing activity. City dealers continue to buy sparingly. Sugar has been in much more lively demand, and sold at materially higher prices. The New York and the Western markets, also, have shown a similar upward movement. Refined sugars exhibited the most buoyancy, predicated on the destruction of plantations by the insurgents in Cuba, and the probability of short crops on that island. Henry the principal refiners, Stuarts in New York, and Belcher in St. Louis, have withdrawn their stocks from sale and suspended their usual price lists. Molasses, also, has been in good demand, and all the receipts have met a ready sale at full prices. The movement in Western produce has shown but little activity. The West keeps our market so poorly supplied with produce that no scope is afforded to buyers for export. Corn, in particular, has advanced in consequence of the scant supplies fit for shipment. There is a little wheat in the elevator, but it is held above the limits of foreign orders. Four times the amount of our receipts this season would have been readily taken on arrival, without the expense of storage, if holders had been willing to accept prices which would leave the scantiest margin for foreign shippers but the latter cannot be expected to pay figures which would subject them to serious loss; while every other interest in the trade is profiting by the movement. Provisions are dull and drooping.

We still hear complaints from the country of the condition of the roads, which in some localities, have prevented hauling cotton to the landings. The intelligence from the sugar districts is decidedly unfavorable, excessive rains having prevented plowing and injured the seed cane. In some instances, however, the negroes are returning to their old plantations, and at some points there is rather a better prospect of a labor supply.

The river has fallen three inches since our last report, and is now three feet nine inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 12th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi ..... bales..	1135
Lake	19
Mobile	198
Texas	27
Total	1379

On Saturday the movement was nearly entirely suspended until about noon and toward the close, when the pressure to sell enabled a few buyers to come forward and take 600 bales at irregular and materially lower prices, say at 27½c., and even less, for low middling, but most factors rallied to their previous pretensions, and covered up their samples. On Monday operations were on a still more limited scale, and at a further decline, the sales summing up only 900 bales, and low middling having sold at from 27½ down to 27¼c., and even 27c., but being quoted at the close at 27½ to 27¾c., the latter for strict classification. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate inquiry, mostly from parties who claimed a further reduction of ¼c., which factors would not concede, but later in the day several of the latter were compelled to give way and come down to the views of buyers. Hence the business embraced 2,000 bales, mostly on the basis of 27¼ to 27½c. for low middling, but partly at 27c. Only a limited amount, however, was to be had at these figures.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 4,500 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 625,515 bales, against 412,418 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 190,350 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 19,559 bales to France, a decrease of 135,395 to Great Britain, and of 221 to other foreign ports.

Burning of the Mittie Stephens.

FULL DETAILS.—STATEMENT OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

We copy as follows from the Shreveport Southwestern of the 16th:

We are indebted to Mr. J. Lodwick, one of the steersmen, for the following particulars of this unparalleled catastrophe:

The Mittie Stephens, Captain Kellogg, George Remer, clerk, left this port for Jefferson, on Thursday, the 11th, at four o'clock P. M., with over one hundred souls on board. Nothing worthy of notice happened until twelve o'clock at night, the time for changing watchmen, about two and a half miles below Swanson's landing in Caddo Lake, when Mr. Lodwick remarked to Mr. Swain, the pilot on watch, that he smelt something burning, and at the same time noticed smoke rising from the hay forward on the larboard side. The alarm was at once given, the boat headed for shore, and all hands put to work to extinguish the flames, but without effect. In less than five minutes the bow of the boat was run ashore near Jeter's place, at which time the forward part of the boat was completely in flames, cutting off all egress in that direction. The passengers then rushed to the stern of the boat, driven by the flames and with the hope of making their escape in that direction. The stern of the boat was at least one hundred and sixty feet from the shore, in ten feet water. The yawl was swamped at once by being overloaded and the occupants met a watery grave. Here the scene beggars description. Nearly one hundred frantic, terror-stricken people, men, women and children, were collected on the afterguard, with the flames hissing and crackling behind them and a watery grave before them. Every moveable thing was thrown overboard, and many men jumped overboard and found watery graves fighting for something to float on. Here fathers could be seen hunting for their wives and children, wives for their husbands, and children for their parents, amid the shrieks and cries of the excited crowd. As the flames approached all of the men jumped overboard, some to find a watery grave and others to save themselves by swimming, but not a lady could be induced to take the cold water, and they perished in the flames. In less than one half hour from the discovering of the fire the vessel was a total wreck, and over sixty persons had perished. The steamer Dixie, Captain Thornton Jacobs, came alongside and rendered valuable assistance with her skeff in picking up persons floating in the water. Messrs. Swain and Lodwick staid at the wheel until driven away by the flames, and were the last persons to leave the hurricane roof, at which time the cabin was entirely deserted. They both jumped overboard from the stern and swam ashore. In fact all who were saved did the same thing. As soon as the fire was discovered a large amount of powder was thrown overboard, as well as what else that could be got at, but the fire made such headway that every effort proved fruitless. Captain Kellogg and his officers behaved with great coolness, and made every effort in their power to save the passengers. The following is a list of the lost and saved:

THE LOST.

Crew.—George Remer, first clerk; Charles Weir, first engineer; Thomas Mulligan, second engineer; M. McGill, striker; Peter Fisher, James Gardener and John Batteese, colored, firemen.

Passengers.—Mrs. Jackson and three children; Mrs. T. L. Lyon and son Frank; Mr. and Mrs. Lewis and three children; one unknown lady from Grand Ecore; W. A. Broadwell, New Orleans; Mr. J. C. Christian, Mr. Boyükin, Mr Ash, Mr. New.

Deck Passengers.—James Johnson, Nancy Bradford and child, William Morris, Amanda Morris, Martha Williams, Henry Ashley, Sidney Ashley, Robert Phillips, John A. Phillips, James Phillips, Martha A. Phillips, Alexander Phillips.

Deck Crew.—William Murphy, Joseph Ganes, Andrew Gallighan, Thomas Ryan, Pat. Roily, Nat. Buchanan, William Buchanan, James Hill, Henry Hicks, Peter Engine, and six not known.

Cabin Crew.—Various.—A. Baptiste, pantryman; Napoleon Washington, texas tender; Chas. Redford, John Smith and Dennis Williams, cabin boys; Robt. Franklin, second porter; G. W. Hughes, first cook; Charles Crane, baker; Ann Collins, chambermaid.

SURVIVORS.

H. Kellogg, captain; T. M. Hetherton, clerk; George Kline, clerk; John Poland, mate; Peter Sutherland and William Swain, pilots; Joe Lodwick and Joseph West, steersmen; B. H. Covert, steward; W. R. Guyan, barkeeper; Sam Wilcox, striker; Sam Underwood, watchman; Philip Hill, carpenter; John Wilson porter; E. G Chaplain, barber; Wm. Adams, Nat Idny, Peter Beck, Tony Foster, George William Hughes and thirteen others.

Passengers Saved.—G. B. Jirke, S. G. Johnson, J. B. Sengoman, A. McRae, W. F. Cobb, A. Paco, G. W. Peterson, George Cagle, G. A. Williams, Elizabeth Johnson, Mary Johnson, Ann Ashley, Beulah Ashley, T. L. Lyon.

The survivors, forty-three in number, were taken to Jefferson in a perfectly destitute condition.

The last seen of Colonel Broadwell was as he jumped overboard at the stern of the boat. He was, no donbt, drowned.

The circumstances attending the loss of Mrs. Lyon and her son Frank are truly heart-rending. They were the last in the cabin to awake, and then, not until the flames had reached them. They rushed to the aft end of the cabin, where Mr. Lyon used every effort to get his wife and child to step over the railing and jump into the river, a distance of eighteen or twenty feet. The sight was too much for her, and blinded and suffocated by the smoke, she swooned away with her child clinging to her. Mr. Lyon staid with them until the flames scorched him and compelled him to leap overboard, after all chance of saving his wife and child had gone. He was picked up by the Dixie's skiff in an insensible state.

The last seen of Mr. George Remer, the first clerk, was as he jumped overboard. He was one of the oldest clerks on the river, but not the regular clerk of the boat. Mr. C. F. Hayes, who occupied that position, was taken sick just before the boat left New Orleans, and stopped off.

Mr. J. C. Christian was one of the oldest and most respected citizens of this parish. He got on board the Stephens at Mooringsport, where he had been waiting two days, and in less than an hour met a watery grave in sight of the port from which he embarked.

Of the other persons lost we had no personal acquaintance, but how the eye dims and the cheek blanches as we glance over the long list. Here we find father, mother and three children in one place, four of the same name in another, two in another, etc., all of whom found their last resting place at the mid hour of night, by the light of the burning wreck. Great God, how inscrutable are thy ways!

From what we can learn, the safe contained at least $100,000 in gold, which, we presume, can be recovered.

The steamer Dixie, Captain Thornton Jacobs, which arrived here yesterday, brought the charred remains of Mrs. Lyon and son. They were found on the lower deck of the wreck, immediately below the place where they were last seen. The Dixie, on her down trip, lay by the wreck all day Sunday, and her officers succeeded in recovering the remains of fourteen persons. Too much praise cannot be awarded Captain Jacobs for his invaluable services in rescuing the passengers. At the time he first discovered the flames he was six miles off, with fires out and laid up for the night. He at once dispatched his skiff to the scene, and followed with the Dixie as soon as he could raise steam. A large force is still at the wreck, looking after the bodies of the lost, but up to last accounts nothing had been seen of the body of Colonel Broadwell. Not a single lady passenger in the cabin was saved; they, one and all, refusing to take to the water, the only avenue of escape left.

The following is from the Jefferson (Texas) Jimplecute of the 16th:

STATEMENT OF THE WATCHMAN.

Mr. Underwood was watchman of the steamer Mittie Stephens, and on watch at the time of the disaster. At about twelve o'clock, on the night of the 11th instant, was on the staging on the bow of the boat, and discovered a bale of hay on fire, about thirty feet from the torch-light, and some distance from the furnace. All the hay on board was covered by tarpaulins. He instantly gave the alarm of fire. The deck hands present threw buckets of water on the fire, but failed to quench it. The mate then ordered the hay to be thrown overboard, when the flames covered the balance of the hay, and prevented the orders of the mate from being carried out. The engineer turned the hose upon the fire, which failed to extinguish it. The crew, with the mate and witness, worked at the hose until the flames drove them off. They then went to the assistance of the passengers, and helped them to escape. As soon as it was known that the boat would be consumed, the mate ordered the crew to throw overboard the powder that was in the hold of the vessel. Witness and the mate assisted the passengers until they were driven off by the flames. It was not exceeding ten minutes from the discovery of the fire until the boat was enveloped in flames. The officers and crew did all that could be done to save the passengers and boat. All the officers, so far as witness could or did know, were at their post and on duty.

Proclamation of the Provisional Government to the Spanish Nation.

MADRID, January 29, 1869.

The Madrid Gazette publishes the following proclamation, addressed by the provisional government to the Spanish nation:

Liberal governments, of whom public opinion is the supreme judge; have to address themselves, in critical periods, to that same public opinion, and, to avoid the displeasure of the country, to alter not only their acts, but also their intentions.

The provisional government has acted thus on several occasions. Again it will do so to-day, an unheard-of crime having aroused all the generous sentiments and revealed the kind of weapons, schemes and tendencies which the enemies of liberty and real order set in action in order that merely the shadow of liberty alone should be sustained.

The assassination of the Governor of Burgos, horrible by reason of its accompaniments, and sacrilegious on account of the solemn occasion and the holy place where it was committed, and of the false and perfidious pretext employed to provoke it, will be an indelible stain upon the Spanish nation if upon it should rebound the opprobrium aroused by those who, to carry out their sinister desires, did not hesitate at seeking to arouse the troubles of civil war, nor shrink from changing the words of charity and liberty, which are portions of Christianity, into deeds of blood and extermination, even as was done in the ages gone by.

The government has seen and observed in silence, but not unheedingly, a development of conspiracy, formidable not on account of the number or valor of its author, but by its evident object to rekindle religious fanaticism, and to stir up one of those fratricidal wars of which history has drawn so sad a picture, and in which catastrophes similar to that at Burgos are but as episodes. The government, strong in the certainty of its justice, and tranquil before its detractors, while supported by the immense liberal majority of the nation, has without hesitation followed out the course which it had proposed, carrying to the extreme its respect for the rights of all.

The proof of this statement is that in the elections universal suffrage opened the gates of Parliament to representatives of every party, including even that party which abjures liberty and parliamentary institutions.

Nevertheless, without overstepping the law, for which the government professes the greatest respect, it believes that it can calm the public indignation, so justly aroused, by assuring the nation that the crime of Burgos will receive a prompt and exemplary chastisement, let the authors thereof, or those who have incited or been accomplices in it, be whom they may.

At the time when the crime and the perpetrators are in the hands of justice the government can take no further steps in the matter. The whole country calls out for energetic repression, and the government will display that energy at all price.

In the midst of the troubles naturally arising after a revolution so radical as that of Spain, and in the midst of those troubles which have been violently incited, and have tended to arouse the activity of the reactionary agents, encouraged thereto by the generosity fitting to liberal minds, the government has never yet ceased to uphold all the rights of its citizens. The liberties of meeting, of association, of the press, of public education and of universal suffrage, will form together the most complete code of rights, of which Spain may well be proud among the nations of Europe. These are essential things, and which must greatly tend to raise the dignity of the country. Religious liberty, which will hereafter be adopted by all the nations of the world, and which, far from weakening the faith of the immense majority of Spaniards, will rather tend to revive and strengthen it, is in reality re-established. The government has proclaimed it in important documents and has authorized its exercise in every case where such authorization has been demanded.

The only point which has not yet been absolutely settled is the complicated question springing from the establishment of religious liberty—of the relations which shall exist between church and state. That point it is thought best to reserve for the decision of the constituent cortes; and, the time of the meeting of that body being now so near, it would not have been easy to justify the precipitation which would have occurred in determining that which was not urgent, and that which, on the other hand, ought not to have been decided without an appeal to the cortes.

As the time approaches for crowning all the conquests of liberalism it is easy to foresee that the reactionists of all kinds and opinions will redouble their last efforts and their perfidious machinations.

The government does not fear them; it is certain to put them down wherever they may raise their heads; and it reckons for that purpose upon the support of the army and the navy, which has once more preserved the public liberties, upon the citizen militia and upon the irresistible support of the liberal spirit, which has at times been held in check by the most tyrannical repression, but which has never been extinguished in the Spanish nation. If the reactionists should appeal to force, if the crime of Burgos is a challenge, the government, in the name of the nation, will raise the glove. Relying, then, we repeat, upon our power, and having the mission to preserve that liberty which we have conquered at so great a price, the government will not diminish the rights of the citizens by the preventive measures they employ. It will be sufficient for it to follow step by step the menaces of the enemies of the revolution—to prepare energetically to crush them, once and for all, when they may be able to arouse well founded fears for the public tranquility and really imperil our liberties.

This is what the government promises and what it will perform, with the support and confidence which will not be refused by the nation at this critical time. The government will guard the high interests intrusted to it by the revolution, and if any serious peril should menace the country it will be the first to raise the cry of alarm, and will call to its aid all the liberals determined to fight and sure of the victory.

FRANCISCO SERRANO,

and the other members of the provisional government.

MADRID, January 28, 1869.

A CHINAMAN HEADED BY THE TELEGRAPH.—A Chinaman in San Francisco recently swindled some merchants of that city out of $18,000 in gold, whereupon he directly took passage on a steamship, with intent to spend the remainder of his days among the pig tails and chop sticks of his countrymen. With ten thousand miles of Pacific ocean behind him, and three or four hundred million of sympathizing Celestials around him, he calculated on immunity from pursuit, and the peaceful enjoyment of his cash. Alas! for the fallacy of human expectations. The Western barbarians had, unhappily, contrived a method of circumventing the honest rectitude of this deserving Chinaman, by turning, says the New York World, from which paper we derive these facts, a back somersault upon him over two continents, an ocean and three seas. His victims sent a telegram from San Francisco to New York reciting the crime, and describing the person of Hong-Kee, the perpetrator. From New York the telegram is transmitted, beneath the Atlantic ocean, to London, from London across the British Channel to France, through France, and under the Mediterranean to Alexandria, thence by the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf to Bombay, from Bombay to Ceylon, and from Ceylon to China, where it doubtless arrived in time to meet the luckless Hong-Kee as he entered the port of Shanghai, and to dash forever that ingenious Celestial's dream of bliss and unlimited opium, to be purchased by the gold of the Western barbarians. Such an event, although it chronicles nothing more remarkable than the successful pursuit and arrest of a vulgar criminal, is a conspicuous commentary on the majestic triumphs achieved by the mind of the nineteenth century.—Crescent.

Dr. Garland on Church Buildings.

President L. C. Garland has been writing some highly suggestive and instructive letters to the laity of the Memphis Conference. He was a member of that Conference at its last session. They appeared in the Memphis Christian Advocate. The following excellent views upon church buildings we extract from the last of the series:

But furthermore, a culpable disregard of comfort, cleanliness and taste is exhibited in most of our houses of worship. In the settlement of the country, when the log hut was the only shelter of the inhabitants, the log meeting house was good enough, for it was as good as the best of the houses of the worshipers. No sense of propriety was shocked, no taste was offended. But as the country advanced in population, and wealth and refinement, we did not advance with it in the comfort and neatness of our houses of worship. In many populous neighborhoods you will still find the log hut, or, if the weather boarded, yet the unplastered and unwarmed meeting house, from which, of necessity, the preaching of the word and the Sunday school are excluded during the inclement months of winter. Thus the whole machinery of the church stands for about a fourth part of the year as silent as a frozen waterfall, and by the time it is thawed out for renewed operation, much of the season favorable to labor has passed away. This is a source of immense loss to the church upon every circuit in the Conference. It ought to be remedied; it can and must be remedied; and we call upon you, brethren, to set about this remedial work at once. Warm and make your old churches as comfortable as may be done, until you can build new ones.

In our cities and towns our loss from this neglect is of a different kind. There our schools and Sabbath services are perhaps kept up; but our children are going away from us. Whilst their aged fathers and mothers are found in their places in the old and rude and uncomfortable church, they, their children, are found in the more stately and elegant and comfortable churches of other denominations. Let us not be told that there is no religion in long-drawn aisles, and fretted vaults, and fluted columns. This may be so; but certain it is that a total disregard for these things is a source of great loss to the church. Neither let us be told that this loss is the consequence of the improper training of children. The church has encouraged the cultivation of its children. It has built colleges and seminaries for the youth of both sexes. It has made the cultivation of the æsthetic faculties a part of its system of education. It insists upon elegance in the fine arts—in music and drawing and painting—and upon the cultivation of a taste for all that is beautiful in nature, and for all in art that embellishes life. As a necessary consequence, the homes of wealthy Methodists begin to be the abodes not only of comfort, but of elegance and taste. Their floors are covered with costly carpets, and their walls with the richest tapestry. Their galleries are hung with the chef d'œuvres of a Raphael or a Titian, and their halls resound with the sublime symphonies of a Mozart or a Beethoven. These are the every day surroundings of the cultivated children of the church, who, on the Sabbath, are expected to worship in a house offensive to all their tastes, and in painful contrast with the comforts and elegancies of their homes. Its seats are upright boxes, notched, it may be, with the knife and disfigured with the pencil—the floors uncarpeted and unswept, or swept only to elevate the dust to the seats, and often puddled with the juice of tobacco, so that no persons can kneel upon them without hazarding the defilement of their garments. The singing is discordant, and without a single quality to enforce the sentiment of the poetry and to bring the soul into harmony with the devotions of the hour. What but disgust must fill the cultivated mind under circumstances like these? Repulsion is the necessary consequence.

Now, if it is not wrong to cultivate and refine the taste of our children at home, it cannot be right to offend it at church. We insist upon it that this culture must be put away from our firesides if it is not to be carried into our churches. Away with your skill and taste in music, if they are not to find their highest rendering in the praises of God. Away with your refinements in life, if you cannot have them sanctified and made tributary to the glory of God. We want no silly extravagance and show in our churches, any more than we want them about our persons, for true taste in this, as in everything else, while it is elegant, is plain. But we do want neat and comfortable and tasteful houses of worship, with carpeted floors and cushioned seats, and the whole kept in scrupulous cleanliness. We do wish to see every pleasing association cluster about the altar of God. We do wish to see all the devotional exercises of the sanctuary made attractive to our children. We do wish them to feel "glad when we say unto them, 'Let us go up to the house of the Lord.'"

It is vain to hope that a sound conversion of the soul will reverse these sentiments of disgust in any cultivated child of the church, under circumstances like these. The deepest piety is not incompatible with the largest culture of all the faculties with which we are endowed; and we Methodists, in our excessive catholicism, have taught our children to believe that they can be as good Christians in other churches as in our own. If our souls can be saved only in discomfort and filth, then we will submit to them; but if they may be saved as well where the services of the sanctuary are in harmony with the refinements and cultivated tastes of society, then we will go there.—This is their reasoning—and with our own teaching, we cannot gainsay it.

Now in Christianity there is a flexibility which, while it never compromises principle, does always adapt its outward culture and modes of worship to the state of society. It is as well adapted to the halls of princes as to the huts of serfs. Lest it should be fettered in its freedom, it lays down no rules of life, but principles of conduct, out of which, without violating principle, the church may frame its rules to suit its time and circumstances. The true policy, in our judgment, is to advance with society, and to take especial care that all be done to the edification of the people and to the glory of God.

THE Times says: In the sixteenth annual report of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company we find a number of interesting facts. From statements furnished the directors by Mr. Bayley, chief engineer, we make the following extracts:

"Considering the railway progress of the United States for the last ten years, it is not too much to assume that within the next ten years there will be continuous railroad lines from New Orleans, by way of Houston and San Antonio, to Mazatlan, and via Houston and Camargo to the City of Mexico. The line to Mazatlan must necessarily become one of the main lines for the great traffic from China, Japan and Australia."

After referring to the prospective importance of the cattle and grain trade of Texas, and the immense advantage to New Orleans which would result from a railroad connection with the interior of the Lone Star State, Mr. Bayley goes on to contrast the advantages of a road from New Orleans to Mazatlan with those presented by other projected routes. On this he says:

"The shortest distance is to New Orleans—about one thousand two hundred miles—and here we have a great commercial emporium, where steamboats, from all parts of the Mississippi valley meet steamships and sailing vessels from all the sea ports of the United States and Europe. Here they will exchange cargoes, and here, at the railroad wharves on the Mississippi river, steamboats and barges navigating the river, and steamships and sailing vessels navigating the ocean, will deliver and receive cargoes for and from the great western interior country and the Pacific. No snows or frost will ever disturb or interrupt the traffic, and nowhere can railroads be constructed, maintained or operated so cheaply and profitably.

"The future outlined above is a magnificent one indeed; but who will say that it is in the least exaggerated, or that it will not be realized within the next ten or fifteen years?"

THE conflict between the government and the priests in Austria still continues, and the government seems determined to hold its ground.

TO THE SEXTON.

A APPEEL FOR AXE TO THE SEXTANT OF THE OLD BRICK MEETINHOUSE.

BY A SASTER.

O Sextant of the meetinhouse, wich sweeps
And dusts, or is supposed to! and makes fires,
And fites the gnats, and sumtimes leaves a screw loose,
In wich case it smells orful—worse than lampoile;
And wrings the Bell and toles it when men dyes
To the grief of survivin pardners, and sweeps pethers;
And for the services gits $100 per annum,
Wich them that thinks does, let em try it;
Gets up before starlite in all wethers and Kindles fires when the wether is as cold
As zero, and like as not green wood for kindlers;
I wouldn't be hird to do it for no some—
But o Sextant! there are 1 kersoddity
Wich's more than gold, wich doesnt cost nothin,
Worth more than anything except the Sole of Mann!
I mean pewer Are, sextant, I mean pewer Are!
O it is so plenty out o dores, so plenty it doant
No what on airth to dew with itself, but flies
About scattorin leavs and blowin of men's hatts;
In short its jest "free as are" out dores.
But o sextant, in our church its scarce as piety.
Scarce as bank bills when agints beg for mischuns.
Wich sum say is pretty often (taint nothin to me
Wat I give aint nothin to nobody) but o sextant,
U shet 500 men, wimmin and children,
Specially the latter, up in a tite place;
Some has bad breths, none aint 2 sweets,
Some is fevery, some is scrofilus, some has bad teeth,
And some haint none, and some aint over cleen;
But every 1 on em breethes in and out and out and in,
Say 20 times a minit, or 1 million and a half times an hour.
Now how long will a church full of are last at that rate,
I ask you, say 15 minits, and then wats to be did?
Why then they must brethe it all over agin,
And then agin, and so on, till each has took it down
At least 10 times, and let it up agin, and wats more,
The same individule doant have the priveldge
Of brethen his own are, and no one's else;
Each one must take whatever comes to him.
O sextant, doant you no our lungs is bellusses,
To blo the fier of life, and keep it from
Goin out; and how can bellusses blo without wind,
And aint wind are? I put it to your conchens.
Are is the same to us as milk to babes,
Or water is to fish, or pendulums to clox—
Or roots & airbs unto an injun Doctor,
Or little pills unto an omepath,
Or boys to gurls. Are is for us to brethe,
Wat signifies who preeches if I can't brethe?
Wat's Pol? Wat's Pollus? to sinners who are ded?
Dod fee want of breth? Why sextant, when we
Dys its only cos we cant brethe no more—thats all.
And now, o sextant, let me beg of you
2 let a little are into our church,
(Fewer are is sertin proper for the pews.)
And do it week days and Sundays tew—
It aint much trouble—only make a hole
And the are will come in of itself;
(It luvs to come in where it can git warm;)
And e bow it will rouze the people up
And aperrit up the preecher, and stop gaps,
And yawns and figgits as effectooal
As wind on the dry Beans the Profit tells of.

IN THE SADDLE.

PUNCTUALITY.

Mount, my young friend. We have twelve miles to go to W——, and no time to lose. We must be mindful of the great Methodistic rule: "Be punctual. Do everything exactly at the time." This is one of the twelve wise directions given to a Methodist preacher, and which we have solemnly promised "to keep for conscience sake." It has attained to the dignity of "the first three." "Have you considered the rules of a Methodist preacher, especially the first, tenth and twelfth?" Has not this tenth rule been one of the great factors in the success of the Wesleyan movement?

The early preachers, I apprehend, were much more methodical than we. They rode much greater distances and encountered much greater dangers than we, but were more prompt and punctual than their sons in the ministry. In fact, can there be any great success in any enterprise without punctuality? I know a man, gifted, accomplished, scholarly, with the taste of an Addison and the brain of a philosopher, who, so far as we know, has been able to accomplish nothing as a teacher simply, we think, because he has no regularity or system or punctuality. The school is opened at eight or nine, at two or three, or between these hours, as occasion or caprice may demand.

We know another, a popular preacher, very acceptable and useful, beloved by all who know him, who is always behind time, and who, if he is traveling to-day, I would expect to see, with valise in hand, in chase of some train that had unfortunately got to the depot ahead of him. He also is a teacher, and his want of success is attributed to bad management, whereas he simply manages to be behind time. Do you see that house on the roadside? That man begun the world without help. He was poor, unlettered, humble but honorable. Like "our Roman Catholic brethren, he got up early in the morning," worked hard, fought manfully and strong for a good name, met his pecuniary engagements punctually to the day, and is now ready to transmit to his children that which is rather to be chosen than great riches. His promises to pay are current in the market, and his name like pure gold. I knew a man, in the second circuit I traveled, who was a marked example of this virtue. He was a local preacher, but not remarkable as a preacher. He was a merchant in a town of some eight hundred inhabitants. At sunrise he called us down to prayers, and if we were not ready he went to prayers without us. At twenty minutes thereafter we were called to breakfast, and in less than half an hour he was at his store, sitting at the receipt of custom. At twelve M., exactly, dinner was ready, and so supper at a regular hour; each guest and member of the family must be prompt to the time. He was personally an unpopular man, but by his great business tact and energy had the whole town under his influence. Did they wish a president of the board of trustees of the female academy? He was the man. A master of the lodge? He was elected. Did the Sons of Temperance need a head or the town council an executive officer? He was preferred before all others. So exact and prompt was he in all his business matters, that it is said his paper in New York ranked among the best in the city, and all dry goods Gotham did him obeisance.

And can you not see the benefit of this wise rule? You get in the habit of meeting your appointments irregularly, and your people will be correspondingly irregular. But begin with two hearers if more will not join them. After awhile Brother Tardy will come in with his family—Brother Tardy, it may be, charges his late arrival to the women of his household; and now quietly and gently slips in Brother Slow; and after a season, when you reach "thirdly" or "finally," Bro. Dilatory comes in with as brave a step as if he had been with you from the beginning. Begin "exactly at the time," and you will soon have Brother Tardy & Co. to fall into line.

A preacher was sent to a certain circuit. The day of his first appointment came. A heavy snow had fallen; then a crust of sleet lay upon that. It was bitter cold. The preacher wrapped up well and went. Nobody out, and some would say no good done. Mistake. The preacher had broken the ice in more senses than one. He visited three families, where he had an opportunity of praying with two sons and fourteen grandchildren of two honored itinerants, who long since became members of the church triumphant. And was not that high honor? This was one of the most pleasant days of his itinerant life, and at once gave him a character for punctuality on the circuit.

TWO SIDES TO P. O.

MR. EDITOR: How glad we are to know that two of your correspondents have discovered that there is "another side to Post Oak"—that they have found it, literally and truly! The result is, one is rejoicing in a new suit, which has almost transformed him into a stranger to his brethren, while the other is "prying around and trying to imagine something requisite for housekeeping which is not there," and actually finds nothing wanting. Verily, such greetings to "weary and worn" itinerants carry us back to the time when the brethren went out "as far as the Three Taverns" to meet and welcome the Apostle Paul. That greeting was enough to make even an apostle "thank God and take courage." How these two brethren must "thank God and take courage," and praise the system which has at last opened to their astonished eyes the beauties of "the other side of Post Oak!"

What pathetic farewells can they write to former flocks!—What joyous greetings can they give to those who bask in the genial rays of that sun which shines on "the other side of Post Oak!" Fortunate itinerants! Out in the sunlight at last! Who objects to moving? "Preachers ought to become used to moving!" And who would not want to move if certain that the ponderous itinerant wheel would whirl him every time into "the other side of Post Oak?"

But how is it with the itinerant who has never yet discovered this "other side?" Ah! what a contrast. "Look on that picture, then on this." At the close of the year the preacher called for the brethren and delivered to them what both thought was his last sermon. Together they all bowed around the altars of the church and offered fervent prayers for each other's welfare. The good brethren sighed deep sighs at the thought of losing their preacher, and the tears glistened in the eyes of the kind sisters at the bare possibility of receiving another pastor. Some said: "If you will only come back we will do better by you than ever." And so the itinerant, with a small pittance of money, saved from a whole year's scantiness, went up to the Conference, hoping to be sent to "the other side of Post Oak." And after working hard through the whole session, and listening to the "talk" which only a Methodist Conference can make, and when the bishop read the appointments was he not sent back to the "same side!" Alas! for the hope of the poor preacher. It flashed brightly and beautifully, but briefly. But he had one encouragement. The brethren had promised to do handsomely if he returned, and he started back with a new hope growing upon this promise. He was sure they would meet him with a hearty welcome. But no one hailed him from the shore. No one met him at the "Three Taverns." One leaf of the sprig of hope wilted. He went musingly up to the parsonage. No brethren there to greet him. None had been there. Wife and children are glad to see him, but disappointed to hear his destiny. Another leaf wilted.—Perhaps the brethren and sisters had been there during his absence, and he looks for the tokens. But, alas! things have the same old look. This is the same dingy quilt, which keeps not the cold from the little ones. There are bottomless chairs, rickety tables, cracked crockery, tea-pot without handle, coffee-pot spoutless, flour barrel empty, meal sack empty, lard keg empty, meat barrel empty, cooking stove broken in two, tray with the look and wear of a dozen years upon it, tea kettle with a hole in the bottom, wood shed empty, purse empty, and no good, promising brethren in sight. The sprig of hope wilted to the roots. And now it is nearly two months since he was returned, at the expressed wish of the people, and yet all things remain as they were. Oh! ye fortunate brethren, who have discovered the "other side of Post Oak," take pity on us, and let us hear from you often, yea, very often. Reflect the genial sunshine toward us. Tell us more of that good land you have discovered. Describe its inhabitants. We love to hear of such Beulahs. We love to read of such Goshens.

LETTER FROM WOODVILLE.

THE GOLDEN WEDDING.

MR. EDITOR: Has it ever fallen to your lot to attend a golden wedding, when a reunion of the family takes place at the old homestead, and a new departure is made in life's history?

One of these happy occasions came in my way lately, and the impulse possessed me to pen the picture.

The 15th of February, 1869, was one of those glorious mornings when all nature glowed in native sweetness on mountain, hill and plain, when even the note of the mocking bird seemed to gather fresh inspiration, as by flood and field all nature was vocal with praise to the great Creator.

In company with the stationed minister at Woodville, Mississippi, we took our way afoot, in preference to any other mode, out to the residence of Judge Edward McGehee, two and a half miles from the city of Woodville, to join in the fortieth anniversary of his married life to his present wife.

The judge is now in his eighty third year, and one of those men whose presence would challenge attention anywhere, in any company, and the world around him has felt the impulse of his beneficent life. He has been his own executor, and has not waited until death vacated his office that his money and property might be disposed of. It has come to our personal knowledge that his benevolence to the church, and to the calls of charity and goodness, did in one year reach the princely sum of $30,000.

He has always been a liberal giver, and God has blessed him in return. But the cup of life is a mingled one, and because a man is a Christian it does not exempt him from the ills incident to this world, and hence in his old age he has been called upon to pass through a severe crucible. Northmen, with vandal hands, had burned the old family homestead, leaving nothing but its standing, blackened walls. It was a homestead consecrated to God the first week of its habitation by the entertainment of twenty-one ministers of the Gospel, who preached in its parlors every night for a week, during one of the early sessions of the Mississippi Conference. There were golden memories about that sacred hearthstone. For days and weeks together it was blessed by the presence, prayers and counsels of all the older bishops, and in the parlor hung a life-sized portrait of Bishop McKendree standing in the pulpit.

Having rebuilt his home just in the rear of the walls of the old residence, a happy thought occurred: to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of his married life, to his present wife, by a reunion of all the family around the new hearthstone, and reconsecrate his altar to God and goodness.

The judge's elegant and accomplished lady, who carries her age with remarkable activity, freshness and loveliness, had evidently planned, with studied care, all the proceedings of the day.

By midday twenty-two members of the family had arrived. Twelve were absent by circumstances unavoidable, and six had ceased from the toil and strife of life. The representatives of the judge present we take in the order of their ages: Charles, George, J. Burruss and Scott McGehee, all worthy sons of so noble a sire, whom we expect to take up and continue the life-work of their noble parents.

With sadness we missed the noble form of that polished gentleman, that finished scholar and large-hearted Christian, John W. Burruss. He sleeps in death, but was represented by his son, E. M. Burruss. May his life illustrate his noble parentage.

Rev. W. H. Watkins, D. D., was present on this joyous occasion, as a chosen friend of the family for the last thirty years, to conduct the services of the anniversary.

By invitation to scattered groups in parlor, porch and yard, all were assembled, first, to witness the baptismal ceremony, performed by the doctor in a most solemn and impressive manner, consecrating to God and to the church Wilber McGehee Snowden, one of the grandchildren. After this, in social converse, old times and old men of church and State were canvassed.

Reassembling again, Dr. Watkins read the 145th Psalm, and then delivered an eloquent and appropriate address, touching life's strange and checkered history, and how life had been woven by God's providences and mercies. To this altar, in memory so dear, where in childhood's happy hours they were want to gather, now in the full flush and vigor of manhood, they had returned once more from life's wanderings to rekindle their faith and hope, and pay their vows to God. That royal hymn, the 155th, was then sung, and the doctor addressed the throne of mercy in earnest, importunate prayer. After this came the dining, when, with keen relish, we enjoyed a sumptuous repast. We were grouped around two baskets in the parlor, filled with rich and rare flowers, from which two handsome streamers floated with the mottoes, "Render thanksgiving unto the Lord, and pay thy vows unto the most High," when the discovery was made of a neat envelope, containing a thank offering to God ($408-50) for the China mission, to aid these devoted missionaries, Revs. Lambuth and Allen, in their holy work. Another contained a present to their pastor, the Rev. P. Lane—a handsome sum—and another to the doctor who officiated on this interesting occasion.

Mr. Editor, will you not say with me that this was a suggestive and happy scene to have witnessed and enjoyed?

The participants in it will long remember the 15th day of February, 1869. JOHN W. HARMON.

WOODVILLE, MISS., Feb., 1869.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

GADSDEN CT., MONTGOMERY CONFERENCE.

COLLINSVILLE, ALABAMA, February 4, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: Our last Conference granted me a supernumerary relation. Afterward I was placed in charge of this circuit by Brother Slaughter, our excellent presiding elder. The circuit is quite large, being what was formerly the Gadsden and Cedar Bluff circuits. I do not wish to speak of the whole charge, but one appointment only. Cedar Hill has the reputation of being one of the hardest places on the circuit. At this place I preached on the fifth Sunday in January, to a rather large and very attentive congregation. I held a church meeting, presented the claims of the ADVOCATE, and got three new subscribers. Brother Stimpson, our worthy class leader, made an interesting address, in which he promised to hold regular class meetings at the church. The members present promised punctual attendance. The preacher promised, in connection with the class leader, to visit every member of the church and hold class meetings with them at home. So, you see, we are confidently expecting better times at Cedar Hill soon. Have we not ground for hope, as well as room for improvement?

P. K. BRINDLEY.

A THOUGHT FOR PARENTS.—A pastor suggests to the Congregationalist the following plan for securing a more thorough acquaintance with the Bible:

"Let every Christian household have an exercise in repeating the Bible morning and evening. Begin with the child as soon as he can articulate, and carefully making selections for him, follow it up until the day he leaves home for school, or it may be for college. Sometimes require a whole Psalm, or several connected verses, half a chapter, as Rom 5: 12, or even after a while, whole chapters. Learning a few verses at a time, repeating them sometimes in concert, this becomes practical and even quite easy. And not only do you thus make a child very familiar, in a few years, with a large range of Bible truth, but you give him two very important habits, that will prove a life-long benefit—first, the habit of storing the mind with select portions of the word of God, and second, the habit of learning it correctly word for word. If you add to the above exercise, the practice of analyzing portions of Scripture and repeating the substance in your own words for an occasional exercise, and the collation of several passages explanatory of one another or upon the same subject, and the repetition of the best hymns, you will have accomplished the thing desired."

WOMAN IN GERMANY.

A correspondent of the New York Independent, writing from Munich, says:

After we had our first snow, and when the streets were in that condition which always paralyzes the efforts of a New York contractor, I saw on a raw afternoon a sight that would make any American indignant. As I came out upon the broad Brienner strasse, just there by the statue of Schiller, there were half a dozen women in a line, with hoes and shovels, standing deep in the cold slush, scraping and cleaning the street. I cannot say that they seemed inadequate to the task, for they were stalwart creatures, with broad backs, legs like those of a pianoforte, and very roughly clad, with men's boots, and some even with men's hats. They swept and strode along in a powerful way, and made clean work of it; so that I cannot deny that women are better street-cleaners than men. As I went on a few steps further, past Thorwaldsen's equestrian statue of the Elector Max, and came to the Ludwig-strasse, a royal carriage drove out of the portals of the old Residenz. The Queen Mother occupied the carriage, and, as she passed driving right by her mud-scraping sisters, all the gentlemen on the street removed their hats at her approach, and stood uncovered and the emblazoned coach had gone by. And that is what they think of women in Germany.

There is not wanting here a certain outward gallantry paid to women of position and fashion; but that respect for woman here founded on the recognition in her of the same powers and capabilities that man has, is very much wanting. I would not in this generalization include some marriages in which I know that the wife is regarded as the intellectual peer of her husband, nor do I speak at all of domestic affection; and yet it remains true, when the best is said, that woman holds a very inferior position here, and that the kindest Germans—such is the force of habit—will receive, if they do not demand, menial services from their wives, which American gentlemen would not accept. We have become accustomed to see women at work in the fields, and there seems to be something not so uncongenial to them in rural labor (if the lazy men did not usually force the harvest part of it on them;) but when they are made beasts of burden in the city it becomes more revolting to any manly feeling. Together with men, I every day see them sawing and splitting wood in the streets; but the women always are made to carry the wood into the house, and often up four and five flights of stairs—enormous loads of it, borne in a frame upon the back, under which a stout man would stagger. And not seldom it is an old woman who does this, while her hulking son will pile the sticks upon the poor creature's back, with entire unconsciousness that she is his mother. You see them, too, wheeling heavy loads over the pavements. And they not only do this work of men, but their domestic labor besides, and are expected to wait upon and serve their lords, just as if that was their only occupation in life and must afford them constant pleasure. One could with more patience see women put to the rough work of men, if men would at the same time accept the situation, and consider that it is as proper that they should serve women as that women, in the thousand little offices of life that are left to be done when one is already exhausted with the day's labor, should serve them.

THE New York Express says it is reported that President Johnson will sail for Europe in April, and it is also believed he will run for Governor upon a platform of his own.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

IN MEMORIAM

Died, at the residence of her husband, Hon. Daniel Newton, of Bastrop, Louisiana, on Wednesday night, the 27th ultimo, after a long and painful illness, Mrs. NANCY NEWTON, aged fifty one years.

Sister Newton was a native of the State of Mississippi, though brought up in Louisiana, for which she ever entertained the strong attachment usually felt by us for the place of our nativity.

She was born in the year 1818. She was united in marriage, to Hon. Daniel Newton, in the year 1837.

It is generally an easy matter for a friendly pen to trace high-wrought eulogies on the dead, and is, as a usual thing, looked for. Here the rule fails. In this instance it is not an easy task, for eulogy, with all her store of rich things, is ashamed of her poverty in the presence of a subject so worthy.

It may be said of her: "She hath done what she could." Not that Mrs. Newton was intellectually or socially superior to many around her, but in the cultivation of the minor virtues of life; in reigning with gentle sway over her household; in responses, liberal and ready, to all the demands of a husband's love; in the watchful care and useful education of her affectionate children; in possessing the most active and vigorous sympathy and early assistance for all who suffered; in cheerfulness of mien and heart, and affectionate and cordial greeting to her neighbors, throwing light upon the darkened pathway of life, rendering more easy its heavy burdens—in all "she hath done what she could." Hers was a noble life, a glorious death.

This, in a measure, prepared her for her long and painful sickness. For eighteen long months she was a great sufferer, nearly all the while confined to her bed. An occasional ray of light would break in upon her, holding out flattering hopes of speedy recovery, and of many years around her happy fireside. But, alas! it would pass away, leaving darkness the more intense.

Now that husband, by whose side she had walked for thirty years, whose hands she had stayed in the hour of trial and doubt and struggle; those children, grown up sons and daughters, whose feet she had so assiduously yet quietly trained in the path of virtue, whose hearts she taught to trust in God; those neighbors and friends, who had for years felt her goodness and tender sympathy—all gathered around, and for eighteen months ministered to her wants, and plucked many thorns from the couch of sickness and death.

Hers was an end of peace. She knew well when the hour drew nigh. She made all her bequests, and gave minute directions about everything. The writer was with her, and with the weeping family—knelt around the couch of the dying loved ons a few hours before the last fatal moment. She gave full assurances of her readiness and complete preparation for the ordeal. No one could be about her without feeling the power and presence of a kind Father. We could almost envy her the happiness of so peaceful an exit.

The final hour came. Her exhortations and words of pleading to friends and children were all hushed in the infant-like breathings.—Dimmer and dimmer grew the eye, fainter and fainter grew the pulse, that finally ceased without a struggle. Before the grief-stricken ones the pale, emaciated body, beautiful in death, was all that was left on earth of the devoted wife, the affectionate mother, the kind neighbor, the constant friend. To God, who gave it, the bright spirit had winged its way.

FRIEND.

Died, on the 15th of September, 1868, of consumption, in the southern portion of Yazoo county, Mississippi, Mrs. FRANCES A. JONES, wife of the Rev. John W. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, aged forty-seven years, nine months and two days.

She was the daughter of the late Reuben Goodwin, of Jefferson Co., Mississippi, and was married to John W. Jones in Warren county, Mississippi, by the Rev. John Lane, on the 16th of March, 1843. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1844, at Oak Ridge, Warren county, Mississippi. She soon afterward professed religion, and lived a faithful and consistent member.

Death is at all times a solemn and melancholy event; but when one who is endeared to us by all the ties of friendship and affection is consigned to the silent tomb, our hearts are filled with the deepest sorrow, and our feelings bowed down with gloom and sadness, and we have hope only in the resurrection of the dead, when friends and kindred will meet in a happier clime.

The deceased was characterized by modest deportment, genial manners, amiability of disposition, and many social virtues.

As a wife she was confiding, attentive and affectionate, and was at all times the buoyant companion and happy and contented helpmate of her husband.

She was the mother of nine children—one having preceded her to the spirit land some two years—and perhaps no mother was more kind and careful of her household. In sickness she was the vigilant tender, hopeful nurse, and in distress and trouble she lent sweet words of counsel, admonition and sympathy.

In the innocent glee and merriment of her little family she frequently joined to add to their joy and happiness.

Although she was retiring and reserved, she was the devoted friend, pleasant associate and generous neighbor, and "none knew her but to love her."

Her afflictions, though lingering, she bore with Christian fortitude and patient submission, and when the last summons came it found her ready to go in peace.

By her death society has lost one of its most estimable members, the church an exemplary Christian, and her friends and kindred one who was dearly beloved in all the relations of life.

But she has gone. Her sweet spirit, we trust, is enjoying eternal bliss in the celestial city. May the Good Shepherd protect and guide her husband and little flock, and receive them in his kingdom at the last day. May her friends and acquaintances imitate her worthy example, and meet at last where parting will be no more. L. H. J.

VIEWS ON EPISCOPACY.

BY REV H ARROGAST.

The period of another General Conference is approaching. Its meeting will be a time of great interest to Southern Methodism. The Americans, as a people, are restive and fond of change. Both in church and State, reform is thought to be the panacea for all evils; and the reformer who successfully engineers his reform bill, clears his path of difficulties to the office of a bishop, or to the chair of the President. Hence the great anxiety felt by many to head new movements—to be the first to note the efficacy of a change—to gain audience in advance of their countrymen, on the floors of Conferences, or in the halls of legislation, that their names and speeches may go forth associated with the proposed measures.

It is wonderful, too, what value the masses of our people attach to the mode of doing things, and how willing they are to be experimented upon by ecclesiastical and political empiricists, giving to the novelty of a new measure more consideration than to the merit of an old one. It is pleasant, too, to contemplate with what ease the advocates of change vanquish all opposers of new measures. Either the opposer is a fogy, antiquated in his views, fossil-like in his mental structure—incapacitated, by early habits and training, to appreciate the demands of a progressive age—an isolated rock, scarred and furrowed, left by the floods of past centuries amid the moving currents of a generation speeding onward to ideal perfection. Or worse, he is an ecclesiastical or political Aristos, antagonistic to the interests of the masses, all of whom these proposed reforms promise to elevate, cultivate and dignify. For be it remembered, that all reform in America, both in church and State, claims this as its chief excellency—the good of the masses. This is the potent means by which success is sought and had. The radical element, in a more or less diluted state, forms a part of every proposed change. Indeed, so universally is this the case, that it seems our leaders have almost forgotten that there are any decent people for whom to legislate—and one may consider it an advantage to have been born poor, beggarly, ignorant—something of a vagabond, an object of this ecclesiastical and political consideration. Especially is one favored of heaven if he be born a negro, or by some sort of villainous association, have obtained some points in common with the negro. It seems to me it might be well for our leaders to pause a moment in their haste to gratify the masses by radical change, and inquire, are there not some intelligent, genteel people, who may not be so readily propitiated by this sort of legislation?—who do not desire ceaseless reform—universal suffrage in church and State—an indefinite multiplication of places of trust, to be filled by men incapable of keeping or dignifying a trust. Are there not some whose counsels are unalterable against this leveling system, and who, when the vulgar have been captivated by specious appeals to passion and prejudice, and have been hopefully garbered, will vacate in disgust, and seek more congenial associations? To my mind, that church or that government is best adapted to the wants of its subjects, "ceteris paribus," when both the intelligent and the ignorant, the rich and the poor, the high and the low, can find something in the governing power to respect, to revere, to love. The poor are pleased with a government which exhibits suitable concern for their wants; the rich, with a government which protects their property—both ought to be gratified, both cared for. The refined, the elevated, prefer, in church and State, that offices of trust should be held by men who will elicit the respect of their inferiors; the vulgar, the uncultivated, prefer to elevate to place and power their own peers—and in a contest between a refined Christian gentleman and a vulgar demagogue, the latter will always obtain their suffrages. There is a difference in men. All men are not born equal, and no two men can be found of precisely equal merit. The more officers are required in the administration of a government, the more certain it is that some of them, at least, will be of inferior merit. To those of inferior merit the most intelligent portion of every community will yield deference only unwillingly. It is perhaps also a general rule that the more officers there are in the administration of public affairs, the more intimate is the relation of dependency between the officer and those he serves—that is, if the masses, in church or State, appoint their own officers, they will appoint many of them, that, by rotation, all may have a chance for office. For the same reason they will change the incumbent often, that others may enjoy the distinction; and, on the contrary, if there are, in the plan of government, many officers, this will usually be their relation to the governed. If, therefore, we have a bishop for every Conference, it will soon follow that we shall have many inferior men in the office, who will not preside with dignity, and consequently cannot elicit respect from the church. This office will soon become a matter of rotation, that each prominent man in the Conference may be bishop, in turn.

Our system of Conferences tends to clannishness among the preachers of each Conference. This is seen in the effort of each Conference to have its own colleges, male and female—its own newspaper, and perhaps its own book depository. It is seen in the preference given to men who have grown up in the Conference, over men of equal merit who may chance to transfer thereto. These are facts of history. Give us a bishop for each Conference, and we will soon want a bishop from each Conference. The General Conference refusing to grant our wishes, we will ask and obtain the right, each Conference to elect its own bishop. This done, we can honor our own men—we will all be in the line of promotion; we can determine our own mode of appointments, for one year, or four years. But still more, we will have brought the bishop, or president, as he may be called, (the reformers will call him president, as less aristocratical,) one step nearer the people. The Annual, not the General Conference, will elect him. This will be acceptable to the masses—the reformer will see this, and will urge forward the work of progress, until the laity shall have a full right with the ministry in making this appointment. The fact is, what is called progress now means advance in the direction of more privileges to the masses, both in church and State; and this is a sort of progress which, when once fairly begun among a democratic people, knows no limit at which to pause. The acquisition of one right not before enjoyed, begets a thirst for others—and the aspiring demagogue will never want in resources to meet the sharpened appetites of the advancing crew.

In my next I will inquire how we shall support these thirty lusty church officials, hoping that a happy solution of that problem will throw light on some other departments of our church finances now under a haze.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

BUTLER.

George A. Townsend, writing to the Chicago Tribune about the scene at the counting of the electoral vote in Congress, says:

There is all this time a different stamp of man lying back with a fire-brand in his hand—a man who might propose a more preposterous resolution than Mullins could conceive, and who could yet get respectful attention to it from a mean and parasite order of human nature. This man had made ready the implements of mutiny, papers prepared to inject into the proceedings, a personal motive to back them, and an audacity which shone the more lurid and vehement as the period of positive anarchy might approach. I scarcely need name the man to whom this description answers—the raven of riot, the owl of omen—whose career has been, in all its human heroisms, a failure—in its cunning and mercilessness resembling an emissary of the enemy of man.

The State of Georgia was called. Benjamin F. Butler arose with a paper in his hand, deliberate, as one expected, and I felt by the lurking mischief in his eye that he was to begin a part well conned. His voice was full of assumed calmness. His face was pale; not a benignant line in it from crown to chin. I wondered at the exceeding and rare pallor of it, contrary to the general rule of his complexion, and I had no difficulty soon afterward in ascribing the same partly to the spirit which hided in the man, and partly to the wine which had nerved him for this role.

A feeling of subordination to this man's evil genius determined the complexion of the House. The Senate retired to consider his objections; the House sustained his points.

Now, for the first time, some of us began to feel that mischief was abroad. A sagacious official of Congress turned to me and said:

"There is meaning in this!"

"What?"

"It is Butler's great movement to seize the House and dead it. He has the devil in him. The war upon Grant has begun."

The Senate was gone a long time. A nervousness seized the spectators. Whispers ran round, broken with laughter without heartiness. He, the architect of this fear, sat a while in dramatic satisfaction. Then, to heighten his importance, he ran bare-headed over to the Senate. It seemed a long, long time. Grant and Colfax, the elected of the people, were not yet so declared, and it was verging upon twilight. The ladies, hungry with waiting, showed also the growing panic of the hour. Mrs. Mathews and Mr. Dent, with those who had come to enjoy the celebration of their blood-kin, arose and left the House.

THE RIOT.

At last Butler, wild-haired, returned and took his seat. The tramp of feet passed the door. The Senate was announced. Mr. Wade climbed to the chair. The Senators seated themselves. In an off-hand, informal way, Wade said:

"The Senate has considered the objections of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and decide that the vote of Georgia shall be counted!"

Immediately Butler was up.

"And, begging your pardon, the House of Representatives has decided that it shall not be counted!"

A roar of uneasy laughter, a hit of local applause and a series of cries introduced the tumult. In a moment the place was a Bedlam with revolution beneath it. The character of Butler as a leader and lover of revolt was now most hideously apparent. With simulated excitement, an affected tremble of the lips, nervous gestures, personal appeals to weaker nerves near by, and the general manner of a volunteer fireman in the days gone past, appealing for riot, he kept on, despite the Speaker's gavel, the Senate's presence or the horrified and wondering look of two thousand ladies, gentlemen and foreign diplomatists. It was a French revolutionary scene in its lawlessness, and probably the most disgraceful episode ever marked in the history of an American legislature. In a sense, the House was exercising the rite of hospitality to the Senate; but Butler, gorged with the pernicious hospitality of his private house the night before, made light of his hostship now. His evil, twinkling eye was leering, glaring, sneering at the Senate. Partly, perhaps, that elder hate of the Senate for disappointing him on impeachment; partly the desire to be large and conspicuous anywhere; chiefly the wish to usurp the leadership of the House, and with some marplot cunning belief that the present might be the auspicious time—those were the instincts of a nature averse to order and ever ready for turbulence and insolence.

People whispered, "Is he drunk?"

An under word went round the House of "Shameful!"

A man leaned toward me, standing on the floor near the Speaker, and said:

"His party kept up all night. The guests stayed till daylight. This morning they had a champagne breakfast. He is drunk and so are several around him."

Indeed it seemed so. Ingersoll, of Illinois, with a flushed face, livid purple in its color, was snapping his thumb at the president, lighting his ire at Butler's torch, swaying in his place, calling aloud in inebriate iterations. His place was close by Butler, right under the influence of the raging dog-star; and Horace Maynard, John Covode, a dozen others kept the air full of yells of "No, no," and similar intimidations of Mr. Wade and the Senate. The people put in the frightened shiver of a doubtful laugh now and then. Farnsworth drew near his colleague Ingersoll, and entreated him to be decent. Ingersoll took counsel of Butler's eye, and refused, crying:

"Mr. President I shall my colleague be saying to me, 'Hush, hush?'"

At this juncture the Congress of the United States showed the frequent faces of little, demagogue-led men, seen peering up at Butler in fear and faith together—such faces as cried to Pilate "Away with him"—and the House of Representatives went down in the estimation of history and the people farther than ever before in its history.

Banks arose suddenly with a suggestion, and his fine, manly bearing had the effect of manhood on a goose flock. Wade ruled him down, but on the shoulders of Banks' apparition, recovered his own composure and wits somewhat. "Whatever Banks may be in the field," said a grave member near by, "he is the best presiding officer in America." I stood on the floor, all this while, between the two presiding officers and the House, and shared in some part the excitement, though feeling, I hope, the stigma the popular body was earning for itself. I saw Colfax sitting beneath Wade, reading a paper fictitiously, with his teeth to his lips, patting his foot, distress and anger together upon him, like the look of a man troubled by a virago. Now he whispered stealthily to Wade, now accepted some suggestion from Schenck, McPherson, Dr. Mehaffey or a stray clerk. Finally he arose, with a positive face, and struck the desk with the gavel in that key and measure that the House understood. It was a delicate place for him, being the Vice President in abeyance; but anarchy seemed impending, and he took the responsibility.

"The sergeant-at-arms will arrest members who refuse to obey the president?"

Ingersoll continued to cry. Butler sneeringly cried to the Senate to retire and welcome. It looked for a moment like a deliberate attempt to revolutionize the republic, stand between the people and General Grant; and inaugurate a huge national carousal.

Ordway, the sergeant, a common-looking person, went up to Ingersoll and whispered in his ear. Ingersoll refused to be silent. People of timid nerve began to quit the House. Ben Wade showed a dogged obtuseness, but Colfax was at his ear. The architect of this revolt sank to his seat. Grant and Colfax were declared elected amidst painful silence, and the people felt that America had been dishonored by the American House of Representatives.

I will dwell no further on this subject. The scene will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it. If the actor of it ever recovers the confidence of any great part of our people, then is danger ever present among us.

THE ENGLISH RITUALISTS WILL DO—WHAT?—The Church Times observes: "It is a time, in the Church as well as the State of England, for calm procedure. In both we are on the verge of a precipice, and one false step would be irretrievable. We do not say that the church should not be disestablished, but we ought not to jump at disestablishment. We do not say that the time will not have come for secession when the Judicial Committee gives a hostile opinion. All we plead for is consideration of the situation in all its bearings. There is not one alternative in such an event, but twenty. We may find the situation not unacceptable; we may find a free church the best way out of the difficulty; we may hold our own and leave it to the Puritans to betake themselves to those with whom they naturally range; we may find that no course is left but submission to not merely the Primacy, but the supremacy of Rome."

FARM AND GARDEN.

THE "CLOTTED OR CLOUTED CREAM" OF DEVONSHIRE.—How Produced and how Used, Etc.—Americans who travel in England will find upon the table in hotels and in private families a somewhat peculiar kind of cream; esteemed by the English as a great delicacy. This is the "clotted or clouted cream" of Devonshire.—Large quantities go up to London daily, packed neatly in small pots or cans, and it is made an extensive article of trade in all the southern cities of the kingdom. The following is the manner in which this cream is produced:

The dairy house is of stone, usually in connection with the dwelling—stone floors and stone benches, for the milk, and all well ventilated and scrupulously clean and neat. At the time of our visit, the last of May, the milk was strained in large deep pans and put in the dairy house, where it is left to stand from eight to ten hours, when the pans containing the milk are taken out and the milk scalded by placing the pan in an iron skillet partly filled with water upon the range. At the bottom of the skillet there is a grate on which the pan of milk rests, so as to keep it from the bottom, prevent burning or scorching the milk.

The milk is slowly heated to near the boiling point, or until the cream begins to show a decidedly marked circle or "crinkle" around the outer edges; and when the first bubble raises the surface of the cream it must be immediately removed.

Some experience is necessary in applying the heat to have it just right; otherwise the cream is spoiled. When properly scalded the milk is removed to the dairy, where it stands from twelve to twenty-four hours, according to the condition of the weather, when the cream is in a thick compact mass, an inch or more deep. It is then divided, with a knife, into squares of convenient size, and removed with a skimmer.

It is more solid than cream obtained in the ordinary way, containing more curd or casein. It has a peculiarly sweet and pleasant taste, and as we have remarked, is considered a great delicacy. It is largely used in England with sugar upon fresh fruit, pastry, puddings, and especially upon the famous gooseberry pie. It is really a delicious article of food, and the cream also makes nice butter.

VARIETIES OF FRUITS.—Fruit growers often make mistakes in attempting to secure too large a variety. It is much more profitable and satisfactory to cultivate well a few choice fruits of each sort, than a large number imperfectly. It can easily be ascertained from experience and observation what kinds are best adapted to any particular soil and climate. For a moderate sized place, where fruit is not grown extensively for market, but mainly for home consumption, it is easy to select varieties which will furnish fresh fruit for the table every day in the year. From three to five kinds each, of our well established favorites of the various sorts of fruit, will secure this end. Indeed, if we were engaged in raising fruits for market, we should prefer to confine ourselves to as few varieties as practicable, leaving it for amateur fruit growers and rich gentlemen farmers to experiment with the new varieties which are constantly added to our stock of fruits.—Horticulturist.

GO TO FARMING.—A good living is what comparatively few men succeed in making in village or city life, and yet nothing is more easy of accomplishment on the farm. Besides, there is a pleasure in cultivating and embellishing the earth, improving and increasing its products, thus adding to the aggregate of human happiness. Why, then, should young men hesitate to be farmers? It is both profitable and honorable. It is the nearest approximation to independence that man, as a member of society, can make. A gentleman farmer—and all farmers are, or should be, gentlemen—belongs to an order of nobility that is not indebted to place-holders for its installation, and may, if he chooses, be ranked among the greatest benefactors of the human race. Let all idle young men go to work on farms, and quit seeking third or fourth rate clerkships. In short, go to farming and quit begging.—Exchange.

BARLEY.—So much of this grain is being imported that the demand for it in England for shipment has caused an advance in price until it is higher than the price of wheat. We ought to raise barley enough to supply our own market. It is said to be less exhausting than any other grain; quite as sure a crop, and is always in good demand. It is much better than oats to seed with. It is an easier crop to raise than wheat, and is much more certain. The meal is excellent feed for working horses and neat stock. Farmers ought to raise more barley.

SECOND GERMAN CHURCH.

Brothers Penly and Ahrens, in accordance with the resolution of the Louisiana Conference, presented the important claims of this branch of our Southern German Methodism to the Moreau street congregation on last Sabbath, who responded in the handsome sum of $102.

SABBATH SCHOOL NOTICE.

The regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the New Orleans District Sabbath School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, composed of the officers of the Union and superintendents of the various Sunday schools, will be held in Carondelet street church next Wednesday evening, March 3, at seven o'clock.

A punctual and full attendance is solicited, as business of great importance will come under consideration.

President.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

A letter from the Rev. T. Moody, dated Cross Plains, Alabama, February 18, 1869, says:

"We are laying a foundation for a profitable year's work. Considering the weather, our congregations are good, and the word of life is being dispensed. Our Sunday school interest is not neglected. The few colored people are also looked after. I expect to organize them into a class, and hope to have a Sunday school for them soon. They need our oversight very much. It requires a pastor, indeed, to fill the work with profit in all this country, and the older I get the more I feel the force of this duty.

"In my visits I will not forget the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

"It has been so long since I traveled on a circuit that I have to relearn some things in order to meet all demands.

"I will trust in God and go ahead. There is no rest for the faithful pastor. If there are but few appointments, he finds enough to occupy all his time."

The Roman Priests at War with the Schools of the State.

The organ of the Catholic Church, in this city, continues its attack upon our common schools. The virulence of this opposition is worthy the serious attention of every American citizen: "We are no friends to the common school system. We are its unrelenting opponent to every extremity, and under every circumstance." It goes further; it impugns the motives of the State in having public schools:

"There is no real, pure, charitable desire to educate the poor for the sake of education. The object really, but secretly, aimed at is to place another engine of power in the hands of the controlling class. Education is the plea, religious or political effect is the motive."

What "controlling class" established the public schools we do not know; but whatever party it was, we are quite sure if such was the design of their establishment, it constantly defeats itself by the many changes of party. As a party measure, a public school would be a very silly contrivance, not at all adapted to the rapid changes constantly going on in a government based upon public opinion. During the time required for passing a child through the course of instruction he will have been veered through many opposite points of the political compass. That it is possible for a community, say a State, made up of families, to entertain a "real, pure, charitable desire" to educate the children of the poor "for the sake of education," we can readily believe; but we find it much more difficult to believe that a number of men and women who have renounced marriage, with all its refining and sanctified relations, can feel any real desire, whether pure or charitable, to educate children "for the mere sake of education." And we can see how a compact, organized, undying corporation of Jesuits or Dominican priests, subject to no change of party or policy, can make use of a school as an "engine of power," both religious and political. And this we conceive is the true ground of this "unrelenting opposition," that the State school system seriously disturbs the plans of these ambitious, grasping Roman orders.

But if by "religious or political effect" is meant the care which the Republic has for its own life, then this is certainly not a disguised, but the open motive for the education of the people. A monarchy may flourish amid ignorance and superstition, and may afford to consign its subjects to an educational and religious Concordat with foreign ecclesiastics, because information and the dissemination of light are as destructive to the one as they are to the other; but the welfare of a republic consists in the intelligence of the individuals who compose it. And whenever a State shall cease to care for the free education of the children of the poor it will have effectually prepared the way for its own subjugation.

But who are these people that come forward against the State with such unrelenting purpose? The Morning Star and Catholic Messenger says:

"The lay element of the church concurs fully with the clerical on the subject of common schools, and it is an insult to its intelligence to intimate that it is not equally responsible for the views held. No! the clergy are not alone responsible."

Do the Catholics of this city indorse that—are these men, fresh from the monarchies of Europe, full of prejudices at variance with the political system of this country, the fair exponents of our own Catholic citizens? We can scarcely believe it, because many of these Catholic laymen are members of the school board, and profess to be the friends of the school system. As honorable men they would hardly be found holding the position of friends while they were at heart enemies of the system. We think that "it is an insult" both to "the intelligence" and the honesty of this "lay element" to suppose such a thing.—"No! the clergy are alone responsible;" and as such we hold them.

Before the State shall give its consent to turn over the training of its youth into the hands of unnaturalized Roman priests, it would do well to ask these self-asserted aspirants for the control of its science and morals, what references they can give of competency. We suppose that their successes in Italy in elevating either the political or religious condition of its people have hardly been such as to deserve imitation. There for centuries the priests have held every key, every dungeon, every church and every school, uncontaminated by contact with any other faith. Are those multitudes which have to be kept back by foreign bayonets from hurling, by one impetuous movement, the whole Roman hierarchy into the sea, are they the referees of these arrogating hierophants? Austria has had enough of their political and social tyranny, and has broken the iron grasp with which they have held her for a century. Spain has thrown down their monasteries and nunneries, and has forbidden their assembling in conclave. We suppose, then, that we must look principally to Mexico and Central America for the brightest illustration of the signal ability and moral tendencies of these priestly educators, for in those States they still maintain an undivided sway. Judging from such specimens, these gentlemen are assuming to be able to do what they are entirely unequal to, viz, the education of the people, in any wholesome, desirable knowledge; for the very worst and most miserable, the most unenlightened and unenterprising populations in the world are precisely those which have been the longest and most exclusively under their control.

In our paper of the 23d January we gave some items of appropriation made by the State to these "unrelenting" agitators—in the four past years alone some $150,000. During the same period the city also gave large sums. Two asylums received as much as $30,000. Is it any wonder, then, that Catholic churches are springing up on all sides? These gifts from the city and State are probably not touched in the support of their institutions, for the whole machinery of fairs and private begging is meanwhile kept fully at work, in sufficient force to maintain them. Let us suppose, however, that these sums are all consumed in feeding and clothing infants and small children, and large relays of hearty "fathers" and "sisters:" by just that much it effectually frees the resources of the Catholic Church, so that they may be turned in other directions.

What we ask and demand of our Legislature and City Council is that they shall leave these unrelenting opponents who are stabbing the very vitals of the State—that is, at the proper education of the poor, the free, enlightened training of her youth—that they shall not take the money of other taxpayers to build up and feed men and systems, who turn and rend her—men who make a considerable outcry at paying taxes for the support of the public schools, but are clamorous for money from the same treasury for their own institutions.

The Southwestern Presbyterian.

The first number of this paper is upon our table. It is published in this city by the "Trustees of the Depository," and edited by the Rev. Henry M. Smith, D. D. It is a single sheet, about the size of and containing as much matter as the ADVOCATE. We welcome it in these battling times as a valuable aid to the Protestant forces of the Southwest. Dr. Smith is a vigorous writer, and for some time was the corresponding editor of the Presbyterian Index. He will doubtless be assisted by the resident ministers, and will be backed up by the solid men of the Presbyterian Church in this city. We doubt not this enterprise will be an immediate and complete success. Let our Presbyterian friends everywhere rally to its support. Terms, $3 per annum, in advance. Address Southwestern Presbyterian, No. 36 Camp street, New Orleans, Louisiana.

THE JUBILEE AT FELICITY ST.

The Church North has appointed April 4, 1869, for a Sabbath school jubilee, commemorative of the arrival of Boardman and Pillmoor, the missionaries of John Wesley, in America. Our Sunday school jubilee came off on last Monday evening, at Felicity street church. The evening was inclined to be rainy, and the streets were muddy, but the church was packed with children, bright as holly berries in midwinter. Wherever children go their friends have to go; and so older people were well represented in the audience. Under the skillful guidance of W. H. Foster, Esq., the superintendent, everything went off charmingly. The songs were delightfully sung by the sweetest voices this side of heaven—the voices of children. The speeches were well selected, distinctly spoken, well remembered, and not too many of them.

The preachers of the city were on the platform, and Dr. Watkins, of the Mississippi Conference. After the literary feast was disposed of, the whole school and audience went down stairs, and did full justice to a fruit-cake and candy collation. Everybody was in good humor, and the children and some of the grown up people apparently enjoyed this second course full as much as the first.

But the main feature of the occasion was the distributing of premiums to those children who had distinguished themselves by their recitations and good conduct. It occurred to us that fewer premiums of greater value, upon a higher standard of merit, would have been better. But we may not understand this matter as well as those who managed it.

When we reflected that the Methodist churches alone in our country had now over one million six hundred thousand just such children in attendance, every week, upon Sabbath school instruction, we felt strong in our hopes for the future. Surely this is the salt which is to preserve our heterogeneous population. To make these schools efficient, to polish them up and put them in the highest working finish, is an end that should be kept constantly in view by our people and ministers. Even up to this time the mind of the church has not been fully awake to the power of this agency for advancing the kingdom of Christ. There has been a steady growth of Sabbath schools by the increase of the religious population of the country. But the school room has not been occupied as a great captain would select and fortify a strong position. It has not been considered as the very place where the enemy is to suffer a most signal defeat. Why put off attacking sin until it becomes entrenched with age and evil habits? Why, when the heart is young, and like unto the kingdom of God in its docility and truthfulness, should not the Saviour be offered and urged as the proper and the only lawful Lord and Master of the soul? What a field of labor this is for the experienced to intelligibly direct the youth who present themselves to the church for guidance to the glories of the Son of Man! It is a matter of surprise to us that gray-headed Christians should be looking around for the best way of employing their precious hours, and yet overlook this noble employment. The flowers which were planted in Eden and assigned to our first mother for her gentle tending, were not half so eloquent in their budding beauty as are the sweet children and noble youths who are so ready to accept knowledge from their kind instructors. And then what power have those dependent ones in developing the Christian graces of the teacher's heart!—how it can be moved by them to earnest prayer and a true solicitude for the salvation of a soul! Strange, passing strange, is it that the Sunday school room should be almost abandoned by the fathers and mothers of the church. Yet so it is. In entering a Sabbath school one sees directly that many are teaching who need to be taught.

It is here that children ought to be indoctrinated, to be told the real distinctive difference between Protestants and Catholics, between our own form of church doctrine and discipline and that of others. If our honored stewards and leaders and members of long standing would attempt to teach these points to the children, they themselves would the more thoroughly understand the reason of their own hope.

The life of a girl and boy, left to struggle in orphanage through the charities of this world, is the burden of this tale. The sentiments in it are true, and the teaching of it more than usually evangelical and spiritual. For sale by R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street.

PAUL AND MARGARET, THE INEBRIATE'S CHILDREN. By H. K. P., author of "Robert, the Cabin Boy." New York: M. W. Dodd, No. 506 Broadway. 16mo, pp. 178.

Another Sunday school library book, full of the sad pictures of the life of an inebriate's family, with much wholesome counsel interwoven throughout. For sale by R. J. Harp, Publishing House, 112 Camp street.

We have from the publishers:

THE SELECT ORATIONS OF MARCUS TULLIUS CICERO. With explanatory notes by George Stuart, A. M., professor of the Latin language in the Central High School of Philadelphia. Philadelphia: Eldridge & Brother, 17 and 19 South Sixth street. 1869. 12mo, pp. 336.

Fourteen orations of the first orator of the Roman world, from the text of Kayser, are accompanied, in this volume, with notes and references to the best grammars in use in this country. The character of the "notes" leaves the student full room for the exercise of his faculties in the solving of hard sentences—they do not afford too much help. We intend to use it at home.

COUNTING THE VOTE.

That the vote of Georgia was counted by Congress gives great offense to the extreme Radicals. The Independent has a double leaded leader on it, headed "The Latest Disgrace." We give a sample of its periods:

Congress has thus publicly invited every Southern State to make haste and expel every negro from its Legislature. Georgia, by her infamous exclusion of the chief gentlemen who ever sat in her civil councils, voluntarily put herself as much out of the Union as South Carolina did a few years before, when she fired at Fort Sumter. The expulsion was itself a rebellion. It was the overt act by which a State sought to defy the laws of the United States—a treasonable act which Congress has now declared to be, not null and void, but audacious and triumphant.

Why may not Mississippi, catching the contagion of the example, immediately proceed to oust her negro legislators in the same villainous way?

Imagine, now, the indignation which would have made the whole nation hot, if a dozen or twenty white men (instead of black) had been denied their seats in a legislative body to which they were freely elected by a loyal constituency.—How many mass meetings would have been called in all sections of the country! How the press would have suddenly wakened from its customary sleep! How the pulpit would once again have remembered that it had something to say to the outside world! How the whole swelling tide of public opinion would have surged like the sea under a storm!

This is precisely what has taken place in Louisiana—a number of white men, may be "a dozen," have been denied their seats in its Legislature by a negro majority. But that hot indignation, of which the Independent speaks, has been nowhere seen, no not even upon the cheek of that sensitive guardian of "freedom and equality."

Other points in the Congressional scene are worthy of consideration. It is not at all likely that the intense theatric passion of Butler was conceived in the single interest of the Georgia vote. There was a deeper and wider difference between the Senate and the House, which, like a volcanic fissure, just then came to the surface. This antagonism is the beginning of the struggle between the two forces which represent, on the one side, a constitutional Federal Republic, and on the other an unlimited democracy. This is the next act upon which the curtain is about to rise. The four years about to be inaugurated will end in the defeat, probably the obliteration of the Senate, the last exponent and representative of the idea of State sovereignty.

A Yankee Convinced by His Duster.

General King has just returned from British Honduras, after a five years' residence at Manitee. He advises against our people going there. Reasons are that labor is as great a problem in that part of the world as in this; the climate is enervating to the white man, though healthy; the conflict is with a too great vegetation—the forces of nature there are as hard to check as in some countries they are to start. Insects are an item. Society is seriously Africanized, and negroes fill the earth and the atmosphere, the courts and juries, almost to the exclusion of the white man. The negroes are essentially barbarous, notwithstanding the great sums which have been spent upon them by the English government. He tells the following incident in illustration: A Federal officer not long since arrived in Belize. One day going out to take a stroll, he was presently surrounded by an increasing, whooping crowd of negroes. Being closely pressed by them, he took refuge in the shop of a physician and asked what in the world was the matter. Dr. H. told him it was that duster he had on—he must take it off. The Yankee sat quiet for some time, and then said—"Well, I fought for the negro, and I always thought he was a man, with the brains of a man; but now I believe they are nothing but monkeys."

Wholesale Disfranchisement.

The following act is before the Louisiana Legislature. It has been reported on favorably by the Judiciary Committee. It gives the entire control of all elections—State, parish and municipal—into the hands of six men! This most audacious attempt upon the liberties of the citizens has been arrived at by gradual approaches, each one illustrative of the spirit of our people. It remains to be seen whether they will suffer two black and four white men to place their feet upon the neck of the State.

That the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, secretary of State, attorney general, State registrar, and a judge of one of the courts of the State, to be selected by the Governor, shall constitute a board of canvassers, whose duty it shall be to examine the returns, and declare the result of every State, parish, judicial, Congressional and municipal election.

Whenever it shall appear to said board of canvassers, or a majority of them, that by violence, or by intimidation of any kind, or by undue influence, such as threats to discharge from employment, or to do personal violence to any voter, if he shall not vote as his employer shall indicate, or by means of secret political societies, or by interdiction, prohibition or interruption of a free canvass or of a free expression of opinion, either by press or by speech, in any parish or precinct of the State, whether done before or on the day of said election, said board shall delay action on the returns from any such parish or precinct, and proceed without delay to investigate and to ascertain to what extent, if any, the influences thereby illegally invoked, may have controlled the election in any such parish, precinct or poll, and if it shall appear from such investigation that the election in any parish, precinct or poll has been carried or controlled by a resort to violence, to intimidation of any kind, to threat, or to fraud, it shall be the duty of said board to throw out of the count such parish, precinct or poll, and upon consideration of all the facts, to determine whether a new election shall be held, or if it be an office for which it is made the duty of the Governor to issue commissions, whether they shall certify to the Governor the name of the person entitled to be commissioned, or if a Congressman, a person to whom a certificate of election shall be given, and shall act accordingly. If the election of a member of the General Assembly shall be in question, the board shall give a certificate to the person duly elected, on which evidence and no other the secretary of the Senate and the clerk of the House of Representatives shall place the name on their respective rolls, provided that the right to contest the office or the seat of such person shall not be infringed.

FINANCIAL CLASSICS.

Mr. Editor: I have before me the printed minutes of the Mississippi Conference, with statistical reports, for the years 1866 and 1868.

The statistics of 1866 have complete reports of the number of white members from eighty-eight appointments out of ninety, showing an aggregate of 14,756 members. Add 158 for Percy's Creek, and leaving out Bolivar circuit, which has ceased to report, and you have 14,914 as the entire numerical strength of our Conference at the close of 1866.

Last year eighty-three appointments, out of eighty-eight, reported 14,448. Giving Tallahatchie 155 members, adding nothing for Clinton, Louisiana, as it was doubtless reported with Jackson, Louisiana, giving Pearl River 251 members, reported in 1866, and leaving out Bolivar and Black Creek, not reporting either year, and you have 14,753 as our entire strength at the close of 1868, showing a decrease of 251 members in two years.

Our Conference minutes for 1867 were not printed, and I can therefore furnish no data from these.

No financial reports from this Conference were made in 1866 or 1867.

I forbear making any remarks. I furnish the text—others may write the sermon.

L. R. Redding.

Brookhaven, Miss., Feb. 17, 1869.

To the Members of the Mobile Conference, and the Friends of Sabbath Schools Within our Bounds.

Our Conference, at its last session, constituted the pastors of the Methodist churches in Mobile, and the superintendents of the Sabbath schools, a committee to fix the time and place for holding a Conference Sabbath school convention. The committee have decided to have it in this city, and that it commence on the 27th of May.

It is the desire of the committee, in pursuance of the spirit of the resolution, to have it emphatically a Conference convention—to have every part of our territory represented, not only by ministers, but by laymen. We shall endeavor to secure cheap transportation both by rail road and river, of which notice will be given. A programme of the exercises will be printed, and the subjects assigned to different parties will be forwarded to them, with the requisite information.

J. Hamilton, Chairman.

Mobile, February 18, 1869.

MISSISSIPPI MINUTES.

Mr. Editor: Please make the following corrections in the published minutes of the Mississippi Conference. As I collected the money assessed to Yazoo district for the bishops, I am anxious that each work should receive its proper credit. I was particular in reporting correctly to the statistical secretary. The amount collected on Yazoo circuit should be $22 15, and not $22; Durant circuit, $22 25, not $22 40; Black Hawk circuit, $64 80, not $54 80; and Richland circuit has no credit, when it should be $23 45. The whole amount assessed and paid was $250, and not $250 15.

Your's fraternally,

J. M. Puor

The scenery in New Zealand is perhaps the most beautiful in the world. The glaciers from Mount Cook are the largest in the world, with the exception of those in the Himmalaya mountains, and the extreme moisture and the absence of true winter brings them very low in the valleys; while the semi-tropical vegetation, including the elegant palm-like fern trees, grows close to their very edge. These ferns, unlike our dwarf brakes, rise to a height of thirty or forty feet, and make the western coast like a veritable fairy land. Its distance and the sanguinary Maori wars prevent the islands from being a resort of tourists. The summers are delightful, and the ground is always covered with creepers and fragrant plants.

In Greensburg, Louisiana, on the 11th of February, by Rev. J. Nicholson, Mr. S. V. Arbuthnot and Z. J. Waller, all of St. Helena parish, Louisiana.

OBITUARIES.

On Saturday evening, the 20th instant, Isaac R. Randolph, the infant son of John F. and Emma R. Randolph.

Next to the birth of a child, no event in the providence of God can so unite the hearts of parents as its death. We never know each other fully until we have tasted the same sorrow, as well as the same joy.

Mrs. Mariaret Josephine Gillis, the daughter of Aquila Miles, Esq., of Lowndes county, Alabama, was born December 23, 1839. On the 3d of February, 1863, she married Rev. Neil Gillis, of the Montgomery Conference, and died in Bellville, Alabama, November 22, 1868.

Sister Gillis was converted and joined the Baptist Church in 1859, and early in the year 1865 she attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. She was a woman of good native talents, and these were developed and disciplined at the Lowndesboro Institute, where she graduated with honor at an early age. She was a superior teacher, especially of the young, not only winning their affections, but exacting and receiving from them the strictest and promptest obedience. She had the tact, also, to make them love their studies, and advance rapidly in them.

She was of marked individuality, modest, yet calm, firm and dignified under all circumstances. She was not noisy or demonstrative in her religion, but was pure in heart, constantly devoted and consistent in her piety. Hence when she approached the "dark valley" she was not alarmed, but received with calmness the onset of the king of that valley, and triumphed over him gloriously.

She was a helpmate indeed to her husband in his arduous work as an itinerant minister, and he writes me truthfully that "no man ever lost more than I in the death of a wife. I think it would be difficult to say too much for her." In all the relations of life she was a model Christian woman, and but few, if any, excelled her.

She left two children, too young to know and feel their loss. May God guard and guide these inmbs, till at last they find a home with their mother.

A Friend.

Amidst the reiterated "triumphs of the tomb" we are called upon, by the strongest impulse of affection and grief, to weep over the grave of a pious and good woman, Mrs. Louise Jones, wife of Colonel Henry Jones, of Claiborne parish, Louisiana, who departed this life at six o'clock on the morning of the 27th of December, 1868. She was born on the 19th of March, 1827, in Warren county, Georgia.

She had early devoted herself to God, and therefore, amidst the sorrows of suffering friends, a source of consolation remains of which they cannot be deprived. Her long-protracted illness had little alleviation from art, and hope could not cheat into the illusion that it was at all to be deferred by skill. Hers was a religion both vital and practical, not ostentatious nor austere. She practiced as well as professed all the Christian duties, and by her example, in the bosom of her family, amid the circle of her friends, and throughout all the varied relations of life, she forcibly impressed a veneration for the name and attributes of the most High. It was these principles, early imbibed and scrupulously cultivated, that in the trying and awful moments of mortal dissolution imparted calmness and equanimity to her mind. It was such a faith and such conduct that robbed death of his sting and the grave of her victory.

Thou pious, true and good woman, thy presence gilded its dreariness, thy radiance lighted its gloom! Thou hast disappeared forever. Thou hast gone to the land of spirits, and taken thy place among the ransomed of the Lord.

Mr. James Hancock Copes was born November 16, 1816, in Accomack county, Virginia, and was married to Miss Celia Evrne, in the State of Louisiana, on the 1st day of January, 1851, and died on the 6th day of January, 1869, in Pike county, in the State of Mississippi, leaving a beloved wife and six children to mourn their loss.

Although Mr. Copes never made a public profession of experimental religion, nor ever attached himself to any branch of the church, yet there was a manifest change in his conduct for several years before his death. He was a regular attendant on the public worship of God when not prevented by affliction, and was teacher of a class in the Sabbath school, for two years, in the village where he died.

But he is gone to great eternity, and God only knows his place and state.

That his bereft companion and children may seek a more timely preparation for death than he did is the sincere prayer of their friend, J. H. Winborne.

Mrs. Dicy Winn, wife of John A. Winn, and daughter of James and Elizabeth Horton, was born in Orange county, North Carolina, June 8, 1797, and died in Tuscaloosa county, Alabama, November 13, 1868.

In the year 1830 she professed religion and joined the Methodist Church, in which she lived a consistent and acceptable member until her death. She was kind, benevolent and pious. For about four months her sufferings were extremely severe, but she bore them with Christian fortitude. She suffered as a Christian, and frequently spoke of her approaching dissolution. She was ready, willing and anxious to depart and be at rest. She spoke calmly of dying, and died as a Christian. While her bereaved family mourn her absence, they joyfully anticipate a happy reunion in the better land, where the weary are forever at rest. E. Nicholson.

Died, October 20, 1868, little Ella Myrtle, daughter of Ethelbert E. and Alice Tigrest, aged nine months and five days.

HUMAN BLOOD!

ITS MYSTERIES.

It must be admitted by every rational mind that the man who contributes the most toward promoting the happiness and welfare of the human race must of necessity be the most highly esteemed by his fellow-men; and acting upon this principle it appears that Professor R. L. Hamilton, of New York, has, by patient investigation and vast experience, solved the uncertain question in relation to the vexed and important subject of Liver complaint and other chronic diseases.

It will be remembered by the readers of this paper that, a few days ago, Dr. Hamilton's theory of Liver, Lung, and other diseases, was published in connection with many other vital facts, in which all diseased persons are interested; many wonderful cures were published from all parts of the country. Others of a startling and interesting character are given below, which seem to us are evidences that cannot be questioned for a moment, and we advise those who are suffering from the diseases he makes a specialty of to write their full symptoms and get Professor Hamilton's opinion and advice at once.

STRONGLY CORROBORATED!

New York City, Jan. 20, 1869.

TO THE AFFLICTED EVERYWHERE.

During my labors in publishing and editing a newspaper for many years in this city, and also in the performance of my duties as a clergyman in this and other cities, I have become thoroughly and intimately acquainted with R. Leonidas Hamilton, M. D., the justly celebrated Liver, Lung and Blood Physician of this city, who is located at No. 546 Broadway. The doctor was for many years a regular practicing physician, and also for some years a professor in one of our best medical schools, and during such extensive experience he fully realized the inadequacy of the ordinary treatment made use of in all chronic diseases, more especially that class of troubles arising from deranged functions of the Liver and digestive organs. He at once set himself about the study of this class of diseases, determined to make them a specialty. Laying the vegetable world under tribute, he has made discoveries and compounded specifics on sound philosophical principles, which have made the most wonderful cures in the annals of medicine. Liver, Blood, Lung and Nervous diseases are now virtually under his full control, and yield to the magic, subtle power of his remedies. I have myself seen numbers of those who have been saved from the hand of death by his power, when the unfortunate sufferers seemed doomed to an early grave, and all other treatment was of no avail. In addition to what I can vouch for personally, I have ample evidence from other clergymen, physicians and eminent men of the highest character, who have also been saved by this wonderful treatment, and who speak in the highest praise and gratitude of Dr. Hamilton as a physician and a gentleman of honor and integrity. It is but simply stating the positive truth when I say that it is well known throughout this country that where his works are known and the fruits of his skill have been witnessed, he is highly esteemed by the people as the most eminent and remarkable physician in the treatment of chronic diseases, of the age. As the result of a long personal and familiar acquaintance with Professor Hamilton and his unparalleled success as a professional man of the highest order, I frankly express the hope that diseased humanity in every part of our land may avail themselves of his most remarkable skill, and thus share the noble blessings so kindly and freely bestowed upon all. Most respectfully,

REV. W. B. JACOBS,
No. 41 Park Row, Room No. 4.

THE WORK GOES BRAVELY ON!

ANOTHER CLERGYMAN CURED.

The eminent divine, Rev. J. W. Hinkley, of Athens, Maine, writes:

My health has so far improved from the effects of your treatment that I am able to resume my pastorship. Had it not been for your medicine I should not have been living now. To you, with God's blessing, do I owe my worldly existence. I am a living exponent of the worth of your matchless remedies, and I shall hereafter deem it a part of my religious duty to recommend all suffering with diseases of the Liver or Lungs to speedily apply to you. May God's blessing attend your worthy efforts for the relief of diseased and suffering humanity.

CONCLUSION.

It would seem to us that, after carefully looking over the evidence given above, all reasonable persons must be led to the conclusion that there can be no good reason for doubting the fact that Dr. Hamilton is just what he is represented to be—a very successful physician in the treatment of Chronic Diseases. It is useless to cry "humbug," for the above parties have volunteered to give their evidence for the benefit of the suffering, and for no other purpose. All of these testimonials are genuine—are guaranteed to be so, in fact—and it is easy to write to them, and get from their own pens the facts! Any of them will answer all inquiries of this character, either in person or by letter.

NOTICE.

Prof. Hamilton has now in press and nearly ready a pamphlet containing a biographical sketch of his remarkable life, with a fine lithograph picture of himself. This book also contains a complete history of Prof. H.'s wonderful cures—his theory of diseases, and the only natural, safe and positive treatment for all chronic diseases—a valuable work for everybody. DARBY'S

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

Letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Georgia:

Crawfordsville, Ga., Sept. 29, 1868.

Darby's Prophylactic Fluid is an article of little cost, but great value. Its domestic as well as medicinal uses are numerous, while its specialties are most wonderful. I have not been without it for ten years, and no head of a family who can afford to have it should be without it.

ALEX. H. STEPHENS.

The Wonderful Family Medicine.

Letter from the Surgeon General of the late Confederate States:

Richmond, Va., Jan. 11, 1869.

John Darby & Co., No. 160 William St., N. Y. Gentlemen: I have received your letter of the 15th of December, 1868, calling my attention to your (Darby's Prophylactic) Fluid.

I most cheerfully state that the Fluid was furnished to and extensively used by the Surgeons in charge of General Hospitals in the Confederate service, with great benefit to the patients, all the surgeons making a favorable report. A great deal of it was used in the hospitals.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

SAM'L PRESTON MOORE, M. D.,

The Astonishing Disinfectant.

Emory College, Oxford, Ga.,
December 28, 1868.

Prof. Darby—Dear Sir: Having not been engaged for many years in the active duties of the medical profession, I am only superficially acquainted with the claims of your Prophylactic Fluid, but am well acquainted with its chemical elements.

While, therefore, I cannot speak experimentally of the value of the compound, yet the disinfecting and Therapeutic properties of the agents employed in its composition, together with the well known reputation of its discoverer as a chemist, authorize me to regard its merits as of a high order. On the whole, it must be considered as a valuable contribution to the class of articles to which it belongs.

These views, I may add, are sustained by the test many of many competent judges who have tested its properties.

Believe me, dear sir, your's respectfully,

A. MEANS, M. D., LL. D.

Alabama Insane Hospital,
Tuscaloosa, December 22, 1868.

Messrs. John Darby & Co., 160 William St., N. Y.—Gentlemen: I received your circulars at the 10th instant, asking an expression of opinion from me as to the merits of your Prophylactic Fluid. The preparation has been so generally used by the profession and public at large, and so universally esteemed, that it seems to me to need no further recommendation.

As a disinfectant, and remedial agent too, when indicated, it is not excelled by any similar preparation. We use permanganic preparations very extensively in this Hospital, and could not do without them. I consider yours the best and most elegant preparation of the kind manufactured.

Respectfully yours, etc.,

Prof. Darby: When I was President of the Lagrange Female College, of Georgia, I used your Prophylactic Fluid in the College with decided success. Both as a disinfectant and as a remedy for sores and burns, etc., it was efficacious and proved to be what it is represented. Every family and public institution ought to have it. I wish you great success in the sale of it.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

THE DROPPED STITCHES.

BY MRS. M. E. M. SANGSTER.

Sitting alone in the corner,
In her own old easy-chair,
With the firelight softly falling
On her beautiful gray hair,
She's knitting away at a stocking,
Rounding the heel to-night;
And nobody knits like mother,
Though age is dimming her sight.

Glancing like silver, the needles
Backward and forward go,
And the rings on her thin white fingers
Are flashing to and fro.
There's the golden band that has never
Been off since her wedding day,
And the hoop encrusted with diamonds,
From Tom, when he went away—

Away at the beck of fortune,
To the far-off China seas,
While his mother compassed his out-bound ship
Day and night on her knees,
Pleading that wind and weather
For Tom might ever be fair,
And that never the boy might wander
Out of reach of his mother's prayer.

This blue-mixed sock—it reminds her
Of some she sent to the camp,
For Willie to wear, poor soldier boy,
To keep his feet from the damp.
And Willie, he never wore them,
His tired feet were still—
Oh! so still in a narrow grave
On the side of a Southern hill.

It's wonderful—she remembers
The first little sock she knit,
A wee thing, white and dainty,
Marveling, "would it fit?"
Tucking it by in her basket,
As if half it were a sin,
And fearing lest careless eyes should see
The dreams she was knitting in.

Dear little baby Alice!
Never was babe so sweet.
Alice's own are all very well,
But oh! those dimpled feet
That she fondled and kissed so often,
That she taught to walk alone—
They are walking life's long pathway,
They are hurt by many a stone.

Knitting alone is the mother,
And the firelight softly falls
On the pleasant room of the household,
On the beautiful pictured walls;
But I think, when the lamps of evening
Scatter the shadows there,
They gleam over nothing half so sweet
As the mother's silver hair.

And oh! she has dropped her stitches;
To be sure, it is not strange,
Since she herself has been far away
Beyond this world of change;
Away, for a half hour's vision,
To the realms of the brave and leal,
Where the loved of the past are together,
In the land of endless weal.

Laying Up Treasure in Heaven.

MR. EDITOR: Herewith I send you $7 25, in specie, the savings of a dear little child gone home to heaven, which her father handed me yesterday as a contribution to the children's missionary treasury of our Sabbath school. I send it to you at once, that the money may be forthwith invested in the work of winning souls to Christ. May the Lord bless it abundantly, and may many souls have reason to rejoice in the eternal kingdom that this particular sum of money was ever cast into the Lord's treasury.

Please ask the chairman of Foreign Missions to write it down in his book thus:

"The angel of Mary Lou. Littell, $7 25."

Our Sabbath school children are stirring themselves for the missionary cause. All are at work in some way or other, earning and saving money to help in spreading the Gospel among the nations of the earth. One little boy I know picks up chips and other kindlings for his mother, and gets a regular salary for it, and puts that in the treasury. Another helps his mother to take care of his baby sister; another boy helps his father in the garden when he comes from school in the evening; another blacks his father's boots; a young girl assists her mother in the household work, another takes care of the poultry, another denies herself of something, and so on. All are thus at work for the missionary cause, and so are "laying up treasure in heaven."—God bless these children, and prosper the work of their hands!

J. W.

ORELOUSAS, LA., Feb. 8, 1869.

A WORD TO BOYS.—Come, boys, and listen a few moments to your uncle. You have now arrived at an age when you must begin to think about doing something for yourselves. The first piece of advice I have for you is, to do everything well which you undertake. There is but little danger of your being too particular in this respect. A boy who is careful to draw a straight line on his slate, will be very likely to make a straight line through life. There is no position in life in which you will not be called upon to act as exact as possible. Step into the jeweller's shop, and see how careful the workman must be in finishing up the article he holds in his hands. Visit the shipyard, and the man with the broad-ax must learn to hew on a line, or he dismissed. You think of being a clerk. Well, remember that a mistake there is a little less than a crime. I never saw a man who was very particular about his affairs that was not successful. How exact is a military officer in the command of a body of men. A clumsy sailor will never rise to the command of a ship.

But there is one great danger which besets many young men at the present day. It is the disposition to avoid all solid improvement, and take up with subjects that require no thought, and which serve as mere warfare with godliness; our portion will be that of the ungodly. As the tree falleth so shall it lie. We shall reap what we have sown.

"Let my example warn you of the fatal error into which you have fallen," said the gay Sir Francis Delaval, near the end of his life. "Pursue what is useful! pursue what is useful!" Reader, if you would not want to make your life a curse, present and eternal, "pursue what is useful."

SCIENTIFIC.

PROGRESS OF ASTRONOMY.

NUMBER TWO.

But in passing down from Ptolemy, how shall we speak of the dark ages? We see "the angelical doctors" there; but we see them engaged in no very angelical pursuits. The same "wilderness of suns," which looked down upon Pythagoras, is shining on them too; but yet it seems that the great angelicals refuse to dabble in such gross material things as stars or stones. Instead of studying the great world which God has built, they are constructing little words of their own, here upon this atom earth of ours, out of the entities and quidities, and privations and forms, of Aristotle. The categories and predicables are their sun and moon; and the topics are their stars. To these they look for light; in these they search for the glory of God. How the heavenly bodies move, or by what laws they are governed, is a question which they put aside for the sublime speculations, "whether a disembodied spirit can go from one place to another without passing over the intermediate points?" They seek to know, not how many myriads of shining orbs adorn the halls of space, but how many myriads of spirits may dance, all at once, upon a cambric needle's point! And why, indeed, should they care to know how many mansions there are in this our Father's house of the universe; since for aught they know, all created spirits might creep at once into a single needle's eye, and there conceal themselves!

Yet one friendly glance, at least, is due from us to these great "angelicals," for they are near of kin to us. Then hail to you, ye logicizing, metaphysicizing, mighty dreamers of the misty past; we greet you with a kindly feeling from the heart! For had we been born and lived with you, we too, perchance, had been a brother of your craft, and dwelt amid the cobwebs of the brain. But as it is, thank God, born in a better age, we may despise ourselves in you; and quit both you and self to dwell with greater minds, whose glorious thoughts have raised us from these little souls of ours.

During the dark ages the science of astronomy took its flight from the Christian world. If any one, like Gerbert, for example, happened to feel a passion for the study, he had to seek an instructor either among the Arabs or in the Moorish universities of Spain. He could find no teacher in Christian countries. For more than a thousand years the science of astronomy suffered this dark eclipse. But then a more propitious era began to dawn, and continued to brighten with a steadily progressive lustre; until about the middle of the sixteenth century it burst on the Christian world in full-orbed splendor, never more to decline or to become obscured. Nicholas Copernik, an ecclesiastic and recluse philosopher, was the author of this wonderful revolution. No man ever lived, indeed, who was more worthy to follow philosophy than he; for "he was a freeman in mind." His was not the freedom of those, however, who "think much of themselves and know but little;" for he knew how to reverence the mighty past, as well as to think for the everlasting future. His freedom was inspired, not by the intoxicating fumes of a vain-glorious disposition, but by profound love of truth, and consisted in the greatness and the glory of his discoveries.

An intellect like his could not but strive, and strive with energy, after that unity and harmony of principle, that symmetry and beauty of view, which alone can fully satisfy the rational nature of man. Hence the complexity and confusion which reigned in the Ptolemaic system of the world proved offensive to his mind. As this was the system then universally received, and no better was dreamed of, so had Copernicus thought more highly of himself, he might have boasted with Alphonso X.: "Had the Deity consulted me at the creation of the universe I could have given him some good advice." Good advice he could have given, far better indeed than King Alphonso, provided the real model of the universe had been such as it was then distorted and misrepresented in the schools. But shunning the error of the proud Castilian monarch, Copernicus more wisely concluded that the manifold imperfections which had shocked his reason and clouded his imagination, existed not in the divine scheme of the universe itself, but only in the human interpretations of that scheme. Dissatisfied with the labors of the past, and weary of the uncertainty of the "mathematical traditions," he resolved to try anew, and for himself, the stupendous problem of the world. He felt the necessity of the task, as well as the glory of the attempt.

"Then I, too, began to meditate," says he, and for forty long years he continued to meditate. With Pythagoras, and Philolaus, and Anaximander and Aristarchus, he placed the sun in the center of the world, and gave to the earth a motion around that great luminary, as well as around its own axis. Over this sublime scheme his mind continually brooded. He rose above the illusion of the senses, and saw more clearly than mortal eye had ever seen before, that the motion of the heavens is apparent only, while that of the earth is real. Having taken a firm hold of this theory, by means of his clear geometrical conceptions, he made it explain the phenomena of the heavens, far better than they had, until then, been explained; and, by immense mathematical calculations, he verified his explanations. Thus did he find, in some good measure at least, that order and harmony, that simplicity and beauty, for which his rational nature had so passionately longed.

As we have already seen, it was not the merit of Copernicus, that he was the first to conceive the true system of the universe. But if he was not the author, he was certainly the founder of that system. The arguments and views which had imposed on the mighty intellects of Plato, and Aristotle, and Hipparchus, and Ptolemy, and which had led the whole world astray, disappeared before the blaze of his intense mind, like mists before the sun. Beneath his thinking also, those vague considerations which had controlled the opinions of Pythagoras and his followers, assumed a form and a substance, and a radiance, which the winds of controversy could neither blow away nor extinguish. We have said that Pythagoras taught the system which now immortalizes the name of Copernicus; we may with equal justice say that the genius of Copernicus has immortalized the system which Pythagoras taught.—Indeed, if the maxim that "he who proves is the discoverer," be just, then is Copernicus the real author of that view of the universe which bears his name. For he it was whose mind first brooded over this sublime system of the world until he could speak, not as one moved by vague and shadowy conceptions of the distant only, but as one actually inspired by the present possession of a great and glorious truth. "All which things," says he, in reference to his views, "though they be difficult and almost incredible, and against the opinion of the majority, yet in the sequel, by God's favor, we will make clearer than the sun, at least to those who are not ignorant of mathematics."

But while the great work of Copernicus revealed much of the divine order and beauty of the world, it still left much unrevealed. It is easy to see that those who referred the motions of the planets to a false center instead of the true, to the earth instead of the sun, and who, moreover, conceived this false center to be fixed, instead of being, as it is, in perpetual motion, must have entertained the most erroneous and distorted views of their real revolutions. Much of the artificial and highly complicated machinery, which had been invented to explain the apparent irregularities in their motion, was swept away by the Copernican reform; and the heavens put on a new face. Kepler enumerates eleven motions of the Ptolemaic system, which were exterminated by the new system. But although Copernicus thus wiped out these disfigurements, and partially restored the beauty of the world, he yet left much for his successors to accomplish. In reality he merely laid the foundation of the true system of the universe; on which the magnificent superstructure has since been reared by those sublime architects of science—a Galileo, a Kepler, a Newton and a Laplace.

From even this brief review one thing may be learned, and should forever remain impressed upon the tablets of our memory. It is, namely, the arrogance and vile conceit, the mad precipitance and haste with which the untrained mind presumes to sit in judgment on the works and ways of God. Behold Lucretius, for example, that brilliant Epicurean poetizer of the atomic cosmogony—how he vaunts himself! how in spirit he exclaims: If this universe be, indeed, what some pretend, the work of God, then had he consulted me when it was made, I could have given him some good advice! Poor, puny mortal, blinder than the atoms which thou singest! not even knowing that sun, moon and stars are larger than they seem; how canst thou criticise the book of God, ere thou hast learned the very alphabet in which he writes his laws and fixed decrees?

We may be sure that if any imperfection shows itself in the world of God, this only proves the imperfection of our minds, and not of his design or work. For all the huge defects, however numerous or great they be, which seem to cloud the universe, and hide its beauty from our eyes, exist, not in the glorious world of God without, but only in the little, dark and crooked world within; where sin, and pride, and ignorance, and all this cursed vile conceit of little minds, have warped and twisted everything amiss.—Southern Review.

BAPTIST RITUALISM.—Rev. Crammond Kennedy is no longer in the Baptist communion. The Fifth avenue Baptist church of this city has formally resolved to withdraw its fellowship from him for promulgating doctrines not held by that church. He is guilty of the crime of teaching that a Baptist can properly sit down at the Lord's table with his wife, who has been baptized with a little less water than himself. We charge the Fifth avenue Baptist church with a spirit of ritualism as odious and as selfish exclusiveness as arrogant as prevails in St. Albans! What is baptism? It is but a rite, a physical service. What gives it its value? Not its crust, but its kernel; nothing but the spirit of obedience which its observance indicates.—Who has revealed the original method of this rite so clearly in these last days to the Fifth avenue Baptist church that its members know beyond a peradventure just how it was performed? Whence have they learned that one style of ritualism is to be undeviatingly followed? Do they as carefully guard the original ritual of the Lord's Supper? Is it with them a full meal? It was with the apostles; in Jerusalem or Corinth as full a meal as a baptistery is full of water! Who permitted them to abbreviate it to a half mouthful of bread and wine, as stingy of food as sprinkling is of water? Do they recline on couches, as did Christ and his disciples when he instituted the ordinance? The vote excluding Mr. Kennedy from fellowship is said to have been unanimous. Has formalism such unquestioned control of that church? When a very plain-spoken, sensible man learned that not one single evangelical Episcopalian of Long Island was found bold enough to appeal from Bishop Potter's arbitrary robbery of his certified right to vote from Rev. Alvah Guion—a robbery of a single vote which gave the bishopric of Long Island to Bishop Potter's candidate—our friend uttered the single inelegant but expressive word, "Geese!" We trust, overawed and feeble-minded though they may be, that there are yet some meek low-churchmen in the "unanimous" Fifth avenue Baptist church.—Independent.

"LABOR SAVING" IMPLEMENTS.—Labor-saving implements were once thought to be destructive to the interests of the workingman just in proportion as they saved the drudgery of labor. This seems reasonable at first, but a little thought will correct the error. How, then, do the farm laborers thrown out of work by the introduction of improved implements ultimately find work? Plainly by the increased amount of tillage which machinery and tools make possible in the country. In a section where all the soil is under cultivation of some kind, it leads to more thorough systems of farming. In the case of our own country, it leads to the faster extension of civilization westward, the rapid subjugation of wild land, and the better cultivation of that already under the plow. For instance, the Western grain grower who now devotes seventy-five to one hundred and fifty acres to corn and other crops, with the meagre facilities of thirty years ago could not have managed one-fourth part that amount in a similar manner. This increase of agriculture not only keeps good the original number of farm laborers, but creates a new demand for laborers in every other field of industry.—Am. Agric't.

TRUE MERIT vs. HUMBUG.

THE CHARTER OAK COOKING STOVE.

Why More Charter Oaks are Sold.

They have won the confidence of every housekeeper, after years of kitchen service, and not at State Fair trials of forty minutes' duration.

Their REPUTATION is not of MUSHROOM growth, or newly made. Thousands of children born in New Orleans have never eaten any other Bread except that baked in the Oven of a

CHARTER OAK.

The Flues of the Charter Oak are patented, and used in no other stove. It is here where the Charter Oak differs from all other stoves, and for these reasons a Charter Oak Stove will have a better DRAFT, and will DRAW well in any chimney.

THE HOT AIR FLUE
OF THE
CHARTER OAK.

ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE WHEN BAKING.

A thermometer placed in the Oven of a Charter Oak will show the same temperature of heat under the fire box as at any other point of the Oven, thus showing the great importance of FILLEY'S HOT AIR FLUE to equalize the heat in the Oven, so necessary to bake Wholesome Bread.

A CHARTER OAK STOVE

will cost but $2 or $3 more than the ordinary Cooking Stoves of the day. It will last, in a well regulated kitchen, from twelve to fifteen years, and no reflecting housekeeper would think of saving $2 and risk the entire purchase money upon a worthless Cooking Stove, whose only recommendation may be that it is $2 cheaper.

Every CHARTER OAK guaranteed, or the money refunded.

SYNOPSIS OF CHARTER.

The plan proposed by the Mutual Aid and Benevolent Life Insurance Association is as follows:

1. Each person, upon enrolling himself or herself as a member, shall pay into the Treasury a membership fee, if between the ages of

16 to 30, inclusive, the sum of.....$10 00
31 to 40, inclusive, the sum of..... 15 00
41 to 50, inclusive, the sum of..... 20 00
51 to 60, inclusive, the sum of..... 25 00

which payment constitutes him or her a life member.

2. A Life Insurance Policy is issued for a sum equal to one dollar for each enrolled member appearing on the books of the Association at the decease of said member.

But in no event shall the amount paid on said policy exceed $5,000.

3. On the death of any member an assessment is made upon each policy holder for one dollar and twenty-five cents, payable at the office of the Association, within thirty days after notification thereof, by publication in one daily newspaper published in the city of New Orleans, in English and one in French, for five consecutive days, and if the policy holder resides out of New Orleans he shall be notified in writing.

4. Should the number of members exceed five thousand, the assessment of $1 25 will be reduced in proportion to the number of members exceeding five thousand.

5. Should any member fail to pay the assessment in the time specified, he forfeits all previous payments or credits.

6. All accumulations from whatever source, such as forfeitures, interest, etc., shall be credited upon the books of the Association to the members pro rata, to be withdrawn in lieu of assessments.

ADVERTISING AGENTS,

WHAT ADVERTISERS SAY.

The firm, whose letter we print below, gave us in 1867 what was then the largest contract we had ever received for our "Lists of One Hundred Local Newspapers." The fact that they this year renew the order and increase the amount is the best argument we can give that these "Lists" are good advertising mediums.

LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL,

MANUFACTURERS OF

AXES, SHOVELS, SAWS, ETC.,

No. 118 WATER STREET,

PITTSBURG, PA., Dec. 3, 1868.

MESSRS. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.—Gentlemen: One year ago with much hesitation we gave you an advertisement for one of your Lists of One Hundred local papers; a very short time thereafter we unhesitatingly added two more Lists of One Hundred papers.

But a short time elapsed before we were inquired of on every side for "Colburn's Patent Rib Jacket Ax," proving to us that your plan of Lists had reached the very parties to whom we wanted to introduce the new patent Ax.

The year having now nearly gone by, we cannot but believe your system of advertising by "Lists of Local Papers" is just the kind of advertising we want, and we to-day forward you an order still adding one more List of One Hundred papers, making the number now altogether four (4) Lists of One Hundred (100) local papers.

The more we talk with newspaper agents and editors' agents the more satisfied we are that the arrangement we have made with you is preferable to any we have ever heard of. The merit of the Ax its if has, of course, something to do with the great demand for it, but we are satisfied that by your system of advertising by "Lists" we have accomplished in one year what would have ordinarily taken us five years to accomplish. Respectfully,

LIPPINCOTT & BAKEWELL.

The National Publishing Company of Philadelphia have been among the largest advertisers in our "Lists of Local Country Newspapers." Their bills for these alone amount to not less than $20,000. The testimony of their letter may be taken as an answer to those who inquire if these "Lists" can really be good advertising mediums.

National Publishing Company,

J. R. JONES, President.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 10, 1868.

MESSRS. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., 40 PARK ROW, N. Y.—Gentlemen: It is more than three years since we began advertising in your "Lists of One Hundred Papers" each, and in that time have given the "List System," as originated by you, a thorough trial, and we can now say it is the cheapest and best general advertising medium we have any knowledge of.

We have tried every possible mode of advertising, having dealt with the press direct, and through nearly every advertising agency in the country, and have no hesitation in saying that your lists have paid us fifty per cent. better than any other way. Respectfully,

NEW PATENT PIANOS.

RAVEN & BACON, (established in 1829.)

Warerooms, Nos. 644 and 646 Broadway NEW YORK.

Manufacturers of Piano Fortes, with the patent Combination Sounding-boards,

Patented August 14th, 1866.

This invention, introduced exclusively into our Pianos, is of the greatest advantage to the tone of the instrument, as it affects the sounding-board, the very soul of the Piano, and produces thereby a pure liquid tone greatly superior in quality and power to that of the ordinary Piano. The sounding-board released from its connection with the Piano case, and resting upon under sounding-boards, is relieved from the rigidity caused by such connection, and its vibratory quality increased.

Our Pianos are first-class in every respect, and purchasers will have not only our own guarantee as to their quality, but also the guarantee of the reputation of the instrument, obtained from the experience of our patrons, who have used them for a generation. All lovers of this eminently household instrument, as well as parties proposing to purchase new Pianos, are invited to call and examine our assortment.

EAST ALABAMA COLLEGE,

AUBURN, ALABAMA.

The Spring Session will begin on the 20th of January, and close on the 14th of July, 1869.

The educational facilities here furnished to students are equal to those of the best colleges in the country. Young men may take a regular or partial course, but will be required to have at least three studies.

Auburn is situated directly on the Montgomery and West Point Railroad. Its health and social advantages cannot be surpassed.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, Spring session,	$48 00
Tuition, Fall session,	32 00

Board in private families, from $15 to $20 per month.

Students in indigent circumstances, by applying as such, will be required to pay in advance only half the price of tuition, and by messing they may greatly reduce the expense of board.

Music, in currency	30 00
Use of instrument, in currency	7 50
Incidental fee, to be paid by every pupil, in currency	2 00

Ornamental branches at usual prices.

Traveling ministers of Louisiana Conference charged no tuition in English and Latin.

Every boarder will furnish a pair of blankets, a pair of sheets, a pair of pillow slips, a coverlet or spread, and towels and lights.

For catalogues, containing full particulars, address the President. july25 3m

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL Session of the

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE,

MACON, GEORGIA,

Begins on OCTOBER 5, 1868, under the direction of the following

FACULTY.

Rev. J. M. Bonnell, D. D., President.
Rev. C. W. Smith, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Astronomy.
Rev. W. C. Bass, A. M., Professor of Natural Science.
C. Schwartz, A. M., Professor of Latin and Modern Languages.
Mrs. A. R. Leuk, Assistant in Literary Department.
Carl Hintz, Musical Director, (with ample assistance.)
Mrs. E. T. Crowe, Teacher of Drawing and Painting.

CHARGES.—There are three terms in the scholastic year. For each term the charges, which are to be paid at the beginning of the term, are as follows:

Regular tuition, $30. Board including washing, fuel and lights, $75. Incidental fee charged to day scholars, $1.

The following are optional: French, $15; Instrumental Music, $25; use of instrument $3; Vocal Music in class, $2—not charged to those who take Instrumental Music; Drawing, $15; Painting, $20.

Pupils who take French may be excused from Latin without affecting their graduation.

Special advantages provided in the departments of French, Music and Painting. For further information address the President.

J. M. BONNELL,
sep5 tf President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, AT Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

ELEVENTH SESSION.—TERMS REDUCED.

The exercises of the school will be resumed October 1, 1868.

The best facilities are afforded for the acquisition of a first-rate education, and at less expense than in any other school of high grade North or South.

There is but one session in the year and every student who enters the school is expected to continue to the close of the session in July, and will be held liable for the bills in all cases, unless protracted illness shall compel his removal.

Every pupil is required to furnish his own bedding, towels, wash-basin, mosquito bar etc., all marked distinctly with his name; also a satchel for dirty clothes.

SPECIAL CAUTIONS.

Parents and guardians are earnestly requested not to give their children or wards much spending money. It is unnecessary, and has a pernicious effect upon mind, morals and health.

A sufficient amount must be deposited for the purchase of books, etc. Their pocket money should be limited by the discretion of the Principal.

It is urgently requested that students be prompt in their attendance. A few days' absence at the beginning is often a serious disadvantage during the entire session.

TERMS.—Board and Tuition per session, $350.

PAYMENTS.—$150 in advance, balance on 1st March.

Tuition of day scholars, per month, $7. Payable monthly, in advance.

Modern languages will be taught when the wants of the school demand it, at an extra charge as low as it can be made.

No expense is spared to secure as teachers gentlemen of the highest character and ability.

HOMES IN BRITISH HONDURAS. FREE FROM TAXATION.

THE PUTNAM IMMIGRATION ASSOCIATION (Limited) of Belize, British Honduras, has been founded, under the laws of that Colony, with a Capital Stock of $500,000, coin, in five thousand shares of $100 each.

The Association has purchased of the Colonial Government an area of about 500 square miles of territory, comprising some of the choicest Sugar, Tobacco, Corn, Rice and Cacao lands in the Colony.

The Association will sell to each family that will locate upon and occupy the land between this and the 12th of July next, 160 acres at 50 cents per acre, payable in Five Years from date of settlement, without interest. The Association will donate to every Parent and Child of each family, who may be living on the land at the end of the second year from date of settlement, one Share of the Association's Stock, the value of which will be greater than the price paid for the land.

An adult male member of each family who will locate, put up a cabin, and clear enough land to provision his family, will be recognized as a bona fide settler.

These lands will produce from three to five hogsheads of Sugar per acre, without cultivation. Sugar loading can be carried on during eight months of the year. Two crops of Tobacco, Corn, Rice, Plantains and many kinds of vegetables can be made in a year. The country is healthy, and white men can work to better advantage in the warm months than in the Southern States. These facts are demonstrated by the experience of 350 Southerners now settled in the Colony.

No family should go that has not means sufficient for its support for twelve months after locating on the land.

The steamship Mexico will leave New Orleans for Belize on the 20th of February. The steamship Trade Wind on the 24th of February, and make the trip in five or six days. First class passage, $40, greenbacks; second class, $25. The Trade Wind makes a monthly trip.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, Jackson, Louisiana,

was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and transferred to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845. It is now under the joint patronage of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

The College exercises were necessarily suspended during the war; but were regularly resumed, after reorganization, on the first Monday in October, 1865. The approaching session will open on the first Monday of October next.

Tuition, $75 per annum, payable semi-annually, in advance.

Boarding can be obtained at from $20 to $25 per month.

The Buildings, Libraries, Apparatus, Laboratory and Society Halls, the location in point of beauty, health, ease of access and good society, are all unsurpassed by those of any institution the Southern States.

The past history of the College is the pledge its future prosperity.

The Board and Faculty promise the public that nothing shall be wanting on their part to secure the thorough education of the young men committed to their care, in both Preparatory and Collegiate Departments.

The old students, alumni, and friends of the Institution, are requested to give publicity to the full reorganization and opening of the College, as stated above.

TUITION.

Academic Department, per term.....$35 00
Preparatory Department, per term..... 30 00
Contingent fee, per term..... 2 50

A fee of $5 is charged those who attend the schools of Chem. and Nat. Phil.

Board, exclusive of washing and lights, $16 to $20 per month. By messing it can be obtained even cheaper than at these rates.

Sons of ministers of the Gospel in the regular work, and those studying for the ministry, are admitted free of tuition.

The whole expense for the scholastic year, including everything except books and clothing, will be $250, payable one-half at the opening of the session and the remainder on the 15th of February. If the student wishes to board in a private family it will be $280. This great reduction in the price of board and tuition will bring the advantages of the University within the reach of those whose limited means have heretofore placed the highest scholastic training beyond their reach, as well as secure the patronage of those who, on the score of economy, are sending their sons out of the State to be educated.

Especial attention is called to the fact that preparatory students are taught exclusively by the Faculty.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

From the N. O. Price Current.

The general market has exhibited rather less animation since our last issue. A fair business, nevertheless, has been done in most branches of the wholesale trade, country merchants being engaged in replenishing their stocks, and planters in laying in plantation supplies, while a moderate amount has been done in the execution of orders from the interior. Sugar and molasses have been in active request, and all the receipts have met a ready sale from the levee, at full prices, especially for the former, in which there has been a further advance. Western produce continues extremely dull. There is no corn here, and only a limited stock of the descriptions of flour wanted; but there is an ample supply of provisions, which are dull and drooping. Pork, in particular, sympathizing with the Western markets, has sold at a decline.

Our accounts from the country are far from being favorable to the next crop of sugar. There is general complaint of injury to the seed cane, of protracted rains preventing plowing, and of the negroes showing less disposition to make labor contracts. In some districts planters are compelled to go abroad in search of hands. In others there is less complaint. The roads are still in a very bad condition, and prevent hauling crops to the landings.

The river remains about the same, being three feet nine inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the 19th instant:

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales.. 14087
Lake	18
Arkansas	971
Mobile	170
Florida	2
Texas	35
Total	15289

On Saturday the movement commenced with moderate sales at about previous rates, but with a subsequent improvement in the demand, and much less disposition on the part of the factors to realize, prices soon stiffened and for the rest of the day ruled ⅛ to ¼c. higher, low middling closing at 26½ to 26¾c., and the business summing up 3,800 bales. On Monday, under the stimulating influence of favorable accounts from Liverpool, prices further advanced, opening at an improvement of ¼c., and closing at figures ½ to 1c. higher than Saturday's rates. The sales, however, were on a moderate scale operations being restricted by scant supplies, most factors having covered up their samples, anticipating a further rise. Hence the business was confined to 2,900 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with an active demand, but operations restricted by the scant supply offering, and the high pretensions of factors, low middling ruling at 27¾ to 28c., with very little to be had under 28c., but toward the close the decline in gold and exchange having prevented buyers from going on at the extreme rates, factors were willing to accept 27¾c.—that is for the limited supply actually offering, the bulk of the stock being held for still higher figures.

This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 10,200 bales.

The receipts at this port since the 1st of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 651,884 bales, against 433,080 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports, up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 17,861 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 12,463 bales to France, a decrease of 145,688 to Great Britain, and of 9,371 to other foreign ports.

Referring to our remarks above, we quote as follows:

Ordinary	25½ to 26
Good ordinary	26¾ to 27
Low middling	27¼ to —
Middling	— to 28½
Strict middling	— to 29

SUGAR.—The demand has continued good since our last review, and the receipts have sold readily at higher prices. The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 600 hogsheads at 9¼ to 10¼c. per pound for inferior, 12¼ to 12½c. for common, 13c. for fair, 14¾c. for fully fair, 15½c. for prime, 15½c. for choice, 16¾c. for yellow clarified, and 17½c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—The demand has again been active, and the receipts have sold readily at still higher prices.

FLOUR.—Prices for double extra and the grades below have been firm, owing to the light supply of these descriptions.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—An increased number of visitors appeared at General Grant's headquarters to-day.

Among the visitors was a delegation of representatives for the Southern States, who had determined, a few days ago, to represent the condition of the South to General Grant. Among the delegates to-day were Whittemore, of South Carolina; McKee, of Kentucky; Kellogg, of Alabama; Kitchen, of West Virginia; Blackburn, of Louisiana; Boyden, of North Carolina; Hamilton, of Florida; Bowles, of Arkansas; and Armell, of Tennessee.

They said they had called to inform General Grant of the confidence of the loyal people of the South in his administration, and to make known the status of the South, etc., and expressed the desire that the South would be represented in the cabinet.

General Grant gave no indication of his purpose as to the selection of his cabinet, but said that during his administration affairs would, he hoped, be conducted in such a manner as to satisfy his friends in the Southern States; and that changes of military commanders would directly be made, the selections for command being made from those in sympathy with the incoming administration.

He intimated that Sheridan would, for the present, remain in his command in the West.

General Grant stated to-day that he had concluded that he would not make known the names of those who are to compose his cabinet to anybody, not even the nominees themselves, until their names are sent to the Senate, and that the nominees would be as much surprised as anybody else when they read the announcement of their nomination.

General Grant sent to the State Department to learn what had been the custom among Presidents heretofore, as to the date of appointment of cabinet officers. It was found that as a general thing the nominations have been made within a very few days after the inauguration of President, two days being about the average time.

It is expected that, in view of the fact that the present members of the cabinet will resign on the 3d of March, thus leaving the heads of departments vacated, that General Grant will nominate his cabinet on the day after his inauguration.

NEW YORK, March 1.—This morning's Times denounces the proposed exclusion of Georgia and Louisiana from Congress, and says Grant is using his influence against the exclusion.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The city is alive with excitement to-night. Processions of firemen, soldiers and other organizations, headed by bands, are arriving from the cities in the North, and several torchlight processions are moving in the streets, and transparencies are here and there displayed. Flags are flying from hotels and other buildings—the pavements are literally crowded with persons passing to and fro. About ninety per cent. of them are strangers, who have arrived during the past ten hours.

It is estimated that already there is a greater number of strangers in the city than was ever known to be present at an inauguration, and information has been received of the coming of ten or twelve thousand additional visitors on the various railroads leading to this city, to-night and to-morrow morning.

The Inauguration Committee have decided to raise the number to two thousand tickets, and the prospect is they will all be sold; and as each ticket admits three persons—one gent. and two ladies—the expectation is that there will be about six thousand persons at the ball to-morrow night.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—Mr. Johnson publishes a two column address to the people of the United States in defence of his course as President. He invokes the consideration of the people in behalf of his predecessor.

Mr. Johnson says he would have achieved much more present popularity had he consented to co-operate with parties who desired to carry on the government outside of the Constitution. He does not regret any of his actions, all having in view the restraint of Congress within the limits of the Constitution.

A committee, headed by A. T. Stewart, of New York, visited the office jointly occupied by Grant and Sherman, and after handing Grant a check for sixty-five thousand dollars, they handed Sherman a deed for Grant's house and furniture and a check for the balance of the hundred thousand dollar subscription.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The following are the closing paragraphs of Mr. Johnson's address:

"Calmly reviewing my administration of the government, I feel that, with a sense of accountability to God, having conscientiously endeavored to discharge my whole duty, I have nothing to regret.

"Events have proved the correctness of the policy set forth in my first and subsequent messages. The woes which have followed the rejection of forbearance, magnanimity and constitutional rule, are known and deplored by the nation.

"It is a matter of pride and gratification, in retiring from the most exalted position in the gift of a free people, to feel and to know that in a long, arduous and eventful public life, my action has never been influenced by desire for gain, and that I can in all sincerity inquire whom have I defrauded, or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind my eyes therewith.

"No responsibility for wars that have been waged or blood that has been spilt rests on me; my thoughts have been those of peace, and my effort has ever been to allay contentions among my countrymen. Forgetting the past, let us return to the first principles of the government, unfurl the banner of our country, and inscribe upon it in ineffaceable characters: 'The Constitution and the Union, one and inseparable.'"

GENERAL GRANT'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—After taking the oath, General Grant said:

Your suffrage having elevated me to the office of President of the United States, I have, in conformity with the Constitution of our country, taken the oath of office prescribed therein.

I have taken this oath without mental reservation, and with the determination to do to the best of my ability all that it requires of me. The responsibilities of the position I feel, but accept them without fear. The office has come to me unsought; I commence its duties untrammeled. I bring to it a conscientious desire and determination to fill it to the best of my ability to the satisfaction of the people.

On all leading questions agitating the public mind I will always express my views to Congress, and urge them according to my judgment, and when I think it advisable I will exercise the constitutional privilege of interposing a veto to defeat measures which I oppose, but all laws will be faithfully executed, whether they meet my approval or not.

I shall on all subjects have a policy to recommend, but none to enforce against the will of the people. Laws are to govern all alike—those opposed to as well as those who favor them. I know no method to secure the repeal of bad and obnoxious laws so effective as their stringent execution.

The country having just emerged from a great rebellion, many questions will come before it for settlement in the next four years which preceding administrations have never had to contend with.

In meeting these it is desirable that they should be approached calmly and without prejudice, hate or sectional pride, remembering that the greatest good to the greatest number is the object to be obtained.

This requires security of person and property, and for religious and political opinion in every part of our common country, without regard to local prejudice. All laws to secure these ends will receive my best efforts for their enforcement.

A great debt has been contracted in securing to us and to our posterity the Union. The payment of this principal and interest, as well as the return to a specie basis as soon as it can be accomplished without material detriment to the debtor class or to the country at large must be provided for.

* * * * *

Legislation upon that subject may not be necessary now nor ever advisable, but it will be when the civil law is more fully restored in all parts of the country, and trade resumes its wonted channels. It will be my endeavor to execute all laws in good faith, to collect all revenues assessed and to have them properly accounted for and economically disbursed. I will, to the best of my ability, appoint to office those who will carry out this design.

In regard to foreign policy I would deal with nations as equitable law requires individuals to deal with each other, and I would protect the law-abiding citizen, whether of native or of foreign birth, whenever his rights are jeopardized or the flag of our country floats. I would respect the rights of all nations, demanding equal respect for our own. If others depart from this rule in their dealings with us, we may be compelled to follow their precedent. The proper treatment of the original occupants of this land, the Indians, is one deserving of careful study. I will favor any course toward them which tends to their civilization, Christianization, and ultimate citizenship.

The question of suffrage is one which is likely to agitate the public so long as a portion of the citizens of the nation are excluded from its privileges in any State. It seems to me very desirable that this question should be settled now, and I entertain the hope and express the desire that it may be, by the ratification of the fifteenth article of amendment to the Constitution.

In conclusion, I ask patient forbearance, one toward another, throughout the land, and a determined effort on the part of every citizen to do his share toward cementing a happy Union; and I ask the prayers of the nation to Almighty God in behalf of this consummation.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

A letter from Rev. M. S. Andrews, a presiding elder of the Montgomery Conference, says: "The preachers have started off well, and so far, on my first round, I see quite a disposition on the part of the churches to increase their efforts to support their pastors. In almost every instance the assessments of last year have been increased."

A PRESIDING ELDER WANTED.

ANACOCO CIRCUIT, Feb., 1869.

MR. EDITOR: In the days of old, when Francis Asbury, Peter Cartwright, John Lane, Thomas Owens and others of their time flourished, Methodism was a weak and tender plant. These were times when the presiding elder's advent was hailed with great joy. But now, after she is deeply rooted, has rejoiced, and "laughed and grown fat," she does not seem to have need of the presiding elder's power. In olden times, when there were plenty of turkeys and pigs, we could stand under the preaching of the presiding elder; but since the emancipation of slaves, and the extirpation of our poultry and stock, by the "blues," we can hardly imagine a presiding elder's preaching so powerful. This is hard for us to own up, but we will make a "clean breast" of it, and ask the presiding elder not to think hard of us. Let's turn to "that memorandum book" that we didn't carry to Conference. On Saturday night, December 5, we were sitting before a cheerful fire, "tossed by wars without" (a P. C. on one side and a P. E. on the other) and "fears within," (a fear lest a mother might be suffering,) contemplating a trip to Mississippi. It has been made. Friends and relations so long loved were greeted, and, after a few days, we were "in the saddle again," bound westward to the "sunny land with blazing skies of blue and gold," where mud is deep, and where waters deeper invite the followers of "John the Immerser" (which are many) to repose in peace on "liquid beds." That is the place we started to, to cultivate the little plant called Methodism, that is now about three hundred strong on this part of "the wheel." Its administration, however, is weak. On a four weeks' circuit we have only one ordained deacon, and he, possessing a mill and store, "has pierced himself through with many sorrows," so that he cannot baptize unless they go to his mill pond. The preacher in charge can't baptize, for the license is not old enough yet. So we can't take in anybody, unless we had a presiding elder to baptize them. The appointments showed that we had an older, but we were disheartened when told that he never went anywhere without a steamboat to go on, and we knew there were no such creatures in this whole country. Vox in dolore, etc.—this information is come to me in my sorrow. If we could just remember some of our Latin, we could give vent to our feelings in such a manner as to excite the pity of the learned. But we have hope when we consider that our poultry and pigs have never seen the "blues"—though they have an occasional touch of "the blacks"—and we assure the presiding elder that we can furnish more presiding elder meat (wild turkeys) than all the elders in Louisiana could eat. Mr. Editor, please speak a word for us; tell the elder if he is "in the mud" to come up here and we will help him out. Say, also, that if he has got a plenty, not to bury it like he did last year, but come up and help us. We've a hard row to hoe—thirteen appointments to make, immersionists, fatalists, sin-contentedists, immoralists and unruly Methodists, all to fight, churches to build, Sunday schools to watch, the ADVOCATE to brag on, and all this for one poor little youth to do is enough to make him lay down his arms and cry: "I'll fight no more." There is an old saying "that little dogs are good to set big ones on," and if he will come we'll try our best. "Here are some of those who "play upon a harp of a thousand strings," "what believes as edication is not necessary to a Gospel minister," who have not changed their minds, and if they could see the elder they might change. Then we are in the dark concerning anniversaries, "Bruice's" evangelical theater, and we want to be posted as to the way of using these "triggers." Here is a fellow, too, named Southwell, who "don't believe in baby sprinklin by those not shripterally organized," and on this account he is insulted at our inviting him to commune with us; and we want to get the elder to explain it to him how it is. We can't, for the milder we look the madder he gets. These are facts not founded on fiction, but on reality. Oh! we hope he'll come; then we'll be like the old woman with the dirt oven—"we'll neither borrow nor lend." Our first quarterly meeting is appointed for Oak Grove, on Toro, twenty miles from Anacoco prairie; but what hurts us is, we are like a fellow in jail who "knew where he was to be hung, but did not know when." Mr. Elder, if you've any word just tell friend ADVOCATE, for he is certain to come this way about once a week, and we'll try and have a turkey, if they gobble by that time, or a pig anyhow.

Your's in love, labor and expectation. His lacrimis non Movetur Milo. O me miserum.

P. PRAIRIE.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON.

It is a usage in the political circles—"more honored in the breach than the observance"—to turn away from the setting, and kneel to the rising sun. The case of Mr. Johnson is not exceptional. He has played no secondary or unimportant part in the sanguinary drama of the last eight years. He has stood like granite for the Union and the Constitution. The former is safe for the present, and the latter is likely to be the winding sheet of its distinguished defender in the political grave to which he is rapidly descending. He could have no more honorable burial. It has cost us the Constitution to save the Union. That the latter exists in reality is no evidence that the former has any other than a nominal existence. It is struggling in the last agonies of the embraces of the cyclops of faction and party. Mr. Johnson must be content to share the fate and the honors decreed to human fame and ambition. He has not been without his errors, and perhaps crimes.—With a large share of public and a modicum of private virtue, he has not been without a liberal share of the vices of humanity. He has done much that is highly commendable. He has been neither the Levite, nor the priest, nor the good Samaritan to the suffering people of the South. But he has manfully stood by his "policy," and for us it was more generous and benevolent than that of the party. He has broken the force of the crushing blows which have been constantly falling from that vast and ponderous machine of political power. He has stood by us and shared the blows, the dangers, and the sufferings of our people. We can cheerfully forget the wrongs he may have done us in the remembrance that we have been common sufferers in the present; and, perhaps, in the future we will not be divided. But to close this summary: I shall scarcely be excused by this generation for accusing or commending the clemency and justice of President Johnson; in a day of equal retribution, in the august presence of an infallible judicature, the meek and innocent spirits of the widow Surratt and her orphaned daughter, the untimely ghost of the unfortunate warden of the Andersonville prison, and the spirits of the many victims of, and sufferers from, military commissions and despotism for the last four years, will have something to testify or allege against the justice and humanity of his excellency. His treatment of the vanquished verged on an abuse of the rights of conquest; his military orders were but little less sanguinary than his military subalterns; and in the just computation of his motives, whatever is subtracted from animosity must be accredited to temper; and whatever may be fairly deducted for this natural infirmity of great men, must be attributed to the influence of national compassion for a fallen people; yet, even that was accompanied by concomitants which made it less grateful to the recipients than generous in the donors. In the adjustments of the compensations of human actions, it may be that the balance of rewards may be sufficient to alleviate the purgatorial penance of the retributive justice of history.—Correspondence of Selma Times.

GOLD CONTRACTS.

The late decision of the Supreme Court sustaining the validity of gold contracts is of great importance. The suit upon which this decision is based arose in Erie county, New York, and is known as the case of Rhodes vs. Bronson. A mortgage was executed by the defendant for $1,400, "payable in gold or silver coin," lawful money of the United States. When it became due, in 1865, gold was at a very high premium. The defendant offered to redeem his debt in greenbacks, which the plaintiff refused to accept, holding that the contract was for "gold or silver coin." Suit was then brought to recover, and the proceedings passed through various stages, until they reached the Court of Appeals, which decided that greenbacks were lawful tender, and that the creditor must take them in satisfaction. Upon this, the appellant carried his suit to the Supreme Court of the United States, which rendered its decision on Monday, holding coin contracts to be valid, and binding parties to their specific terms.

The decision proper is based upon a bargain made before the passage of the legal tender act; but a dictum of the court goes beyond this, and lays down the rule that parties to a financial agreement may make their own terms; and where these specify that an obligation shall be redeemed in coin, no other currency shall be available.

The following are the words of the Chief Justice:

"The currency acts themselves provide for payment in coin. Duties on imports must be paid in coin, and interest on the public debt, in the absence of other express provisions, must be paid in coin; and it hardly requires argument to prove that this positive requirement cannot be fulfilled if contracts between individuals to pay coin dollars can be satisfied by offers to pay their nominal equivalent in note dollars. The merchant who is to pay duties in coin must contract for the coin which he requires. The bank which receives the coin on deposit contracts to repay the coin on demand. The messenger who is sent to the bank or the custom house contracts to pay or deliver the coin according to his instructions. These are all contracts, either express or implied, to pay coin. Is it not plain that duties cannot be paid in coin if these contracts cannot be enforced?"

While this is only a dictum of the court, it will carry with it the force of a real decision, because it discloses what the decision will be in any case of the kind coming before the court. This relieves Congress of the necessity of enacting a law to legalize gold contracts, opens a way for gold to enter once more into circulation, and relieves business men of some embarrassments under which they labored in relation to this matter.—Kennebec Journal.

THE Christian Work of London contains interesting details of the Protestant movement in Spain. We learn from it that there is difficulty in supplying the demand for neat copies of the New Testament. An immense number of tracts has been circulated. On January 15, in the midst of the elections in Madrid, one of the distributors, entering to deposit his vote, was relieved of an armful of tracts by president, magistrates, counselors and officers, all eagerly begging for 'a Protestant tract.' The same day a military company was drawn up in line to receive each a tract. A little later, another company sent to ask the same favor. The priestly party do their best to oppose their influence, and leading articles in the papers discuss their character. One of the most distinguished professors has published a very bold address to the fifteen thousand ladies who, under priestly influence, lately asked for the suppression of religious liberty. It is stated that the people in their Republican risings, as at Malaga, have behaved with exemplary order, while subsequently the troops were guilty of great excesses. Almost universally in Spain the Republican hails Protestantism, almost without knowing why. He loves liberty; he knows that his country groans under the slavery of ignorance, superstition, and priestcraft; and he is persuaded that there is some occult connection between the Gospel, human liberty, and progress. At the same time many are drawn to Protestantism only in its negative aspect, and welcome it alone because it is opposed to the impostures of Rome. In Cordova three hundred Gospels were disposed of in two days. In Valladolid, the old capital of Castile, the public attention has been arrested by the addresses of the devoted Carrasco, who has been preaching in what was the church of the Jesuits. The second night four thousand crowded to hear him, and the next night large numbers could not gain access to the church. After considerable difficulty, a good first floor has been secured for preaching in Madrid.—New York Independent.

GRANT AND BISMARCK.

The President elect having sent a copy of Badean's Military History of U. S. Grant to Count Bismarck, received the following letter in acknowledgment:

BERLIN, 1868.

DEAR SIR: Baron Gerolt has transmitted to me a copy which you have been kind enough to inscribe to me, of the history of your military career. I hasten to return you my hearty thanks for a work which promises me the enjoyment of reviewing in a succinct shape that gigantic struggle, the varying phases of which I did follow at the time with interest. It will be a permanent source of gratification and pride to think that I am owing the volume now open before me to the kind and sympathetic feeling of the very man who took Vicksburg and Richmond. May peace, restored by you, afford equal scope to your powers with equal benefit to your country, and may the present interchange of friendly sentiments between us prove a good augury for the continuance of those relations so happily established between America and Germany.

Believe me, dear sir, ever your's very sincerely, BISMARCK.

WE LEARN from the Boston Journal of Chemistry that the director of the Gardens of Hamma, near Algiers, has succeeded in rearing ostriches in a park supplied with a palisade enclosure containing a quantity of fine sand. Before depositing her eggs, the female ostrich seems uneasy, and seeks a suitable place. She forms a small hillock of sand, slightly concave at the top, and lays one egg in it, to which she afterwards adds others. She lays every two days for two or three months, with an interval of repose. Incubation lasts forty days, during which time the male and female sit alternately. On the 12th of March five were hatched, and three the day after. At the end of May some of the ostriches had laid their fiftieth egg. The males take great interest in the incubation, and only leave the eggs when pressed by hunger; and then the females take their place, but not for such long periods. An extra circulation goes on in the uncovered portions of the male's body, to generate the heat necessary for the process. There is no reason why they could not be reared in our own country, if we only had an efficient bureau of acclimatization.

TRUE RICHES.

FROM THE GERMAN.—BY S. H. BROWNE.

'Twas a grand and courtly conclave
Met at Worms' imperial hall,
Where King Francis asked his princes
"Which was the richest of them all?"

Deep they drained the golden goblets,
Reveled high and feasted well;
Boasted each his lands or treasures;
"Which was richest!" none could tell.

"Glorious," said the Saxon monarch,
"Is my realm, whose mountains bare
Yield exhaustless stores of silver,
Which her prince and people share!"

"Mighty cities, wealthy convents,"
Cried Bavaria's stalwart lord,
"Of my land's surpassing splendor
Most undoubted proofs afford."

"Mine is famed for vast abundance,"
Urged the Elector of the Rhine;
"Golden harvests crown her valleys,
Vineyards pour the luscious wine."

Spake then Everhard the Bearded,
Wirtemburg's beloved lord:
"Of my country, poor and feeble,
I can speak no vaunting word.

"It can boast no mines of silver,
Towns and towers are few and small;
Yet it holds a priceless treasure—
Rarer, richer than them all!

"For upon the darkest midnight,
Or in forests lone and drear,
Could I trust my meanest subject
With whate'er my heart holds dear!"

Then a shout of praise and triumph
Rang through Worms' imperial hall:
"Great is Everhard the Bearded,
He is richest of us all!"

Rich is he whose mountain coffers
Yield him stores of virgin gold;
Richer he whose vales and vineyards
Ripened shocks and clusters hold;

But the truest, noblest treasure
That an earthly prince should prize
Is the people, fond and faithful,
On whose love his heart relies!

To the Younger Members of My Conference.

I wish to say a few things on the physical aspects of preaching. Many of us are troubled with weak lungs. Many die, indirectly, one way or another, or at least become very much enfeebled, from the physical effects of preaching. I have studied this matter a little, and am well settled in the belief that it is always unnecessary.

Preaching is a good remedy for weak lungs. Generally, perhaps, no better is known. The lungs do not labor in vocal utterance, properly performed, but very little if any more than in sitting still or sleeping. The lungs are not supplied with muscles, and are therefore not intended to perform labor. They only give direction to the atmospheric air in the system, and particularly to gather the oxygen and give it a plentiful and rapid circulation. This is one of the principal means of promoting animal vitality.

To a man who cannot preach much because of weak lungs it might well be said that there must be some mistake about it, because persons of one-twentieth part of his strength have been known to perform vocal utterance as much as would be necessary in preaching a sermon, four or five times a day, and every day in the week, and continue in good and improving health. A child a month old has not the fortieth part of the strength of a feeble man, and yet he will preach—i. e., perform vocal utterance—four or five times a day, if need be, and continue vigorous and healthful. But if you will look at the manner in which he does it, you will see the reason of the failure in the other case.

It is not because of the preaching, but of the manner of preaching. Any man, with strength enough to walk, can preach several times a day without injury, if he do it correctly. Nature has provided a way. And he may preach very loud, too—loud enough to be heard by two thousand persons out of doors. A child, a very few months old, will do this. But notice his manner of performance. Here lies the great secret. He does not make sound in the bronchial tubes, but performs all the labor with the two large abdominal muscles with which every person is supplied. These are nearly, if not quite, the strongest muscles in the whole body, and their chief office is to do the labor necessary in vocal utterance.

A child cries according to nature—according to the strictest and best rules of elocution. He throws the sound downward—strongly downward—and carefully cultivates and improves the deep guttural tones. Having imbibed no bad habits of utterance, he follows nature. He speaks with little labor, and that little is performed by organs made strong for that purpose. He never complains of weak lungs. And if you look at the substance of his lungs, you find them clearly incapable of labor. They have not much more strength than strong, tough jelly.

Look at a dog barking. He is unsophisticated, and follows the strictest rules of elocution. Nature is a good teacher, after all. Look at the vocal utterance performed by a crow, or an owl, or a peacock, and look at their lungs. They use the guttural sounds according to the strictest science.

This, you may say, looks plain, but how am I to apply these principles in my own case? This may not be very easy for you to do, but it is by no means impracticable. You have got into a bad habit, and must break it off. If the habit is strongly fixed, as in many cases, you will find it difficult to begin the reform in the pulpit. The best way is to begin and practice a good deal out.

The first and most indispensable thing is to think and well impress yourself with the great awkwardness, and moral and physical disadvantage to yourself and everybody else of hollowing in the pulpit. The pulpit is a place to talk, not to hollow and scream. With the latter everybody is always offended. A hollowing sermon never passes for half its value. The man next you, greatly your inferior, is by everybody esteemed your superior because he does not rant and scream in the pulpit. The man who "can't help it" has never done much toward making a man out of the material which God gave him. He who has not conquered and kept control over himself is a feeble creature, and will never turn the Mississippi river upside down.

Next, practice privately. Repeat short pieces. Throw the sound downward, downward, downward. Always keep the lungs well inflated. Oxygen is cheap. Take care against making sound in the bronchial tubes, exhausted of air. Speak as though you were trying to break loose a handkerchief tied round the loins. Do not try to finish the sentence without a fresh supply of air. By a little practice you can take breath in the middle of a word. Speak while walking briskly up hill. Lay down rules, and bring the man to them by force. Any man can do anything.

You must depend more upon your will than your library. Authors on elocution, for the most part, are too fastidiously scientific to be natural. Porter's Rhetorical Reader, an old book, almost out of print, is far superior to many later improvements. I have frequently thought it would be a good thing to have reading taught in schools. And not long since I remember asking a friend, who had much practice in both preaching and teaching, why this was never done. His reply was: "It ought to be, but the people won't bear it."

Well, I am fully aware you were none of you ever taught to read at school or college; but you can, nevertheless, by observing these few hints, and enlarging and improving upon them, improve your speaking, some of you, and at least save the lives of many of our valuable ministers, if no more. You can do that much.

The Temperance Cause Must be Revived

MR EDITOR: I travel extensively, and most of the time on the great public thoroughfares, where I come in contact with and see society where they are mostly away from the restraints of home influence, but as a general thing I see the better classes, so called. The sad results of my observation are: I find not only intemperance, for that is too mild a term, but drunkenness, in its most degraded forms, fearfully and alarmingly on the increase among all classes and all colors. I have seen, within the last six weeks, not less than fifty drunken men, and scores more making rapid progress in the same direction.

In the early part of my ministry, during fifteen years, I sought, on all proper occasions, opportunity to lecture on the subject. I was connected with all the temperance organizations in the land. I looked in all my efforts, as did thousands of others who were faithfully engaged in the same cause, to the immediate and direct reformation of the fallen; and seeing so many run well only for a season, and with many of them a very short season, I was induced to believe that the grace of God alone was sufficient to reform men who had fallen into the constant habit of drunkenness; and I am still of the same opinion, but I now see that to reclaim the abandoned and shamefully fallen is by far the smallest part of the great good done to society in general by the temperance reform. It certainly arrested thousands by timely causing them to soberly reflect, while as a preventive on the youth of the country it was a grand success. Another and important result of the temperance movement was that it acted as an important auxiliary to the pulpit in keeping up a healthy and proper Christian sentiment upon the subject. As an evidence of the truth of these good results, I have seen more drunkenness in the last three months than I witnessed in the good old times of temperance societies and temperance lectures in fifteen years. Then the number who were becoming drunkards was annually diminished. Now, in the absence of those organizations, the number is daily and alarmingly increasing. Something must be done by the church and the friends of humanity to arrest this dreadful growing and constantly increasing evil. The church cannot, under the present distempered condition of public feeling, successfully administer discipline, from the plain fact that in many places there are not enough of living to bury the dead. I scarcely know a single case, among that class of merchants who are engaged in the grocery business, that does not wholesale and retail, and give away wine and strong drink—many of them elders, deacons and leaders in the different branches of the church of God.

They reconcile, or at least make the effort, their consciences by giving a part of their ill-gotten gains to the church. With such sacrifices God is not glorified. Such offerings are more offensive than swine's blood or the price of a dog. We need make no pause here to argue. All enlightened Christian consciences know that it is fearfully wrong to sell or habitually drink intoxicating liquors. No religious man will be guilty of it. Such, however, is the universal power which the use of strong drink has gained, while the watchmen have slept, that now no minister may attempt, single handed, to arrest the evil in his charge. There are so many of this craft, who work day and night, that if the minister attempts to put it down he stands a very good chance to be removed from that charge, or put suddenly out of the synagogue. But while we are ready to admit that the evils of intemperance are hoary with age and almost universal among our race—that drunkenness has fortified itself against tears, prayers, exhortations, and even death and hell—yet the friends of humanity have the Gospel and the good sense of mankind on their side; and if the friends of humanity would only marshal their forces, there are, after all, more for us than against us. Will we make another effort? Surely the church will.

But how shall we begin, where shall we begin, and when? Some one must begin. I have conversed freely of late with prominent ministers in the different branches of the church, and all favor, in substance, the following resolution, which I will respectfully state:

Resolved, That all the ministers throughout the land, by common consent, agree to prepare and preach a sermon, on the first Sabbath morning in May next, and that all the church journals friendly to the movement publish the resolution.

Such a beginning would at once arouse the whole church from her slumber on this all-important subject, and open the way for discussion and still further effort. I pledge myself for one, and others will no doubt do so, to lecture on the subject in future on all proper occasions, hoping that God, in his providence, will direct the mind of the people to such means as may prove more effectual in arresting the terrible ravages of intemperance.

WOMAN.—ADVISED AGAIN.

MR. EDITOR: There is no end to the advice, reproofs and correcting suggestions which have been bestowed upon women of late years. Therefore let me say a word.

One says the great fault of modern female writers is "an almost entire want of originality." A great want, certainly; but a remedy is kindly suggested. Ladies, "cease to imitate; draw from your own stores of thought." If this is true—if women do dress up other people's ideas merely to see themselves in print (do you see the joke?)—what is the use of correcting their folly? You might as well tell a lame man to walk without limping, or bid a near-sighted one to observe some object in the distance.

We all know that we can obtain no water from an empty well, even with the very best sort of a patent pump.

"They find it more easy to imitate than to draw entirely from their own resources." It is questionable whether a savage possesses or is devoid of resources of his own, but certainly the resources of the cultivated mind are at least partly made up from the acquirements of others, who have lived, learned and labored, leaving the result of their efforts for the benefit of those who came after them. If utterance is denied to high and noble thought, to elevated holy feelings, because such have glowed and seethed before in human breasts, then must speechless silence reign forever.—This cannot be. No, while we belong to one brotherhood, made in one glorious image, we must have a thousand thoughts, ideas, feelings, in common! Let other differences be what they may,

"One touch of nature makes the whole world kin!"

Even wit is not necessarily original if Pope's definition is true—if it is something

"Often thought before, but ne'er so well expressed."

Then let us not forbid "the sisters" to speak or write, if they will. If any one has a single talent, let it be put out to usury with the many, till the Lord's coming.

"Too many mistake their vocation." Do they? Are there not rather too many who sit down in self-indulgent idleness, seeking their own individual good, as they see it, laying the mollifying unguent to their hardened consciences that it is not a woman's business to say or do or write anything for anybody, outside or beyond her own family, unless it be solely in behalf of selfish enjoyment or benefit.

Are there not too many who think so much of their appetites—what they eat and what they drink each day—that they totally forget to provide the soul with its portion of meat in due season, and the poor thing starves and nearly dies in consequence of the neglect?

Then the other momentous duty involved is the question of wherewithal shall we be clothed? Never mind the valuable gem within the casket, but bestow your labor upon the outside of the box. Keep it burnished as bright or brighter than your neighbor's, though you labor from sunrise till sunset. Should the jewel within become tarnished by neglect, work or have the outside irreproachable.

In all candor, now, one must own that where you find one woman neglecting her home duties for the sake of literature, you will find one hundred who neglect them for less worthy considerations. I do not think the dear creatures need any checks and discouragements put in their way to damp their ardor in the cause of letters. Quite the contrary. They need some enthusiastic spirit to awaken them to a proper appreciation of this innocent, agreeable and useful occupation of the pen. It is one which neither compromises delicacy nor detracts from refinement. The very system required in writing has a tendency to exercise and regulate the mental powers and elevate the tone of the mind.

Talents are allowed to be the excuse, sometimes, for writing. But if we allow none but the divinely gifted to exercise this privilege, then you might with the same propriety say that every woman who is not beautiful should be veiled. As there are members who turn wearily away from the face of beauty to receive a glance of kindness or a look of love from some plain looking, homely creature, so there may be and doubtless are some who, being unable to follow genius in her flights, prefer to dwell unambitiously and happily among the commonplace objects of familiar every-day life.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

LETTER FROM LANCASTER, TEXAS.

MR. EDITOR: I stopped the first year in the Texas Conference, where I remained but one year, and added to the church two hundred persons. I then transferred to this, the Northwest Texas Conference, and was assigned to the Waxahachie circuit, which had four appointments. At the close of the Conference year we found we had added to the church two hundred and sixty-four persons in my own bounds, and fifty-six outside, and had increased the four appointments to twelve, which were then divided, and I was assigned to this, the Lancaster circuit, it being the northern half of the original. God has abundantly blessed my efforts for good, for which I feel grateful.

With many wishes for the success of your paper, I am,

FORTY years ago there was one Catholic priest in England who had been a clergyman of the established church—the Hon. and Rev. George Spencer. Now there are forty such priests in the archdiocese of Westminster, and about two hundred in the country. Lay converts are probably in proportion. The returns the last year in the metropolis are two thousand two hundred; and the converts—or perverts—are mostly from the upper and middle ranks of society.

PROFESSOR CHEVALIER, a celebrated French aeronaut, has lately arrived in New York city, and announces his intention to attempt in the spring an aerial voyage across the Atlantic. He once went from Paris to Russia, a distance of seven hundred miles. He believes that there are continuous currents at an elevation of about two miles, which may be depended on to carry his balloon, which is ninety-five feet high and one hundred and fifty feet in diameter, and will contain fifty-two persons.

Tent and Saddle in the Holy Land.

FROM ALEXANDRIA TO RAMLEH.

BY REV. R. A. HOLLAND.

CHAPTER I.

Serene as the face of a Madonna was the morning that saw the French steamer Lyssus, with our party on board, weigh anchor in the port of Alexandria and set sail for the Holy Land. Hopefully throbbed, like a huge heart, the engine, hopefully splashed the revolving fins of the propeller, hopefully strutted the staid mate between the rails, of his elevated bridge, and hopefully from the scenes of Egypt to which I was then bidding did I turn to think of that land whence eternal truth dawned upon the night of the world. Pompey's Pillar had faded into invisibility, the Pharos had hidden in the receding horizon, the wind mill on the beach had its busy farewell, and we were on the calm Mediterranean, nothing to engage the mind own stereoscopic views of —its own quaint cartoons of ation. ROMANISM IN ITALY.

BY REV. E. H. PILCHER, D. D.

I arrived in this far-famed old city of the seven hills on yesterday, January 1. The time is too short for me to say anything in regard to Rome itself, so I will in this letter refer to the state of things in the new kingdom of Italy. I reached Italy from Germany, across the Alps, by way of the Brenner pass, which was a magnificent ride; not that there was anything pleasant in being trundled along slowly in a cold car, but the scenery was so magnificent, so grand and interesting. But I did not intend to describe this, and therefore pass on. I spent one day in Verona, the birth-place of Paul Veronese, the famous artist, one day in the city in the sea, Venice, and looked at and into St. Mark's church, one day at the ancient walled town of Bologna, and went into their churches; and one week in Florence, including Christmas day. As would naturally be expected, we visited the principal churches, not only to see their adornments and architecture, but to ascertain, as far as we could, how much hold Romanism had on the minds and affections of the people. I propose to give you the impressions made by what I saw, and also the information I have obtained from reliable sources in regard to the state of Romanism in Italy. In all the towns or cities that I have visited I found but very few devotees in the churches; and those that were there were for the most part mere cunes—old women appearing to be of the mere dregs of society; a very few in any place from what might be considered the better class of society. I thought possibly this might be because it was the week day, and that it might be otherwise on Sabbath and fete days. I expected, of course, to find the churches crowded on Christmas day; you may judge of my surprise to find there was plenty of room in all of them. In the great Duomo—the great cathedral of Florence—the dome of which exceeds that of St. Peter's at Rome, and is the largest in the world, there was a full chorus of priests, and a full choir making some of the grandest music I ever heard. There were nearly as many priests as people. The people who were there appeared mostly to be there for the same reason that we were—to see the performance and to hear the music; for, though there were priests at some four or five different altars going through with the various maneuvers, there were but a very few about them, most all gathered around the apartment where was the greatest show. I was told by a gentleman who attended service at this same cathedral on the Sabbath, that there were about fifty priests, robed and performing their parts like puppets in a show, and about forty people to see them. Another fact I observed was that of those who did attend there were but very few who appeared to be intelligent and as belonging to the better class of society. But few, apparently intelligent men, were attending, and those of that class who did come, for the most part, paid no attention to the crossings and bowings that form a part of the ceremonies. I made up my mind from these facts that Romanism had but a very feeble hold on the affections of the Italians.

I, however, did not stop here, because I thought that my conclusions after all might be erroneous; so, therefore, I applied to the best sources I could for information. For instance, I saw placarded on the streets caricatures of the pope, and was told that that was a matter of frequent occurrence. I was told by gentlemen who were in a position to know, that the priests do not receive the ordinary respect due to gentlemen in the streets or in the railroad cars; that pains is taken to show them indignity; and that the pope would be deposed from his position very quick if left to the Italians. Popery, if not dead in this country, is at least moribund. But it will die hard, for the reason that it is so strongly fortified, not in the affections of the people, but in their vast churches, cathedrals and incomes. The priests go through with their ceremonies and foolerics, whether the people are there or not. I went into one church in Florence to see some old and superior frescoes, and found a priest there at one of the altars, clothed in his richly embroidered vestments, attended by one boy to assist him, going through with all the forms and ceremonies, without a single person seeming to pay any attention to him; to be sure there were four or five women in different parts of the vast building, but they were concerned with their own beads and looking at some of the images at different altars. It seems to make no difference to them whether the people are there or not. Why should they care? They are not concerned for the conversion or spiritual reformation of the people. So that they in some sort meet the conditions on which legacies have been left to them is all they care for, as they have no religious principle about it.

Any one visiting this country cannot fail to remark the difference between the Romanism here and in the United States. There the presence of a dominant Protestantism compels it to a better manifestation than here, where it has had its own way for so many centuries. It is true, men have arisen from time to time in this country to denounce its crimes and atrocities, as Girolamo Savonarola, who was born at Ferrara in 1452, became a monk and prior of St. Mark's, in Florence, but by his faithful and earnest expositions and denunciations of the wickedness of the pope and priesthood, was hung and then burned in a square in that city, on the 23d day of May, 1498, with two of his disciples, and their ashes were thrown off the bridge into the Arno. This, you know, has always been the great argument with Rome to silence her opponents. I have no doubt of the sincerity of many of the people, but as I have looked at the priests performing their pantomimes, I have said to myself, over and over again, they cannot believe that these things are pleasing to God. The priests in this country are not that meek-looking class of men that they are in the United States. When any of the latter come to Rome, they find things so different from what they did at home that, if they are sincere men, as some of them are, they become sad and disheartened. This fact was related to me by one who knew of it: A priest from the United States, accompanied by a young man, a student of his, visited Rome. They saw so many things to shock their sensibilities that the young man said to him, "Father, what do you think of these things?" "Well, my son," he said, "I don't know what to say; only that this is the saddest day of my life. I had expected to find things about right here, but I shall go back with a broken heart." There is, undoubtedly, more of the spirit of reform at home than there is here, and more than is agreeable to those in authority in the church in this country. A member of the Society of the Propaganda told a gentlemen who now resides here, and told me, that it had been settled that there should never be a cardinal in the United States, because they could not be trusted.

Such, then, is the state of Romanism, that, while it is dead in the affections and judgments of the mass of the intelligent and best informed in this country, it holds on to the effete forms and show of pomp and parade with a death grasp; still is destined to wane before the approaching light. The increase of liberal principles in politics and religion must throw the monster and monstrous system into the shade. The great want of this country now is, a host of active, intelligent, evangelical missionaries, to prevent the people from falling into infidelity. As they, in general, know nothing of Christianity only as it is associated with Romanism, they are in great danger of rejecting all religion.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

SPURGEON'S METHODS.

The Dissenters of Great Britain are alive to the importance of the lay element. The most conspicuous example, however, is with Mr. Spurgeon. As soon as a person joins his church he is encouraged to exercise his gifts in the Sabbath school, the prayer meeting and other religious gatherings. If he gives evidence of gifts and graces, and has the time, he is invited to become a student in his college, where he is put through a course of reading and practical education. On the Sabbath he must take his place in the streets and parks of London, and exhort and preach to sinners. In this service the student comes in contact with infidels, and scoffers of every degree; he is intercepted in his discourse with their objections and arguments, which he prepares to meet and answer in his subsequent discourses. After two years' training in this practical, though rugged school, he goes forth with the authority of the church to preach the everlasting Gospel. This course gives no time for the student to finish, as it is called, his education. He considers life too short and time too precious to waste it in these confused doctrines; to ponder over the dead languages, mathematics, the sciences and polite literature, and the study of the multitudes of religious dogmas of the day.

He has them in the college long enough to teach them the rudiments of a pastor's education. They are informed where they can lay hold of the key to open such books of instruction that will further aid them in their duties. He impresses upon them that the true pastor is a student for life—up to the day of his death he must be a student—that the book of history, nature, providence and grace is ever open for their inspection; but above all, he must make himself acquainted with the practical duties of the Bible, and preach from a warm, full heart, the truths therein contained.

Mr. Spurgeon being sick, I have heard one of his pupils preach for him in his tabernacle. When he was converted he was quite ignorant of letters, having never attended school. His young wife taught him his alphabet. He entered Mr. Spurgeon's College, and in two years after took charge of a congregation near London. The sermon he preached that day, to over five thousand people, was marked with a divine unction. It was scriptural, spiritual and powerful; his language good; his manner devout, humble, and yet courageous. It made a good and a deep impression on that immense audience, and I came away glad to have had an opportunity to have heard one of Mr. Spurgeon's College-read men.

This mode of fitting men for the pulpit and the practical duties of the ministry met with great opposition, as was expected, from those interested in the old theological way. But lately Mr. Spurgeon held in his tabernacle an annual meeting, to which many of the literati of England were invited to take part in the exercises. Among the speakers on that occasion was a Mr. Allen, said to be one of the most learned and accomplished scholars of the age, and who is at the head of a theological school, a gentleman who is keenly sensitive to, anything illogical, or ungrammatical, or want of finish in the style of a public speaker. This Mr. Allen said: "After having witnessed for a number of years the practical workings of Mr. Spurgeon's system, he felt it his duty in this public manner to take back all that he had written and said against this mode, believing, as he now did, that it had accomplished more good than any other system yet devised." "But," he added, "I would suggest to my friend, Mr. Spurgeon, whether it would not improve his scholars, and make them more useful, if after he got through with them, they were sent for a year or two to receive a polishing in some of the theological schools." To this Mr. Spurgeon replied that he was glad that the professor had made so good a confession before so many witnesses. But there was one remark that he could not let pass unchallenged. His opinion was that this polishing process to which Mr. Allen alludes, would have the effect to wear off the true steel of the blade. That in the study of the dead languages, dry theology, they would lose more of the real fire of preaching than they would acquire. For his part, he would venture to make a suggestion to the professor, that after he had gotten through polishing his students, he would send them to his college to learn the real practical duties of the pastor.

Dining at the house of a friend, at Lydenham, a gentleman present from one of the provincial towns informed us that in the church of which he was a member they had for their pastor a most excellent man, and one of the most finished scholars in England. He was eloquent in speech, logical in his discourse, blameless in his life, and popular in his address, and yet with all these accomplishments on his part, with a good choir, fine organ, and an accomplished organist, in a building of faultless architecture, and commodious and comfortable pews, there was very little interest in the services; a very few except the members attended; a slight cold or an appearance of a storm would often keep them away. He was prepared to say, that as for the influence of their chapel on the great multitude outside of the church it was a failure. But, said he, about a year ago one of Mr. Spurgeon's [illegible] began, took possession of a chapel that was nearly run out by an unpopular man, commenced preaching and visiting, and now every seat is filled long before the services commence.

There are now thirteen young Japanese at school in this country, nearly all of them supported by their friends at home, and six of them sent by the Japanese government to study our language, literature and civilization. Of these, seven openly avow their faith in Christianity and five have been baptized. Six or seven of these young men are about to receive commissions from the Mikado's government, and will remain in this country longer than they had before expected. They were brought up as disciples of Confucius.

Bishop Simpson has been attending the Methodist Conference of Mississippi. General Beauregard gave the colored preachers half-fare tickets on the railroad of which he is president, which was quite a novelty in the way of favors to them. So strong was the social prejudice, however, that but two white men were present during any part of the conference services, and but one white woman—and she a teacher of the negroes.

He who seeks perfection on earth, would have nothing now for the saints to find in heaven.

JOHN WELCH.

One of the most eminent witnesses to the name of Jesus in the sixteenth century was John Welch, whom some of our readers will remember as the son-in-law of John Knox, the Scottish reformer. His father was a man of property and reputation, and suffered great shame and sorrow by the early profligacy of his son, who, after frequent displays of depravity as a boy, joined a horde of thieves on the borders of England, who lived by robbing the two nations. In this company the Lord sought and found the lost one, and made him a rich example of love and mercy. His preaching was blessed to the ingathering of very many souls in Scotland and the north of Ireland. When a time of persecution arose, he was imprisoned and then banished to France. In his exile he speedily acquired a knowledge of the French language, and began to preach with great boldness and with great success.

For nothing were the faithful ministers of these trying times more remarkable than for their prayerfulness. The biographer of Mr. Welch says: "He reckoned the day ill spent if he staid not seven or eight hours in prayer;" and he used to say that he wondered how a Christian could lie in bed all night and not rise to pray. During his residence in France a friar, traversing the country, knocked at his door and begged a night's shelter, which was cordially granted. There was only a partition of boards between Mr. Welch's chamber and that to which the stranger was conducted. In the dead of night the friar was surprised by hearing a low but constant whispering noise. With the prejudices of his class against the Huguenots, he supposed that his host was conversing with the devil. Determined to ferret out the horrible wickedness, he next day feigned sickness and entreated another night's lodging. When night came he watched with some trepidation for what it might bring forth; and, after Mr. Welch's first sleep, the whispering noise began. The friar crept stealthily to the chamber door, where he could distinctly hear, and was amazed to listen to "such communication between God and man as he knew not had been in the world before." He was there convinced of sin, and there also the Saviour of sinners was revealed to him. In the morning he sought an interview with Mr. Welch, and made a confession of the faith, which was maintained through life.

Persecution scattered his French congregation, and he was permitted to return to England. Still, however, he was detained as a prisoner in London, and there he died in his fifty-third year. In his latter days, though he could walk feebly, his knees lost all sensibility, and the flesh became hard like a sort of horn, from his continual kneeling in prayer. The following extract from his meditations in prison will show how his soul was supported through all his trials:

"What is there under this vault of heaven, and on this old worn earth, which is under the bondage of corruption, that should make me desire to remain here? I expect that new heaven and that new earth, wherein righteousness dwelleth, wherein I shall rest for evermore. I look to get entry into the New Jerusalem at one of the twelve gates, whereupon are written the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. I know that Christ Jesus hath prepared them for me. Why may I not, then, with boldness in his blood, step into that glory where my Head and Lord hath gone before me? Jesus Christ is the door and the porter. Then who shall hold me out? Will he let them perish for whom he died? Will he let the poor sheep be plucked out of his hand for whom he laid down his life? Who shall condemn the man whom God hath justified? Who shall lay anything to the charge of the man for whom Christ hath died, or rather risen again? Come, Lord Jesus, and tarry not. Why should the multitude of my sins affright me? Why should I faint in this my desire to be with thee? Greater glory will thy grace to me be unto all eternity. Oh, when shall I see thy face! Truly I would long for that scaffold, or that ax, or that cord that might be to me my last sleep of this my wearisome journey to go to thee, my Lord. Thou who knowest the meaning of the Spirit, give answer to the speaking, sighing and groaning of my spirit. Thou who hast inflamed my heart to speak unto thee this language of ardent and fervent desire, speak again unto my heart, and answer the desire which thou hast made me speak unto thee. All glory be unto my God! Angels and saints, praise ye him. O, thou earth, ye hills and mountains, be glad! you shall not be wearied any more with the burden of corruption, whereunto you have been subject through the wickedness of mankind. Lift up your heads and be glad; for a fire shall make you clean from all your corruption and vanity, wherewith many years you have been infected. Let the bride rejoice, let all the saints rejoice; for the day of the marriage with the bridegroom, even the Lamb of God, is at hand."—Witness.

The Gentleman.—I have stated that the forbearing use of power is a rare attribute of the gentleman; indeed, as we may say that power—physical, moral, purely social, or political—is one of the touch-stones of genuine gentlemanship. The power which the husband has over his wife, in which we must include the impunity with which he may be unkind to her; the father over his children, and the old over the young, and the young over the aged; the officer over his men, the master of a vessel over his hands, the magistrate over the citizens, the employer over the employed, the rich over the poor, the educated over the unlettered, the experienced over the confiding, the keeper of a secret over him whom it touches, the gifted over an ordinary man, even the clever over the silly—the forbearing and inoffensive use of all this power or authority, or a total abstinence from it, where the case admits it, will show the gentleman in a plain light. Every traveler knows at once whether a gentlemanly or rude officer is searching his trunk.

But the use of power does not only form a touch-stone; even the manner in which an individual enjoys certain advantages over the others is a test. No gentleman can boast of the delights of superior health in the presence of a languid patient, or speak of great good luck when in hearing of a man bent by habitual misfortune. Let the man who happily enjoys the advantages of a pure and honest life, speak of it to a fallen fellow-being, and you will soon see whether he be, in addition to his honesty, a gentleman or not. The gentleman does not needlessly and unceasingly remind an offender of a wrong he may have committed against him. He cannot only forgive, he can forget; and he strives for that nobleness of soul and manliness of character which impart sufficient strength to let the past be truly the past. He will never use the power which the knowledge of an offense, a false step or an unfortunate exposure of weakness, gives him, merely to enjoy the power of humiliating his neighbor.—Dr. Lieber.

The last total eclipse was fruitful in observations and speculations. M De Grety, who observed the eclipse from Aden, says that he saw three protuberances on the moon's limb, and drew seven figures of them. Owing to the clouds, he saw only the latter part of the eclipse, and his eyes were not fatigued; so that these phenomena, visible just as the moon was passing off of the sun's disk, were observed only by him. These observations, which need confirmation by other observers, would indicate that three volcanoes on the further side of the moon were in a state of eruption, and that the jets of vapor or ashes which were thrown up were illuminated by the sun, and thus for the first time visible to us, confirming Schmidt's disputed observations on the crater Linnæus.

Great sensation has been created in Spain by the assassination of the Governor of Burgos. The deed was done while the Governor was engaged in preparing an inventory of the property of the cathedral, which the provisional government have, it seems, resolved to take possession of on behalf of the Spanish nation. The dean and chapter of Burgos have been arrested on suspicion of having instigated the assassination. The crime has already had one good effect—it has precipitated the conflict between the state and the church. The provisional government have issued a decree declaring all religious sects equal in the eye of the law, and have virtually suspended diplomatic relations with the Court of Rome.

The success of Romanism in China is partly referable to the peculiarities of the Buddhist ceremonials. According to the journal of the Asiatic Society (vol. xvi., p. 263,) Buddhism had already familiarized the mind of John Chinaman with the use of "the cross, the miter, the dalmatic, the hood, the office of two choirs, the psalmody, the exorcisms, the censer of five chains, the rosary, the celibacy of the clergy, spiritual retirement, the worship of saints, fasts, processions, litanies, holy water, and the benediction of the priest by placing his right hand on the head of the faithful."

The Meridian Mercury, on the authority of President Murdoch, contradicts the rumor that arrangements have been made by which the Illinois Central secures the control of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Propagation by Cuttings.—The best way to propagate all the common kinds of bedding plants is to take a frame or hand-glass and set it on a bed of very sandy soil, made in a shady place in the open air. The sand should be fine and sharp, and there is, perhaps, nothing better than river sand for this purpose. The glass may be whitewashed on the inside, so as to afford additional security against injury from the sun's rays. Into this bed of sand, cuttings of half ripened wood of the desirable plants may be set, and after putting in, slightly watered. Even very rare plants often do better this way than when under treatment in a regular propagating house. In making cuttings, it is best to cut the shoots just under a bud—they root better, and are not so likely to rot off and decay. A cutting of about three eyes is long enough for most strong-growing things, such as geraniums, fuchsias, etc. Small growing things of course will take more buds to the one cutting. They should be inserted about one-third of their way under the sand, which latter should be pressed firmly against the row of cuttings with a flat piece of board—not, however, hard enough to force the particles of sand into the young and tender bark, which is often the first step to decay. For a few cuttings, they may be inserted with a dibble; but where many are to be put in, it saves time to mark a line on the sand with a rule or straight edge, and then out down a face into the sand say one or two inches deep, when the cuttings can be set against the face like box-edging. All amateurs should practice the art of propagating plants. There is nothing connected with gardening more interesting.

How an Alabama Planter Saved his Cotton.—An intelligent planter of Alabama entirely escaped the ravages of the caterpillar last year, although it destroyed the cotton upon every other plantation in his county. His crop was the finest he ever raised. The caterpillar came up to the fields of all his next door neighbors, but they did not cross his fences. The reason for this was he issued the sternest orders that not a single bird, except the jay, should be killed on his plantation under any pretext whatever. He allowed little willow groves to grow in his fields, and to them he sent a sack of oats every morning, which were scattered upon the ground. The birds fed upon the oats, and swarmed in thousands around his fields. They exterminated the cotton fly. And hence there were no eggs; there were no caterpillars; there were no larvæ; but there was a blooming garden in the midst of a blighted wilderness.—There is no evil without its remedy; there is no disease without a cure.

We know of no species of bird which ought to be killed off, except the common jay. They are deadly enemies, and the common murderers of almost every species of the feathered tribe. They rob nests, suck the eggs, rob them of the young and eat them. These ornithological cannibals should be killed out for this reason.

What a Bird can Eat.—We believe it is a well known and a well established fact that the egg of the caterpillar is laid by a fly, which hatches out the larvæ, and that in a few hours this insect gains sufficient strength to destroy cotton. To prevent the insect we must kill the fly. This can be done by cultivating birds around our plantations. One single bird will eat hundreds in the course of a single day. A friend writes us that he had a pet mocking bird which attracted his attention by his ravenous appetite. In order to test its capacity, he placed worms twice its weight before it one day, and before night the last one of them had been swallowed.

The Woodpecker.—We have seen planters killing the woodpecker for sport. They are regarded as a nuisance, because they peck holes in the shuck, and are charged with eating young corn. But in this last particular injustice is done them. If you will go to every ear they have pecked, and examine closely, you will find that a worm has been there eating the corn, but it is not there then because the woodpecker has taken it off the ear and swallowed it. Instead of eating your corn it will protect it from the worm.—He is, therefore, your friend and not your enemy, and you should not kill him.

It is reported in Madrid that the Spanish constitutional Cortes, soon to assemble, will establish a directory to govern the country until a successor to the throne can be selected. A large deputation of citizens waited on the ministry on Sunday, and urged the absolute separation of church and state. The populace gathered in front of the ministerial palace, and clamored loudly for religious liberty.

To Subscribers.—Any person wishing to subscribe for this paper can do so by paying the Methodist preacher in the circuit, and forwarding to us his receipt for three dollars, with the address of the subscriber upon it, stating Post office, State, Circuit, and Conference. The receipt ought to be taken in duplicate.

N. B.—Agents are requested, wherever practicable, to invest and remit funds in a Post Office Order, DRAFT, or by express. If this cannot be done, REGISTER the letter at our expense.

When money is forwarded in either of the above methods we will be responsible for it, but not otherwise.

NOTICE TO PREACHERS.

Those preachers whose post offices are to be changed, will please notify this office, as soon as convenient, of the change to be made—being particular in giving the post office from which and that to which the change is to be made.

THE GENERAL MINUTES.

The publication of the general minutes, which we are waiting for patiently—the materials of which, we suppose, Dr. Summers is waiting for impatiently—will afford to some of our church arithmeticians a field for calculation, which we hope they will narrowly explore. One of these wholesome but humiliating analyses will be given in next week's ADVOCATE. We have long been aware of the fact that there are many Methodists whose greatest development consists in the art of getting out of the way of the stewards; and so of some societies and whole circuits—they have learned the art of bearing a very small part of the burdens of the marching hosts of Israel. These tables will enable one to sample very correctly such memberships, and to measure the exact staple of their piety. We may then compare their gifts with their graces, and see whether the work of the Holy Spirit is in any degree affected by sacrifices of thanksgiving.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

TOTAL STATISTICS OF MEMBERSHIP FOR THE YEAR 1867.

VERNON, Miss., Feb. 23, 1869.

MR. EDITOR: According to your request, I herewith give you the statistical totals of membership for 1867.

DISTRICTS.	White members.	Colored members.	Local preachers.	Local deacons.	Local elders.
Natchez	989	528	2	....	....
Vicksburg	1238	556	4	2	5
Jackson	822	231	3	....	2
Yazoo	1974	843	11	2	5
Greenville	132	53	1	....	....
Starkville	2900	787	29	3	7
Brandon	1794	52	8	6	8
Paulding	1270	151	7	2	5
Brookhaven	2295	641	3	8	9
Arcola	1268	252	3	6	6
Grand total	14681	4074	69	28	47

There are several mistakes in the printed minutes of 1868. The most important in the statistics is the total of Natchez district, which should be 1,455 white members, instead of 1,955. It is printed correctly in the recapitulation.

OUR MISSIONARIES IN CHINA.

We wish that every Southern Methodist could be persuaded to thoroughly read the letter which we subjoin from one of our brethren in China. We find it in the Memphis Christian Advocate. We can hardly imagine a Southern soul so dead as to be insensible to the spirit and pluck, not to say the zeal and ability, of these men of God. What godly man or woman is there within the bounds of these four southwestern Conferences—what have we to do with those that are without?—who will not mentally vow to him "who became poor for our sakes" an offering—to be laid upon the altar in China! Shall not these men be aided? Is there a man in the church dare hold up his head and say, no? What then is the matter? Our very children stand ready to respond to the cry of myriads for the bread of life. The Sunday schools alone would take up this noble task and accomplish it. "We are perplexed beyond measure at the attitude our church takes toward the China mission. * * * I came to China 'by faith,' and for the last four or five years have had little else to sustain me."—Read that, all ye Methodists that have only $50,000 left, and imagine that you are about to starve to death; read it, all you who are in the possession of Bibles, churches, houses, "food and raiment," and every other blessing of heaven; read it and then get ready to meet it at the bar of Christ: "I was an hungered and ye gave me no meat."

Our representatives in that vast field have not only zeal, but a scholarship we ought to be proud of, and which must exert a great influence upon the learning of the church at home. The missionary enterprise is worthy of the first consideration for this if for no other reason; it must stand really and practically at the head of the most advanced movement of civilization. The missionary goes before the trader and the mere scientific naturalist; he reduces the language of a people to intelligible form, and he furnishes the key to it; what he does, from the impulse of love that he may spread the rays of divine light, becomes the source of a thousand indirect benefits. We suppose there is scarcely an exception to this law during the last two thousand years. Missionaries have first furnished to the political world the interpreters, the grammars and the dictionaries by which it has been enabled to have intercourse with barbarous nations and remote tribes. We urge this intellectual side of this great cause upon the young men of our colleges and high academies, and upon the young ladies in our female institutions of learning.—Let them, for the sake of letters and the Saviour, form college foreign missionary societies, and see if they cannot sustain these noble young men that are representing us in the "Flowery Kingdom." We will publish the proceedings and officers of any such organizations. Let them have annual meetings and addresses, in which real information shall be presented to the public, and the greatness of this holy crusade shall be set forth. How much such a real object would call forth the intelligence and elevate the spirit of our young men; how much better than the pointless purpose of many of the college societies. The colleges, the academies and the Sabbath schools for China—that is the idea; we commend it to our bishops, our college presidents, and our presiding elders. Cannot the young people support this grand heroic movement of the church? We believe they can.—Form a society, young people, and write directly to the missionary secretary at Abingdon, Virginia, and to the missionaries themselves at Shanghai, China; put a couple of three cent stamps on the letter, and say via San Francisco, and it will go through.

CHINA MISSION.

I have just received an interesting private letter from Rev. Y. J. Allen, of our China mission. The letter is too long for insertion in your paper, or I would ask you to publish it. I will copy a few paragraphs, from which you will see how the signs of promise are regarded by those in the field. Alas! that the church should be so "slow of heart to believe," and so tardy in responding to the "Macedonian cry" which now comes up from every heathen nation! Brother Allen says:
